So the motion to adjourn was not agreed to.

During the roll-call, the following announcements were made:

Mr. HENDEE. My colleague, Mr. JOYCE, is absent in New York upon the business of the House, being in service on a subcommittee appointed by one of the standing committees.

Mr. CABELL. My colleague, Mr. TUCKER, is absent by leave of the House. If here he would vote "no."

The result of the vote was announced as above stated.

Mr. BANNING. I now withdraw the motion to recommit.

Mr. MACDOUGALL. Pending that, I rise to a privileged motion.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It will be in order for the gentleman to rise to a privileged motion when the Chair has heard the motion which the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BANNING] desires to make.

Mr. BANNING. I withdraw the motion to recommit.

Mr. HURLBUT. I raise the question of order whether, the previous question operating as it does both on the motion to recommit and on the bill, the gentleman has authority to withdraw the motion.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Unless by consent of the House it cannot be withdrawn. Does the gentleman object?

Mr. HURLBUT. I do.

Mr. BANNING. I wanted to give the gentleman that opportunity.

Mr. HURLBUT. I am very much obliged; it gives me a new point.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from New York [Mr. MACDOUGALL] will now state his privileged motion.

Mr. MACDOUGALL. I move that when the House adjourns to-day it be to meet at eleven o'clock on next Wednesday morning; and on that motion I call for the yeas and nays.

Mr. LAWRENCE. We had better meet on Monday morning.

Mr. WILLIAMS, of Indiana. I move to amend the motion so as to meet on Monday, at twelve o'clock.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That is the effect of a motion to adjourn. The amendment is not in order. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from New York, [Mr. MACDOUGALL,] that when the House adjourns to-day it adjourn until Wednesday next, at eleven o'clock.

Mr. COX. I rise to a point of order. I submit that the House cannot meet at eleven o'clock without a suspension of the rules, which is not in order on this day.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The point of order is well taken.

Mr. COX. I now move that the House adjourn.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That motion is in order, as business has intervened since the last motion to adjourn was negatived.

The motion was agreed to; and accordingly (at three o'clock and forty-five minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

PETITIONS, ETC.

The following memorials, petitions, and other papers were presented at the Clerk's desk under the rule, and referred as stated:

By Mr. BANNING: A letter from Mills Dean, calling attention to the letter of John Denberry, sheriff of Spartanburgh County, South Carolina, and also the notes of the coroner of said county, relative to the murder of Henry B. Hall, of Spartanburgh County, South Carolina, on the 22d of February, 1876, by United States soldiers, and the refusal of the military to deliver to the civil authorities the soldiers charged with having committed the murder, to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. BASS: Remonstrance of 150 citizens of Buffalo, New York, against the passage of the Morrison tariff bill, to the Committee of Ways and Means.

By Mr. BLAND: A paper relating to the establishment of a post-route from Koltstown, Osage County, to Dixon, Pulaski County, Missouri, to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

By Mr. FAULKNER: The petition of John H. King, of Washington County, Maryland, for compensation for property destroyed by United States troops, to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, a paper relating to the establishment of a post-route from Webster Court House to Middleport, Webster County, West Virginia, to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

Also, a petition of 35 citizens of Webster and Braxton Counties, West Virginia, for the establishment of a post-route from Webster Court House to Middleport, to the same committee.

By Mr. HARTRIDGE: The petition of manufacturers and dealers in distilled spirits in the city of Savannah, Georgia, for the definition of the powers and duties of officers of internal revenue and to further provide for the collection of the tax on distilled spirits, to the Committee of Ways and Means.

By Mr. HOUSE: The petition of Mary de Zeralos, for compensation for pasturage and forage furnished for the use of horses belonging to the United States Army, to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. HUNTON: The petition of John Heater, for compensation for property taken from an island farm in the Potomac River, to the same committee.

By Mr. SPRINGER: Memorial of Dr. B. M. Griffith and other physicians of Springfield, Illinois, protesting against the passage of a bill to incorporate the National Surgical Institute of the District of Columbia, to the Committee for the District of Columbia.

By Mr. LAWRENCE: Petitions for the acknowledgment of God and Christianity in the Constitution of the United States, signed by 3,655 persons living in the States of Indiana, Illinois, and Michigan, to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. THROCKMORTON: Memorial of citizens of Clay County, Texas, protesting against changing the mail-route between Fort Sill, Indian Territory, and Jacksborough, Texas, from its present line, to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

Also, the petition of citizens of Clay County, Texas, of similar import, to the same committee.

By Mr. WALDRON: The petition of Sarah Lombard, widow of William Lombard, deceased, late of Company C, Forty-third Regiment New York Volunteers, for a pension, to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

IN SENATE.

MONDAY, May 29, 1876.

The Senate met at ten o'clock a. m.

The Journal of the proceedings of Saturday last was read and approved.

IMPEACHMENT OF W. W. BELKNAP.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no petitions, pursuant to order, legislative and executive business will be suspended and the Senate will proceed to the consideration of the articles of impeachment exhibited by the House of Representatives against William W. Belknap, late Secretary of War. The Sergeant-at-Arms will clear the galleries and close the doors.

The doors having been closed, the usual proclamation was made by the Sergeant-at-Arms.

The Senate then proceeded to the trial of the impeachment of William W. Belknap, late Secretary of War.

The Senate sitting for the trial of the impeachment of William W. Belknap having adjourned then resumed its LEGISLATIVE SESSION.

The Senate resumed its legislative session.

DECORATION DAY.

Mr. LOGAN submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That when the Senate adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet on Wednesday next at twelve o'clock m., so that those who desire to do so may have an opportunity to attend the decoration of soldiers' graves at Arlington on Tuesday, the 30th instant.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

On motion of Mr. PADDOCK, the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After ten minutes spent in executive session the doors were re-opened, and (at nine o'clock and thirty-five minutes p. m.,) the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

MONDAY, May 29, 1876.

The House met at twelve o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. I. L. TOWNSEND.

The Journal of Saturday last was read and approved.

CORRECTION.

Mr. SAMPSON. Mr. Speaker, I see there is a mistake in the RECORD on the question of adjourning over from Saturday to Wednesday—I am recorded as not voting; I was present and voted in the negative.

The SPEAKER. The correction will be made accordingly.

ADJOURNMENT OVER.

Mr. MORRISON. I move that when the House adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet on Wednesday next.

The motion was agreed to.

ENROLLED BILLS.

Mr. HARRIS, of Georgia, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The second call of States during the morning hour of Monday is for resolutions, at which time bills on leave may be introduced. Resolutions offered on this call and giving rise to debate must lie over for discussion. Upon this call a resolution, which will be read by the Clerk, was offered by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. THROCKMORTON] on the 27th of January, and now comes up as unfinished business.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Postmaster-General be respectfully requested to furnish the House of Representatives with a statement showing the amount due contractors for carrying the United States mails in Southern States at the beginning of the civil war, and which has not been paid in consequence of such contractors being unable to take the oath required by law.

Mr. GARFIELD. I rise to inquire of the Chair on what day of the week this resolution was offered?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. On Monday during this call.

Mr. GARFIELD. I think it was on Thursday.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. If so, it is not in order as unfinished business.

Mr. GARFIELD. I reserve the point of order until the fact is ascertained.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk states that the resolution was offered on a Thursday. Therefore it is not properly on the Calendar, and does not now come up. The regular order is the call of States for resolutions, beginning with the State of Maine.

TARIFF.

Mr. ADAMS. I offer the following resolution, on which I demand the previous question:

Whereas the fact is apparent that all branches of manufacturing, mechanical, and mining pursuits are at this time greatly depressed, and that all legislation which tends to embarrassment by the unsettling of values or the rendering of manufacturing, mechanical, or mining operations uncertain is unwise and injudicious: Therefore,

Resolved, That in the judgment of this House legislation affecting the tariff is at this time inexpedient.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered.

Mr. MORRISON. Is it in order to debate this resolution?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It is not. The main question has been ordered.

Mr. MORRISON. I move then to reconsider the vote by which the main question was ordered.

The question being taken, there were—ayes 83, noes 75.

Mr. TOWNSEND, of New York, and Mr. ADAMS called for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. If the House should now refuse to reconsider the vote by which the main question was ordered and if the resolution should come up today to be voted on, would it be divisible or would we have to vote upon it as a whole?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair would decide the point at the proper time when the question comes up. The Clerk will now call the roll on the motion to reconsider the vote by which the main question was ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—ayes 120, noes 94, not voting 75; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Ainsworth, Anderson, Ashe, Atkins, Bagby, John H. Bagley, jr., Banning, Bland, Blount, Boone, Bradford, Bright, John Young Brown, Buckner, Horatio C. Burchard, Samuel D. Williams, Wilshire, Benjamin Wilson, Alan Wood, jr., and Woodburn—75.

So the motion to reconsider the vote by which the main question was ordered was agreed to.

During the roll-call, the following announcements were made:

Mr. ASHE. My colleagues, Mr. WADDELL and Mr. DAVIS, are absent by leave of the House.

Mr. JENKS. My colleague, Mr. COCHRANE, is absent by leave of the House.

Mr. SCALES. My colleague from North Carolina, Mr. ROBBINS, is absent by leave of the House.

Mr. HUNTON. I desire to state that my colleague, Mr. TUCKER, is absent on leave, and is paired with Mr. FOSTER, of Ohio. My colleague, if present, would vote "ay" and Mr. FOSTER would vote "no."

Mr. DURAND. I am paired with my colleague, Mr. CONGER, who is now absent by order of the House.

Mr. CANDLER. My colleague from Georgia, Mr. HARRIS, is absent by order of the House.

Mr. VAN VORHES. My colleague from Ohio, Mr. VANCE, is absent by order of the House; and I am paired with him upon all political questions, and this appears to be a question of that nature. If he were here, I would vote "no."

Mr. DENISON. My colleague, Mr. JOYCE, is absent by leave of the House on committee duty.

Mr. WALDRON. I am paired with my colleague, Mr. A. S. WILLIAMS. If he were present, he would vote "ay," and I should vote "no."

Mr. BRADLEY. My colleague, Mr. W. B. WILLIAMS, is absent by leave of the House. If present, he would vote "no."

Mr. FORT. My colleague, Mr. STEVENSON, is absent on business of the House.

Mr. PAGE. The gentleman from Nevada, Mr. WOODBURN, is absent by order of the House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The vote ordering the main question having been reconsidered, the resolution is divested of the operation of the previous question.

Mr. MORRISON. I rise to debate the resolution.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. WALKER, of Virginia, obtained the floor, and yielded to Mr. BANNING.

Mr. PAGE. I raise the point whether on Monday one gentleman can be recognized and yield to another in this way.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. WALKER] has the floor, and has yielded to the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. BANNING.]

Mr. PAGE. Can that be done?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It has been done.

Mr. PAGE. But on Monday, after the morning hour, it is in order to move to suspend the rules; and I want to know whether a gentleman can obtain the floor in this way and yield it as often as he pleases.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. For all that the Chair knows, the gentleman may have risen upon a motion to suspend the rules.

Mr. BANNING. The gentleman will not object to my proposition when he hears it. I ask that the unfinished business of last Saturday, the Army bill, may go over until next Wednesday.

There being no objection, it was ordered accordingly.

PUBLIC LANDS FOR EDUCATIONAL PURPOSES.

Mr. WALKER, of Virginia. I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 748) to apply the proceeds of sales of public lands to the education of the people.

The motion was agreed to; there being—ayes 135, noes 28.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, (Mr. HOSKINS in the chair,) and proceeded to the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 748) to apply the proceeds of sales of public lands to the education of the people.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the net proceeds of sales of public lands are hereby forever consecrated and set apart for the education of the people: Provided, That this act shall not have any effect to repeal, impair, or suspend any law now authorizing the pre-emption of public lands or the entry of public lands for homesteads, nor as limiting in any manner the power of Congress to alter or extend the right of homestead upon such lands: And provided further, That nothing contained in this section shall be held to limit or abridge the power of Congress over the public domain or interfere with granting bounty lands.

SEC. 2. That the Secretary of the Interior shall cause an account to be taken upon the close of each fiscal year, and ascertain the total receipts from the sale or other disposition of the public lands of the United States, including all fees received at the general and district land offices during such year and the amount of expenditures during said year incurred or occasioned by the survey, sale, location, entry, or other disposition of such lands, including appropriations for the expenses of the said officers for said year, and shall certify to the Secretary of the Treasury the amount of the net cash proceeds from the sale, entry, location, or other disposition of such lands as aforesaid, after deducting such expenses and expenditures.

SEC. 3. That upon the receipt of such certificate the Secretary of the Treasury shall, on or before the 31st day of July of each year, apportion to the several States and Territories and to the District of Columbia, upon the basis of population of the said States and Territories between the ages of five and twenty-one years, the net proceeds of sales of public lands for the previous year: Provided, That after five years one-half of said net proceeds, and after ten years the whole of the same, shall be set apart as an educational fund, which said fund shall be invested in the bonds of the United States bearing a rate of interest not less than 4 per cent. per annum, both principal and interest payable in coin, the interest on such educational fund only to be appropriated as above provided: And provided further, That for the first ten years the distribution or said net proceeds and the interest on said fund to and among the several States, Territories, and District of Columbia shall be made according to the numbers of their respective population, of ten years old and upward, who cannot read and write, as shown from time to time by the last preceding published census of the United States.

SEC. 4. That the first apportionment under this act shall be made on or before the 31st day of July, 1876; and each of said States and Territories shall be entitled to receive its distributive share of each apportionment, to be paid by the Secretary of the Treasury to its treasurer or other officer authorized by its law to receive the same, whenever thereafter it shall file with the Secretary of the Treasury a certified copy of the law of such State or Territory accepting the provisions of this act and undertaking that the funds provided by the same, whenever paid over to it as above provided, shall be faithfully applied to the free education of all its children between the ages of six and sixteen years. The distributive share of the District of Columbia shall from time to time be paid over to the commission of said District created by act of Congress approved June 20, 1874, entitled "An act for the government of the District of Columbia, and for other purposes," or other officer or officers provided by law, and shall be applied in the same manner as above provided for the States and Territories.

SEC. 5. That, to entitle any State, Territory, or the District of Columbia to the benefits of this act, it shall maintain for at least three months in each year a system of free public schools for all the children within its limits between the ages of six and sixteen, and shall, through the proper officer thereof, for the year ending the 30th day of June last preceding such apportionment, make full report of the number of public free schools, the number of teachers employed, the number of school-houses owned and the number of school-houses hired, the total number of children taught during the year, the actual daily attendance, and the actual number of months of the year schools have been maintained in each of the several school districts or divisions of said State, Territory, or District, and the amounts appropriated by the Legislature or otherwise received for the purpose of maintaining a system of free public schools. And if any State or Territory shall misapply, or allow to be misapplied or in any manner appropriated or used other than for the purposes herein required, the funds, or any part thereof, received under the provisions of this act, or shall fail to comply with the conditions herein prescribed, or to report, as herein provided, through its proper officers, the disposition thereof, such State or Territory shall forfeit its right to any subsequent apportionment by virtue hereof, until the full amount so misapplied, lo st, or misappropriated shall have been replaced by such State or Territory, and applied as herein required, and until such report shall have been made; and all apportio nments so forfeited and withheld shall be added to, and become part of, the principal of the educational fund hereby created.

SEC. 6. That nothing contained in this act shall be so construed as to affect in any manner the existing laws and regulations in regard to the adjustment and payment to States of the percentage of the net proceeds of the sales of the public lands within their respective limits as provided in section 3689 of the Revised Statutes of the United States.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will now report the amendment of the Committee on Education and Labor.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out the words in the first line of the bill "of sales," and after the word "of" insert "the;" so it will read: "That the net proceeds of the public lands," &c.

Mr. WALKER, of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, although the bill has been read, yet possibly, to make it more clearly understood, I had better restate substantially its provisions.

The provisions of the bill before the House are plain and explicit. The great object to be accomplished is clearly stated and the means for its attainment succinctly set forth. Its object is the consecration of the revenue derived from the public lands to the education of the whole people. At the close of each fiscal year the Secretary of the Interior is directed to certify the net amount of the proceeds of the public lands for that year to the Secretary of the Treasury, who shall within one month thereafter apportion the same among the several States and Territories and the District of Columbia on the basis of population, to be applied by the local authorities of such States, Territories, and District, in accordance with their local laws, to the education of all the inhabitants thereof between the ages of five and sixteen years. For the first five years the whole amount of such net proceeds is to be thus apportioned; for the succeeding five years, one-half the other half, and after ten years the whole amount, to be invested in United States bonds, only the interest on which shall be thus apportioned; and the investments thus made to remain as a perpetual fund for the benefit of free education throughout our entire country. During the first ten years the apportionments are to be made on the basis of illiteracy, but forever afterward on that of the whole population. While the bill leaves it optional with each State to accept or reject its distributive share, yet when once accepted it must be faithfully and honestly applied to the purposes therein indicated under the penalty of forfeiting all right to any other apportionments until full compliance be made with the conditions prescribed. No interference with the existing laws for the disposition of the public lands is contemplated, and the percentages reserved to certain States remain undisturbed. These are substantially the main provisions of the bill under consideration, and I trust they may meet with the cordial approbation of every member of this House. No patent is claimed for them as for an original discovery, for the principal ideas involved have been brought to the attention of Congress and the country at different times and in various forms during almost the entire period of our national existence.

While with consummate wisdom and foresight the fathers laid the foundations of the Republic upon the broad and enduring principles of civil and religious liberty, they also fully comprehended the truth that the perpetuity of the superstructure they reared depended "upon the virtue and intelligence of the people." Amid the throes of the Revolution, and while freedom yet hung tremblingly in the balance, a committee of the Virginia Legislature, composed of Thomas Jefferson, Edmund Pendleton, and George Wythe, reported a bill to establish "a complete public free-school system to be supported by taxation." A few years later, in the justly celebrated ordinance of 1787, the National Government declared that—

Religion, morality, and knowledge being necessary to good government and the happiness of mankind, schools and other means of education shall forever be encouraged.

And two years earlier the Congress, in the ordinance for ascertaining the mode of disposing of the western lands belonging to the Government, expressly provided that—

There shall be reserved the lot No. 16 of every township for the maintenance of public schools within said township.

Thus early, in advance even of the formation of the Constitution, was inaugurated that profound and liberal policy which has been uniformly and unvaryingly pursued in the organization of new States from the public domain. Grants of public lands have also been made to some of the other States, and in 1862 there was apportioned to all the States an amount equal to thirty thousand acres for each of their Senators and Representatives respectively in Congress, for the purpose of establishing agricultural and mechanical colleges. In fact, more than forty-seven different acts of Congress appropriating nearly eighty millions of acres of the public lands for educational purposes not only attest the wisdom and uniform liberality of the people, as expressed through their governmental agents, but also conclusively and forever silences all question as to the constitutional power of Congress in the premises.

"The Congress shall have power to dispose of and make all needful rules and regulations respecting the territory or other property belonging to the United States," is the language of the Federal Constitution, and it would seem to be sufficiently clear and comprehensive to warrant the action proposed by the bill under consideration, without resort even to contemporaneous and subsequent uniform construction.

Considering then, sir, the constitutionality of the bill before the House to be undoubted, the next question which naturally arises is as to the equity and justice of the action contemplated. Upon this point I apprehend that no two opinions can be entertained. Whence came our vast public domain, and upon what conditions? Under what circumstances was it acquired, or with whose treasure was it purchased? Let it be remembered at the outset that when this nation was born it was as destitute of public domain as other infants are of raiment, and that all the vast possessions of the Government were of subsequent acquisition. These acquisitions were either the voluntary cessions of the States, purchases by the nation with the national treasure, or conquests by the national forces. First in date, as well as in importance, came the cessions by the several States claiming large western possessions by virtue of royal grant or individual conquest. These cessions were made at the solicitation of the Federal Government and for two purposes, first, to strengthen the waning credit of the United States, and, second, to quiet the discontent of those States which possessed no western territory and which rightly asserted that if these possessions were preserved to the States claiming them it would only be by the blood and treasure of all the States, and that therefore the same should be constituted a fund for the benefit of all the States. September 6, 1780, Congress by resolution invited the States to "a liberal surrender of their territorial claim" to the "western country," and on the 10th of October following, by resolution, pledged the United States to dispose of such lands as might be surrendered by the States "for the common benefit of the United States." Prior to this time, and in March, 1780, New York, by an act of the Legislature, tendered to the United States her claims to the "western territory," and a year later actually executed a deed of cession. Virginia responded to the appeal of the United States on March 1, 1783, and in 1785, 1786, 1787, and 1789, Massachusetts, Connecticut, South Carolina, and North Carolina respectively followed, and Georgia in 1802. The grant of Georgia completed the title of the United States to all those lands generally called public lands lying within the original limits of the confederacy.

Sir, when we contemplate these noble acts of unselfish patriotism, without a parallel in history, these surrenders of mighty empires for the public good and the preservation of domestic concord among the States of the Union, how much stronger must become our purpose to faithfully execute the sacred trusts committed to our care! These magnificent grants to the Federal Government were made in nearly every instance in trust for the use and benefit of all the States of the Union. The grant of Virginia, by far the most important of all, out of which has been carved five magnificent States, every one of which has outstripped the mother State in wealth and prosperity, contained this provision:

That all the lands within the territory so ceded to the United States and not reserved for or appropriated to any of the before-mentioned purposes, or disposed of in bounties to the officers and soldiers of the American Army, shall be considered as a common fund for the use and benefit of such of the United States as have become, or shall become, members of the confederation or Federal alliances of the said States, Virginia inclusive, according to their usual respective proportions in the general charge and expenditure, and shall be faithfully and bona fide disposed of for that purpose, and for no other use or purpose whatsoever.

The act of cession of New York provided that the lands ceded were to be held—

To and for the only use and benefit of such of the States as are or shall become parties to the Articles of Confederation.

That of Georgia, in 1802, provided that after satisfying certain claims—

All the lands ceded by this agreement to the United States shall * * * be considered as a common fund for the use and benefit of the United States, Georgia included, and shall be faithfully disposed of for that purpose, and for no other use or purpose whatsoever.

By the acceptance of these cessions the United States became a trustee, bound by the moral as well as civil law to administer the trust thus created for the mutual and common benefit of all, not a part, of the States of the Union. A like trust was impliedly created in the acquisition of all the balance of the public domain possessed by the United States. Whose, but the common treasure of the people of the whole Union was used in paying the $15,000,000 for the Louisiana purchase in 1802 and the $5,000,000 for the Florida purchase in 1819? And in the acquisitions of New Mexico, Arizona, and California, whose, but the $25,000,000 of the common treasure of the whole people was expended, and who but the soldiers of the whole Union were by the Mexicans "welcomed with bloody hands to hospitable graves?" Whence, but from the pockets of the whole people came the $7,200,000 wasted upon the rocky hills and eternally-snow-crowned mountains of Alaska?

Sir, this Government has never owned a foot of soil that she did not hold for the common use and benefit of all her people. And how has this trust been administered? Has equal and exact justice been meted out to all the members of the Union? Has each received its just and equal proportion of this common fund of all or of the benefits flowing therefrom? In fact, until 1862, has one of the original grantors or one of the original thirteen States received one particle of direct benefit from this great trust fund in accordance with the trust, except generally, from the amounts paid into the Federal Treasury? Yet nearly eighty millions of acres have been given to the new States and Territories for educational purposes and 222,469,337 acres to railroads and for other purposes within the same limits. Really the enormous amount of 301,796,139 acres of the public domain, the common treasure of the whole Union, has been disposed of in violation of the nation's trust.

But, sir, I am not here to sing jeremiads over the past, nor yet to harshly criticise the action of Congress in making donations of the public lands to the new States and Territories for educational purposes. The grand results which these donations have enabled the new States to achieve in the cause of education, the magnificent systems of public schools which most of them have thus been enabled to establish, palliate at least, if they do not entirely excuse, the wrong done the older States. Congress did right in making these donations, and its only error consisted in its failure to make equally liberal provision for the older States. This injustice, however, has not been suffered to pass unnoticed. Repeated efforts to have this equity of the older States suitably recognized have from time to time been made, and these efforts will continue to be made until justice shall finally triumph.

As early as 1823 Mr. White, of Kentucky, introduced in this House a resolution instructing the Committee of Ways and Means to inquire into the propriety of setting apart a portion of the revenue derived from the public lands as a permanent fund, the interest upon which "shall be distributed for the promotion of education to the several States according to the principles of equal right and justice," and in the following year Mr. Strong, of New York, introduced a resolution providing for the appropriation of all moneys received from the sales and entries of public lands "to the support of common schools and the construction of roads and canals." In 1832 Henry Clay, of Kentucky, from the Committee on Manufactures of the Senate, reported a bill to appropriate the net proceeds of the public lands (after deducting certain percentages therein provided for to certain new States) to the several States to be applied by the Legislatures of the said States "to such objects of education, internal improvement, colonization, or re-imbursement of any existing debt contracted for internal improvement as the said Legislatures may severally designate and authorize." This bill was accompanied by an able report from the same committee and finally passed both Houses of Congress, but was vetoed by the President, chiefly for the reason that it did not provide for an equitable division among all the States. Six years later William Cost Johnson, of Maryland, proposed to the House of Representatives a resolution—

That a committee of one from each State be appointed by the Chair to inquire into the propriety of reporting a bill to apportion, for the purposes of free schools, academies, and the purposes of education, an increased portion of the public lands for the benefit of all the States and Territories.

He supported his resolution in an able speech.

In 1841 an act was passed, and approved by the Executive, entitled "An act to appropriate the proceeds of the sales of the public lands and to grant pre-emption rights." This law, among its other provisions, directed that, after payment of 10 per cent. of the amount received from sales within their respective limits to the new States named in its first section and the 5 per cent., theretofore—reserved to the same States—

The residue of net proceeds * * * of all the public lands of the United States, wherever situated, shall be divided among the twenty-six States of the Union and the District of Columbia and the Territories of Wisconsin, Iowa, and Florida, according to their respective Federal representative population as ascertained by the last census, to be applied by the Legislatures of the said States to such purposes as the said Legislatures may direct.

Here was a partial recognition of the equities of the older States, but even the continuance of this was made contingent upon the non-increase of "duties on imports." The contingency happened a year later, so that only two distributions were made, amounting in the aggregate to $661,354.53.

But not until 1862, amid the terrible agony of internecine war, was this undoubted equity of the older States fully and fairly recognized. While the law of 1862 making an appropriation of public lands for the establishment of agricultural and mechanical colleges enforced the principle for which I am contending, yet it falls far short of the necessities of the times and the unquestioned duty of the Government. It is limited in scope and partial in the benefits conferred. Those only who seek a technical education can derive any substantial aid from it, while in many instances the amount appropriated is too meager to afford the necessary facilities for even this limited instruction. What we need, and what we must have, is the appropriation of the entire proceeds of the public lands to the education of the whole people. Thus only can the Government best discharge its trusteeship of the public lands, and thus only can be conferred "the greatest good upon the greatest number."

To what higher, nobler, or more beneficial purpose could the public domain be devoted than the education, mental and moral elevation of the people? Are not the proceeds of the public lands the common heritage of all the people? Do they not in this respect constitute a peculiar and distinctive fund, differing widely from that received from tariffs and taxation, or any other source, in that they are derived from the common property of all the people instead of from that of the few?

Now, sir, having demonstrated, I trust satisfactorily, not only the constitutionality of this bill, but also that it is grounded upon unquestioned equity, an equity already fully recognized and never in fact denied, I now propose to briefly discuss the necessities which imperatively demand its passage. And, sir, I must confess that I enter upon this discussion with feelings of the profoundest regret. Yes; regret at the existence of terrible and inexorable facts, which have only to be known to fully demonstrate the necessities of our situation.

The census of 1870 disclosed a perfectly appalling amount of illiteracy in this country. About one-fifth of our population, or nearly 6,000,000 of our people over ten years of age, could neither read nor write. Of the 8,000,000 of voters who mold our institutions and control our social and political destinies, over 1,600,000 could not even read the ballots they cast. And of the 12,055,443 children of school-age, that is, between the ages of five and eighteen, 5,458,977, or nearly one-half, were growing up in the depths of ignorance, without any school advantages whatever. This is the fearful picture presented by the census of 1870. But a far better and to the ordinary mind a more comprehensible picture was prepared by the Superintendent of the Census, and I trust that every member of this House will take immediate occasion to examine it. It consists of a map of the United States so colored and shaded as to exhibit the relative degree of intelligence of every locality of our country. The higher state of intelligence is naturally illustrated by the lighter color, and this is gradually shaded off into the darkness of ignorance. Sir, there is too much color upon that map, too many intensely dark spots. Promptly pass this bill, however, and our next census will present a more radiant picture, with the darkness gradually but surely receding before the advancing light.

An examination of this map, as well as of the census tables of 1870, discloses the fact that the somber shading of illiteracy obtains at the South in a far greater degree than at the North. While this is readily explainable, and upon grounds which substantially free the South from the charge of neglect or want of appreciation of the inestimable benefits of education, yet the fact exists and cannot be ignored. During the four years of civil war and for several years thereafter, the educational institutions of the South were almost universally closed. While the war prevailed the young men were in the field, and the whole country was too unsettled for the maintenance, to any considerable extent of schools, and after the war poverty, interposed for years insuperable obstacles to educational pursuits. Added to this was the emancipation of the colored race, but few of which had ever enjoyed educational facilities. These people constituted over five-twelfths of the entire population of the eleven southern States in 1870; or, to be more accurate, of a total population of 9,487,386 the colored people numbered 3,939,032. This mass of ignorance was suddenly raised to the dignity and responsibility of citizenship, in the midst of their impoverished and largely bankrupt former owners, with no means of their own and without any provision whatever being made for their education. Of the wisdom, or rather unwisdom of this action, I had occasion some years ago to speak, and I repeat here what I then said as expressive of my present views:

> The war resulted in the emancipation of the negro; but no sooner had the sword been sheathed than the strife was transferred to the forum, and days and months, ay, even years, were spent in efforts to clothe the freedman with rights he could not understand and load him with responsibilities which he was unable to comprehend. Statute after statute was enacted, and the fundamental law of the nation itself repeatedly amended to establish the civil and political rights of the negro; but where in the long catalogue of legislation can be found any provision for his education and elevation even to a partial comprehension of the duties and responsibilities which these rights impose? Why did not the mental and moral necessities of these "wards of the nation" excite the same paternal solicitude as did their political condition? I shall not pause here, nor is it germane to my present purpose, to answer this very natural inquiry. The facts with which we have alone to deal at the present moment are that, although the negro was emancipated from physical slavery, he was left bound in the more terrible chains of universal ignorance; and that, while the nation invested him with the glorious rights and privileges of American citizenship, it not only failed to make any provision for investing him with a knowledge of the high duties and responsibilities which that citizenship imposes, but left him in the depths of poverty and ignorance, to be educated, if educated at all, by the white people of those States, whom the war had so utterly impoverished that they were unable to educate even themselves.
> That this was unwise, unjust, and impolitic, needs no words from me to demonstrate. In my opinion the Government should not only have provided the means for the education of these new suffragans, but it should have gone further, and aided the people of the South to fulfill this high and holy duty to themselves.
> "If it be true that one portion of the body-politic cannot suffer in its mental, moral, or physical condition without injury, more or less, to the whole, and if intelligence and virtue be necessary and desirable in the individual citizen of a republic, then the education of the whole people becomes a matter of public interest and national concern. I am, however, no advocate of a governmental system of education except by the States; but I do advocate the extension to all of the States the policy which has uniformly obtained in the organization of new States. The public lands are the common property of the whole people of the Union, held by it in trust for their benefit and behoof, and if there be reason and sound statesmanship in reserving a portion of this property for educational purposes in the sparsely populated but prosperous new States, do not the same reason and statesmanship in a far higher degree dictate the appropriation of a portion of this property to the education of the larger and poorer populations of the older States of the South?
> But I do not go to the length of urging even this very just and correct view of the subject, based though it may be upon the soundest and most substantial and patriotic reasoning. All I seek and all I demand is equality with all the other States of the Republic in this as in all other respects. I merely advocate the performance of what I believe to be a solemn and imperative duty of the Federal Government to the black race and to the people of the whole country, and that duty consists in appropriating the entire proceeds derived from the sales of the public lands to educational purposes.

Mr. MILLIKEN. To whom does the proper officer mentioned in the fifth section of the bill make his report?

Mr. WALKER, of Virginia. To the Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. MILLIKEN. Does not that report have to come directly to Congress, and does not that give Congress the right to direct and control this fund in the States?

Mr. WALKER, of Virginia. No, sir.

Mr. MILLIKEN. I cannot see it in any other light.

Mr. WALKER, of Virginia. If you will recollect, I stated the bill distinctly provides there shall be no interference by the Federal Government with the action of the State whatever. If the State fails to fulfill its duty, that is, fails to administer the fund donated to the State according to the terms and conditions of the bill, then it is provided she shall derive no further benefit from the provisions of the bill until she makes that good.

Mr. MILLIKEN. Tell me to whom that proper officer of the State is to make his report?

Mr. WALKER, of Virginia. The Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. MILLIKEN. The Secretary of the Treasury of the United States?

Mr. WALKER, of Virginia. Yes, sir.

Mr. MILLIKEN. The bill does not state it, but I take it for granted he must make report to Congress. In any event, to my mind, as the bill now appears before the House this must necessarily be subject to the legislation of Congress.

Mr. WALKER, of Virginia. Like any other act of Congress, it can be amended, modified, or repealed at the pleasure of Congress.

Mr. MILLIKEN. The gentleman admits it opens up the question to the legislation of Congress. Do you not then take the regulation of this matter from the States, and send Federal officers into every school district in every State of the Union?

Mr. WALKER, of Virginia. Not in the slightest degree. On the contrary, one of the special ideas in the framing of this bill was to avoid precisely that thing, and the only provision in the bill regarding that subject is merely to secure a proper application of the fund. No Federal officer has any right to interfere in any respect with the school systems of the States. If a State fails or declines to administer the fund according to the terms of the bill, then she is cut off from any further benefit until she makes that loss good.

I am aware, sir, that it may be urged that the basis upon which the apportionments are to be made under this bill for the first ten years is an invasion of that very equity the existence of which I have been endeavoring to establish, because of the fact that, there being a greater amount of illiteracy at the South than at the North, the Southern States will receive a larger proportion of the fund than the Northern. But suppose this in a measure to be true, is it not of the highest moment to place this fund where it is most needed and "where it will do the most good?" Can the new States, that have already been so richly endowed in violation of this equity, complain and will the wealthy Northern States of the original thirteen object? I apprehend not. All must admit that ignorance is such a curse, wherever existing in the country, that it becomes the common interest of all to utterly obliterate it. The disease which affects one portion of the body-politic casts its baleful influence over the whole.

The pressing need of the South to-day is for educational aid. She has not yet recuperated from the terrible devastations and losses of the war, and while most of the States have inaugurated and maintained good systems of free schools, and have largely reduced the sum total of illiteracy in their midst, yet their means are still too limited and the burdens too great for them to maintain their schools for a sufficient period in each year. They need assistance now. Educate the present generation, and those which succeed it will take care of themselves. Once lift the dark pall of ignorance which overshadows the land and the light of universal intelligence will never again be obscured. The history of education in this country shows that it has never turned backward. Its course has been uniformly upward and onward, constantly increasing in strength and expanding in beneficence. The constitution of the human mind itself is such that the acquisition of knowledge begets a thirst for more, and the cultivation and enlargement of its faculties urges it forward to new attainments and new conquests. Has not intelligence ever been the parent of prosperity and the handmaid of virtue? Does not all history teach that a people's productive power and force depends upon its degree of advancement in knowledge, and that crime everywhere recedes as education advances? A modern writer, thoroughly versed in all that appertains to the subject, declares that—

> Ignorance is a source of crime. It operates in various ways: first, to expose men to it and then to prepare them for it. The uncultivated mind is weakened by nonuse. For lack of ideas it is often left to the suggestions of the animal appetites, with their debasing and corrupting tendencies. In a land of books and schools ignorance is not consistent with self-respect and manliness. * * * Knowing how to read is two-thirds as favorable to honesty as not knowing.

But, sir, I will not detain the House with any further discussion of this branch of the subject, interesting though it be to me; nor is it necessary. The intelligent members of this honorable body stand in need of no arguments to demonstrate the absolute necessity for the education of all the people, who, in a Government like ours, are at once the subjects and the sovereigns, the creators of our institutions as well as the basis upon which they rest. If I shall be able to awaken them to renewed interest in the great cause of free education and to a more full and complete realization of their duties and responsibilities in this behalf, I shall have accomplished much that I desire and more perhaps than I had a right to anticipate. My own convictions upon this subject are so profound and my desire for success so intense that I trust if my zeal appear excessive it will be pardoned, though my discretion be not applauded.

In my judgment no subject of higher or more far-reaching importance has been or will be presented for the consideration of this House. Problems of tariff, taxation, and finance hold important positions in our governmental administration, while the discovery and punishment of frauds and maladministration are of very great moment; yet the education of the people would supersede the necessity of the latter, and render far easier the solution of the former. While the annual distributive share of each State of the proceeds of the public lands would not be large, yet the interest, zeal, and enthusiasm it would excite among the people in behalf of education, the encouragement it would hold out to struggling and impoverished communities would prove of such incalculable benefit as not to be measured by dollars and cents.

It is true that the best of our public domain has been disposed of, and the annual income therefrom considerably reduced. To educational purposes alone has been donated an empire nearly double in size that of the six New England States, while to internal improvements has been granted (though only about one-fourth has yet been patened) an acreage but twenty-three millions less than that of the original thirteen States, and yet we are still possessed of 1,154,471,762.79 acres. Much of this is worthless, but a vast amount is of fine quality. There is abundance to meet the requirements of this bill and leave a residue large enough for the establishment of a magnificent permanent educational fund for the benefit of our posterity for centuries to come. Why, at the average rate of sales during the past ten years, it will probably require fully seventy-five years to dispose of our public lands available for sale. The average annual net income from the public lands during the last decade has not been accurately ascertained, but it was probably not far from $1,500,000, and there can be no valid reason, all things considered, why it should not equal that sum during the next. Assuming that $1,500,000 will be the average annual net income, the distributive share of each State, Territory, and the District of Columbia for each year until the next census will be as follows:

Alabama	$101,534 56	Ohio	$45,907 02
Arkansas	35,347 50	Oregon	1,173 57
California	8,407 74	Pennsylvania	58,945 45

It will thus be seen that to the States most in need very considerable aid will be afforded. And who can doubt that it will conduce to greater efforts and higher aspirations for education among all the people.

Sir, we have heard much during our present session of the centennial of American Independence. Millions have been voted for a magnificent international exhibition in honor of the occasion. The nations of the earth are assembled within sound of that bell which rang out the peals of liberty one hundred years ago, to compete with us for the prizes of knowledge and progress. And why is all this? Why this enormous expense and these vast preparations? Is it to gratify our national pride and demonstrate our boasted superiority? Doubtless these had their influence, but I should be sorry to think that no higher, broader, and deeper purpose was involved. This exhibition will fail of its chief end if it do not minister greatly to the education of the people. Education comes not altogether from books. The life-like statuary and the beautiful picture, the mighty engine and the minutest handiwork, all—all are educators. Herein lies the justification for the great outlay of money, labor, and time necessitated by this centennial exhibition. But how few of all our people will directly receive the benefits of this education! How small a proportion of our 40,000,000 of people will visit the exhibition, and how few of those who do congregate there will possess the capacity to fully appreciate its beauties or comprehend its lessons! But a short time since we passed a bill donating a million and a half of the common treasure of these 40,000,000 of people to this institution for the few, and shall we now hesitate to pass this bill for the common benefit of the many? Could we at the close of this the first century of our national existence pay a higher tribute to the memories of those who amid blood and carnage laid the foundations of the Republic than by ingrafting upon our public policy a principle which will make future centennials possible?

About one hundred years ago the public lands were ceded to the nation to aid in the preservation of its plighted faith and domestic concord, but their mission in this behalf has been accomplished. Our public credit no longer requires their assistance, and the Union which their cession served to consummate no longer contains discordant States to be harmonized by their surrender. Another mission, however, awaits them, and that is to aid in the elevation of the people to a higher plane of mental and moral existence. It is our high privilege to inaugurate this exalted mission by the passage of this bill. Rejoicing in the triumphant close of the first century of the Republic, and standing upon the threshold of the second, with a country united and harmonized, "regenerated and disenthralled," let us celebrate the outgoing of the former and the incoming of the latter by a declaration unequaled in importance save by that which spoke the nation into existence on July 4, 1776.

Mr. Chairman, in my remarks to-day I have used the words nation and republic, nationality and people indiscriminately, or as convertible terms. Although often so used, it is manifestly erroneous. A people are not necessarily a nation, nor a nation a republic, and all three may exist without nationality. By virtue of the Constitution, the American people constitute a republic, and for the purposes of administration, as well as in outward form, the republic is a nation; but nationality springs from other causes. Our Constitution, with all of its fifteen amendments, never has and never will make us a nation in the full sense of that term. That instrument is but the "sovereign law, the States' collected will."

What constitutes a state?
Not high-rais'd battlement, or labor'd mound,
Thick wall, or moated gate;
Not cities proud, with spires and turrets crown'd;
Not bays and broad arm'd ports,
Where, laughing at the storm, proud navies ride;
Nor starr'd and spangled courts,
Where low-brow'd baseness wafts perfume to pride!
No! men, high-minded men,
With powers as far above dull brutes endued,
In forest, brake, or den,
As beasts excel cold rocks and brambles rude:
Men, who their duties know,
But know their rights, and, knowing, dare maintain,
Prevent the long-aimed blow,
And crush the tyrant while they rend the chain—
These constitute the state.

Written constitutions, no matter how wisely framed, never yet made a nation. The real nation lies beyond and beneath these artificial crusts, and is the people. "These constitute the state." Did England become a nation by virtue of a written constitution? Has she indeed ever had any? No, sir. Her great fundamental law is yet unwritten, and, like the nationality of her people, is the outgrowth of centuries of progressive civilization. So will it be with our nationality. As in the physical kingdom, the processes of enduring development are slow and gradual. So in the realm of politics. Nationality is not the product of a day or generation, but rather the slow and steady growth of time and auxiliary causes. A nation without nationality is simply the form without the substance, the skeleton without the flesh and blood. We possess the form, but the development of the substance into completed fulness will be the work of generations of intelligent, educated freemen. Consider, too, that fully one-fourth of our voting population to-day are the offspring of other nationalities, differing widely from our ideal and from each other. The vast and manifold increment to our population, of which they are the index, it is to be hoped will increase in the future. But how is it to be molded and fashioned into and imbued with American nationality? What is the common solvent of all these various elements of our population? Is there any other save that great nursery of freemen, the free public school?

Sir, the fathers, with a wisdom amounting almost to prescience, formed our Government for perpetuity. They omitted no principle necessary to its preservation, and they included none which, properly administered, could work its destruction. The absorption of the powers and functions of the States by the Federal Government was as foreign to their design as the nullification or repudiation of the Federal authority by the individual action of the States, for the triumph of either involved the destruction of the Union. To insure the stability of that which they builded so well they early made provision for encouragement to the education of the people. They foresaw that ignorance was one of the gravest dangers that menaced the future of the Republic. They opened wide the doors to the "oppressed of all nations" and bade them welcome to the full enjoyment of American citizenship and the freedom of individual thought and action guaranteed by our laws, fundamental and statutory. How wisely and well they planned is attested by a century of national existence and by a development in wealth, population, and mental activity unexampled in the world's history.

But, sir, if we but fulfill the high duty devolved upon us, our past, however brilliant it may have been, will be excelled by a grander future. I confess to a strong and conscientious belief in what is styled "manifest destiny." It is manifest to my mind that the future destiny of this nation points unerringly to the gradual expansion of its limits until the entire continent shall have been embraced within its boundaries. And I believe that upon this same continent there is to be formed and molded a new, distinctive, well-defined, and grand American nationality. It is true that our country is peopled by all the numerous offshoots of the Caucasian race, differing widely in language, habits, and education; but time and concurring circumstances—above all popular education—will gradually melt together and mold these diverse elements into one united, harmonious, homogeneous people, surpassing all of the great peoples that have preceded them in their mental, moral, and physical development, and in the greatness and grandeur of their achievements. This is our country's manifest destiny. Let us here and now contribute our proportion to its development.

I do not intend to-day to move a vote on this bill. It is one of such importance that I desire its full and free discussion by all who wish to do so. After the discussion which shall take place to-day, I will move the committee rise, but I desire to notify members now that at an early day I shall call up the bill again and press it to a vote. I now yield to my colleague from Virginia, [Mr. CABELL.]

FINANCE AND TAXATION.

Mr. CABELL. Mr. Chairman, had a wise statesmanship directed the course of the republican party immediately succeeding the late civil conflict, the States of the South might readily have been rehabilitated, the scars of war removed, the people of the States lately in revolt conciliated, and a peace in fact, as well as in name, established. Such, however, was not the policy. Measures the most obnoxious, requirements the most unjust, impositions the most oppressive and intolerable, were inaugurated by the party in power for the so-called reconstruction of the Southern States. A policy so foreign to the genius of our institutions, so inimical to natural justice, could not fail of its legitimate consequences. Societies upturned, State governments destroyed, citizens despoiled of their liberty as well as their property, threatened the bankruptcy and ruin of Federal as well as State institutions.

Added to the miserable policy of reconstruction, the Federal Government labored under the evil effects of a financial policy inaugurated during a period of war, and for which upon the return of peace no remedy had been suggested, much less provided.

It became evident soon after the close of the war that there must be some contraction of the vast volume of currency which had been issued by the Government, and forthwith laws, imperfect in their character and insufficient in their details and extent to compass the ends in view, were passed. The result of the legislation by Congress for several years was of such character that many of the public creditors who had purchased the bonds of the Government in a vastly depreciated currency were provided to be paid first "in coin," and then in "gold coin," and the energies and resources of the country were heavily taxed to pay tribute to that fortunate class who had possessed themselves of the privileged character of property, by special grace exempted from its legitimate portion of the burdens of Government which a wise system of political economy would have assigned to it.

So wretched has been the monetary system of the United States for several years past, so discriminating the policy, that values have become unsettled, the prices of all commodities fluctuating, and general uneasiness pervades all business and financial circles.

The uneasy and unsettled condition of matters in respect to the currency is manifested in the various schemes and plans proposed for the settlement of this vexed and vexatious subject. Almost every section of the Union has some favored idea of money and almost every man a pet scheme for the enhancement of the currency. No one can doubt that the best and surest financial policy is one based upon a specie currency. Gold and silver coin is the recognized money of the world, and there is never a departure from its use as the best circulating medium except under the stress of circumstances. That many of the evils under which we labor would be cured if we were in condition to return to specie payments admits not of a doubt; but whether we could now, or at any time in the near future, undertake to resume is a matter of such grave question that the best financial minds of the country recoil even at its consideration. I have always been considered a "hard-money" man, but I am convinced that to force specie resumption now, or at an early time hereafter, would prove most disastrous to all business enterprise and spread bankruptcy and ruin throughout the land. The law passed at the last session of Congress declaring a purpose to resume specie payments on the 1st day of January, 1879, has already borne its evil fruits in the depressed trade, the impaired commerce, and the general paralysis which has seized on the business enterprise and energies of the country. The experience of one year with the resumption act upon the statute-books has been sufficient to call forth from all quarters of the country a demand for its repeal.

The people of this country do not fail to recognize that they are just out of a prolonged and devastating war—a war in which not only the energies but the property of the citizen were taxed to the utmost—commerce to a great extent destroyed, and the balance of trade as between this and other countries thrown heavily against us. They do not fail to remember, too, that no country of modern times has ever been able to resume specie payments immediately after a great war. England, reputed to have the best financial system on earth, was unable to resume specie payments for many years after her war with Napoleon, and every country of which we have knowledge had a like experience. Why it should be supposed that we could do better in this regard than all other countries, or better than we have ever before done, passes my comprehension. However we may desire to return to specie payments, it seems to me that the thing is now impossible. It is estimated that there are only about one and one-half billions gold in circulation in the commercial world. The greenback and national currency of the United States amount to about $753,000,000. To enable us to resume we would have to secure not less than one-third of the whole coin circulation of the world. Now with the vast burden of bonded Federal, State, and municipal debt upon us, with millions of those bonds held by foreigners, and the balance of foreign trade vastly against us, how, in heaven's name, could we get the necessary amount of specie to enable us to resume? The thing is impossible, preposterous. The best, it appears to me, that this Congress can do will be to repeal the resumption act of January 1875, with the simple assurance to the country that, when times improve and the exigencies of trade and commerce allow, we will return to specie payments. The country will be satisfied with the repeal of this law and the assurance that no further contraction of the currency will for the present be permitted.

Another measure now demanded by the condition of the country is that Treasury notes—"greenbacks"—in addition to gold and silver, shall be made a "legal tender" for all debts, both public and private. A law requiring the Government to receive Treasury notes for all dues, and substituting national-bank notes with Government money, would not only be a saving to the Government but would soon bring the paper money of the country to a par with gold, or very nearly so, and would to a very great extent do away with the necessity for gold in ordinary transactions; for gold has really become, instead of a medium of exchange, a circulating medium; a commodity; an article of barter and sale, and is bought and sold in the market as any other article of merchandise. With greenbacks nearly at par with gold, all the coin necessary for governmental and trade purposes could be procured at much less rates than now. This theory may not appear very practicable to some, but to my mind it is very clear that in the end some such scheme will have to be resorted to. It is one of the highest duties of a government to furnish to its citizens a sound and valuable currency. As gold sufficient for the purpose cannot be procured, the next best thing for our Government to do is to furnish a good paper currency—a currency carrying with it the weight and strength of the Government's credit; not such a currency as we have now, partly a legal tender and partly not, but a currency bearing with it the faith of the Government that it is, and shall be worth its face value and shall be good in all transactions, whether between citizen and citizen or Government and citizen.

The making a paper currency a legal tender is really in theory no novelty. In this country it has been frequently done with success. We well remember that prior to 1860 the issues of the State banks were in general circulation and received in most, if not all, transactions by both Government and people. And at this day the paper money of France, notwithstanding its great volume, is at par, and received for all dues both public and private.

In no other way than by making the money of the Government receivable for "all dues" can the trading and farming community be put upon an equal footing with the bondholders of the East. The matter of finance, it is true, is a difficult and delicate one to manage; but it has not been justly or fairly dealt with in this country for years. The very laws enacted by Congress in reference to the subject have not been enforced, and the officials of the Government have knowingly and deliberately persisted in a policy which advanced one section of the country to the detriment of the other. The banking laws of the United States require the banking capital of the country to be distributed one-half according to population and the other half according to wealth. Yet we see the great bulk of the banking capital controlled by a comparatively small section of the Union to the injury of that other section, greater in extent, in population, and productive power. This is due, I say, mainly to the unjust, unequal, and discriminating system of partisan legislation which has prevailed in this country since the war; a system which builds up one section of the country at the expense of the other, and which imposes and distributes taxation in such a way that the great bonded wealth of the people in the more favored part of the Union is exempted, while everything produced, used, or consumed by the less favored section is heavily taxed under the guise of necessity and protection.

Common justice demands that a remedy for the evils complained of should be found, and a remedy can be applied in lifting the heavy hand of the Government from the productions of the South and West, by relieving their people of the enormous burdens which they bear, by equalizing taxation so that the wealthy of the North and East shall bear the same measure of governmental impositions as their toiling brothers of the agricultural districts. It is needless to say that this cannot be done. The same measure of statesmanship which adroitly fixed this discriminating system of enormity upon the agricultural masses can surely devise some method to throw the weight of taxation upon the wealth rather than upon the poverty of the country. It is but poor encouragement to one section of the country to witness the influence of the parent Government thrown in opposition to its interests in favor of another, and not more encouraging to the citizens of that section to know and to feel that they are required to pay taxes upon not only their bone and muscle but upon every species of property which they own and every product they raise, while their more fortunate neighbors, the pets of the Government, pay not a farthing upon all their wealth wrung from the toil and sweat of the rural masses. Such a system may by its beneficiaries be considered one of good governmental polity, but the people of this country will fail to see and appreciate it, and will not much longer consent to sustain a policy which makes the "rich richer and the poor poorer," and hastens the ruin of all business interests.

It is a fact notorious that the people of the North and East, having control for the last twelve or fifteen years of every department of the Government, have steadily refused to allow their accumulated and bonded wealth to be taxed, and have even removed the weight of taxation from their large incomes, their thriving manufactories, and that vast volume of currency which they hold in excess of and in violation of law. They have relieved themselves by shifting the burdens from their own shoulders on to those of their less favored neighbors of the agricultural districts of the South and West; load them down with taxation; vex the people with systems akin to torture, harass them with armies of tax-gatherers, and wring from them an amount of tribute heavier and more grievous than was ever borne or paid by the subjects of any government.

For many years the Southern and Western States have paid annually to the Government upon the articles of tobacco and distilled spirits alone from seventy to eighty million dollars, sums far in excess of any benefits which they have derived. The result of such a system has been not only to oppress but to impoverish the people who have it to bear, and to dissatisfy them with the administration of the Government.

The system of internal taxation inaugurated during the war, a system of doubtful constitutionality, resorted to only as a necessity in a time of great public peril, has been kept up and fostered until it seems to have become part and parcel of our governmental polity. It is singular how or why the people of the United States have submitted for so many years to so onerous a system of direct taxation.

It is hard to realize that we are descendants of those old colonists who revolted at a tax of a "penny a pound upon tea" and who later as citizens of the States rebelled at a tax of nine cents per gallon upon liquors. Yet we now quietly pay a tax of ninety cents per gallon on liquors and twenty-four cents per pound upon the chief staple of a large part of the country.

No people were ever taxed as are ours. No people have ever been harried and oppressed by tax-assessors and tax-gatherers as have been the people of the South and West for the last few years.

It mattered not that a devastating war had swept over the South, that her fields had been laid waste, and that desolation and ruin encompassed a once fair and smiling land, still exactions were imposed, "bricks were required to be made without straw," and withering taxes wrung from the exhausted resources of an impoverished and sorrowing people.

And all for what? If the immense amounts raised from taxation had been judiciously applied, if the public burdens had been lightened, if the public debt had been paid and the rate of taxation gradually reduced, these things might be borne with some degree of patience; but when we remember that at the close of the late war the public debt was $2,773,236,176.69, that in the mean time nearly $4,000,000,000 have, in the shape of taxes, been extorted from the people, and that the public debt is this day more than $2,224,369,873.61, we are filled with amazement, not only at the evident misappropriation of the public funds, but also at the long-suffering of the American people. In the better days of this Republic such things would not have been tolerated.

It may be well to look somewhat at the vast sums of money which have at different times been collected from the people. Prior to the late war, sixty millions were ample to meet the ordinary expenses of the Government and to pay the interest upon the small public debt. Since the war, from four to five hundred million dollars have annually been required to meet those objects.

From the foundation of the Government—4th of March, 1789—to June 30, 1866, including the period of the war and one year thereafter, there were received into the Treasury of the United States $3,049,034,567.15. During the nine succeeding years, namely, from 1st of July, 1866, to 1st of July, 1875, were paid into the Treasury the sum of $3,740,255,642.67. Thus in—

1869	357,188,256 09
1870	395,959,833 87
1871	374,431,104 94
1872	364,694,229 91
1873	322,177,673 78
1874	299,941,090 84
1875	266,232,765 14
Total in nine years	3,740,255,642 67
Total in seventy-seven preceding years	3,049,034,567 15
Excess in last nine years over receipts for seventy-seven preceding years	691,221,075 52

It thus amply appears that the net ordinary receipts into the Treasury during the last nine years were greater by $691,221,075.52 than had been theretofore collected and paid into the Treasury from the formation of the Government to that time, and greater by $967,019,468.98 than the whole public debt on 1st July, 1866. Now if it is true, as stated by the Secretary of the Treasury, that the whole public debt on 30th June, 1865, amounted to $2,773,236,176.69, and, as seen, the receipts since have been nearly four billions, one would naturally suppose that the public debt had been entirely or nearly paid off. Yet what do we find? Notwithstanding the vast sums paid into the Treasury by the Secretary's last report it appears that the public debt now amounts to $2,224,369,873.61. Great heavens! What an exhibit! Is this the Government of boasted republican simplicity? Is this the land of our fathers? More than $3,740,255,642.67 of the people's money expended—gone—and the public debt upon which interest is to be yearly paid in gold nearly as great as it was on 1st July, 1866. What has become of the vast sums yearly paid into the Treasury? The public debt has been but little decreased, taxation has been but slightly reduced. The Government's heavy hand still rests upon the citizen. The tax-gatherer's cry is still heard in the land.

What has become of the people's money? Look at the big thieves and the little thieves who bask in the sunshine of administration favor, who riot over the land in their ill-gotten gains, who have grown so insolent that they set both the people and Government at defiance. Look at the magnificent structures in this city of Washington and elsewhere erected by the plunderers of the public Treasury. Look at the Credit Mobilier, Pacific Mail, and other kindred swindles. Look at the bribery, corruption, theft, and rascality permeating the different Departments of the Government from the highest to the lowest, and the question is answered and the wonder ceases. It seems no longer strange that the public debt is not lessened nor taxation reduced. It is no longer strange that the power of the Government in republican and sectional hands should be wielded to keep up the onerous taxation upon western and southern products. A tax of ninety cents upon spirits, and twenty-four cents upon tobacco, rates fearful upon the honest producer, but the prop, stay, and hope of the "blockade-runner" and the thief. Your blockade-runner and your crooked-whisky men, your detectives, your marshals, your gaugers, and your "Sylphs" all rejoice at the unusual, oppressive, and unprofitable rate of ninety cents per gallon upon spirits. But the poor men of the South and the West have been driven from this field of labor and of profit to them. They cannot afford to pay the rate of taxation. They are small operators. Their grain must go to decay in their barns. Their fruit, heretofore a great staple in the mountain regions of the South, must rot upon their hill-sides. Penury and want must stare them and their children in the face; but these thousands of men of small business and small means must not be allowed to compete with the grand, bloated distillers of the North and the West. O no; the Government will protect the monopolist, the big distiller, but the little distiller must take care of himself.

One distinguished member of the republican party [Mr. GARFIELD] has already declared upon this floor that the object of much of the legislation heretofore had was to break down small distillers in favor of great ones, and there cannot be a doubt of the truth of the observation. But is this right, is it just, is it profitable or wise legislation? Can that be a just system which discriminates in favor of one class of citizens or one section of the country against another class or section? Is it profitable or wise legislation which imposes such a rate of taxation upon certain products and occupations as that none but men of large means or fraudulent purposes can engage in it, to the exclusion of the humble and the honest? And is it not true that such a system has been inaugurated and practiced for years by the republican party and administration of this country? Is it not true that by such system honest men have been deprived of their legitimate gains, while monopolists, crooked-whisky men—but another name for rogues—have been fattened, petted, and fostered in both cases to the loss and detriment of the Government.

If the present tax on whisky was reduced 50 per cent. and upon liquors distilled from fruits 75 per cent. it would be greatly to the interest not only of the people but of the Government. Experience has shown upon this, as in regard to every other subject, that the greater the tax the less the production and the greater the incentive to fraud. If the tax was reduced to a reasonable rate the Government would get its revenues, and all of its revenues, from distilled spirits, and the necessity would no longer exist for that vast army of spies and informers, collectors, marshals, gangers, and gougers which has overrun, harassed, and outraged the people, especially those of the Southern States, for years, inflicted loss upon the Government, and brought its administration into discredit and disrepute. If the tax is sensibly reduced, you will have no need for the Government pimp and the commissioned robber. You will hear no more of great whisky frauds in Saint Louis, Chicago, and elsewhere. You will have no more harrying of that poor and hapless section, the South. You will not see her citizens dragged helplessly from their homes to courts sixty and eighty miles away, to be tried before a partisan judge and a strange jury upon the unsupported testimony of a godless informer or a deputy marshal whose diligence is sharpened and veracity gauged by the mileage and per diem consequent upon conviction for the high crime of having exchanged a pint of brandy for a peck of wheat with a neighbor, or for being possessed of a superannuated worm or a dilapidated still which for twenty years has done duty in the family; oftener for no crime at all.

I assert it, and I am sorry that it is true, that dozens and scores of our southern people have in the last few years been arrested, carried to distant counties, tried among strangers at a distance from home and witnesses, and many of them convicted because they were too humble to help themselves and too poor to secure the attendance of witnesses or to employ counsel to defend them. And many a poor southern man, as innocent of crime as the child unborn, has lingered out weeks and months in the jails of the country or in the Albany penitentiary, convicted upon the perjured testimony of official knaves, who thus filled their pockets and proved themselves vigilant officers and efficient partisans.

I do not pretend to say that there are no worthy officers in the Revenue Department, nor that there are no frauds perpetrated upon the revenue in the South. I do not pretend that there are not bad men there as in every other section of the country; but I do say that where there is one fraud upon the revenue South, there are five in the North and West; where the Government is defrauded of one dollar in the South, it is defrauded of five North; and where one poor devil South, raked over as it is by spies and informers as by a drag-net, is caught in flagrante delicto, ten bloated knaves and lords of whisky rings proudly strut the streets of northern cities unwhipt of justice and reveling in the fruits of their crimes.

I have been led to these last remarks by what was said some time ago on this floor by the distinguished gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. FOSTER,] who doubtless has absorbed all information upon this subject, and who was so kind as to say, in speaking of the southern people: "That they cheat and defraud the revenue in every district of the South is unquestionable. But I do not make any great complaint against them; they do not know any better. Whisky is a great part of their meat and their drink, and has always been so." Defraud the revenue in every district in the South! Do not know any better! Why the gentleman's extended knowledge on this subject is as astounding as his kind pity is overwhelming. "Whisky a great part of their meat and drink!" This is refreshing, coming from a gentleman whose State is celebrated for its great quantities of good lager and fine liquors, and perhaps just a little "crooked whisky." The gentleman has undertaken to measure our grain by his bushel, against which I protest. If he knows, as he doubtless does, that the revenue is defrauded in his own country, that is no argument that the same state of things exists South. If the people of his country are so ignorant, which I do not charge, that they do not comprehend when they violate the laws of the land, it is no reason he should conclude that the same poverty of information exists among a people of whom he evidently has heard a great deal but knows but little. The truth is—if the gentleman will allow the infringement of his monopoly—that the southern people are as loyal and as law-abiding as any in this Government. More, they are in general as well educated in the arts and sciences, as intelligent and as well informed upon all practical and proper subjects as any people of ancient or modern days. It is true that they may not be as skilled in "ways that are dark and the tricks that are vain" as some other people of whom we know; they know nothing of Credit Mobilier, Pacific mail schemes, and other cute devices, but in everything which pertains to a generous liberality, broad culture, and a high civilization they have not their superiors on this continent.

If it is true, as charged, that there has been so much fraud perpetrated upon the revenue, North, South, East, and West, it becomes Congress to ascertain the cause and to apply the remedy. The remedy, in my judgment, is to be found in the reduction of the tax and the discharge of that vast body of improvident, corrupt, and faithless retainers who feed upon both Government and people and bring reproach upon the revenue system. In 1867, with three hundred taxable articles, nearly sixty-five hundred men were employed in and about the collection of the revenue at a cost to the Government of $7,500,000. Now, with only four taxable articles, namely, spirits, tobacco, bank checks, and medicines, the officers and agents employed number over thirty-six hundred, at a cost of over five and one-half million dollars. Two-thirds of these officials, who are, in fact, but partisan pimps and local politicians, might be discharged and their salaries saved to the Government. With that saving and the increased revenue which would follow a reduction of the tax the Government would be greatly benefited.

I have said that actual experience has demonstrated that the greater the tax the less the revenue derived. I will prove it by the statistics. On page 14 of his last report the Commissioner of Internal Revenue says:

> Excessive taxation may be the cause of general and systematic fraud leading to great loss of revenue, but production and consumption go on as before, whatever the taxation. This is well illustrated in the years when the rate of tax was $2 per gallon. In the year 1868 the taxes derived from this source were less than nineteen millions, while in 1869, when the rate was reduced to fifty cents, they ran up to forty-five millions, and the year following to fifty-five millions.

The facts stated by the Commissioner speak for themselves, and his table which I here quote, presents the argument in the strongest possible light:

Collections during year ending June 30—

1872	49,475,516 36
1874	49,444,089 85
Total	489,763,999 14

Since July, 1862, Congress has changed the rate of taxation upon spirits six times, the tax varying at intervals from 20 cents to $2 per gallon, and in almost every instance, as the table I have cited shows, the revenue has fallen off whenever the rate was increased.

For example, from July, 1864, to July, 1868, the tax rate was from $1.50 to $2 per gallon, the average yearly revenue to the Government was $21,727,408. From July, 1868, to January, 1875, with the tax at about 60 cents, the average yearly revenue was $27,138,856, or nearly five and one half million dollars annually in favor of the decreased and lower rate.

Again, the Commissioner's table shows that prior to the act of July, 1868, with the tax at $2, the revenue was less than $19,000,000, yet the year following, with the tax at 50 cents per gallon, the revenue reached ever forty-five millions, and the year following that, namely, the fiscal year ending July 1, 1870, at the same tax rate, the revenue swelled to nearly $56,000,000, more than has ever been collected any one year before or since.

When by act of 1872 the tax was raised to seventy cents the same comparative reduction in revenue ensued, and the act of March, 1875, increasing the tax from seventy to ninety cents, has been productive of the same result. It is plain from present indications that the last increase to ninety cents will not yield as much this fiscal year as the last, as up to the 1st of March the collections had not reached $38,000,000, with only the collections of March, April, May, and June to come in—months in which but little revenue from this source is ever collected, the distilling season being over.

Upon the whole, nothing can be plainer nor argument more conclusive than that a reduction of the present rate of taxation upon spirits will stimulate honest industry, increase legitimate trade, and return a larger revenue to the Government.

I turn from the consideration of the spirit tax to that levied upon the great staple tobacco. In my humble judgment, the internal tax laid upon tobacco is discriminating, unjust, and unconstitutional. The taxing powers of the Government under the Constitution are limited, first, to direct taxes, which are to be apportioned among the several States according to their respective numbers, and, next, to duties, imposts, and excises, which are to be uniform throughout the United States. No one, I presume, will contend that the tobacco-tax is or can be apportioned among the several States according to their respective numbers, nor is it capable in actual practice or execution of being rendered uniform throughout the United States.

It can be of no avail, however, at this late day to argue with reference to the constitutionality of the tax. I will content myself with considering the practical workings of the tax upon the great staple of a large part of the country. The cultivation of tobacco is peculiar to but few of the States, and strictly fine tobacco is produced by but three or four. The total amount of tobacco raised last year was about 280,000,000 pounds and the tax paid the Government thereon $37,303,461.88. As the principal part of this tobacco is grown by only four or five of the States of the Union, the result is that the bulk of the tax just named is paid by those few States, thus nullifying the beautiful system of uniformity of taxation commended to us by the Constitution of the country.

Inasmuch as this burden is borne by and this discriminating tax is assessed against but few of the States, it was reasonable to suppose that a returning sense of justice would ere this have induced Congress to change or at all events to so lessen and modify this pernicious tax as to render it less oppressive to the comparatively small portion of the people who have it to bear. So far from this, and in total disregard of the rights of the tax-payer, as also the interest of the Government, the last Congress raised the tax on tobacco four cents per pound. Four cents per pound upon any staple commodity is in itself a heavy taxation, and the very sections of the country which combine to keep this tax upon the staple of a few of the States South and West would be ready to revolt at any attempt to burden any given interest of theirs even to the extent of the last increase of tax upon tobacco.

To tax a people whose locality, soil, and climate compel them to the production of a certain staple to the very verge of endurance, upon the vague pretext that that staple is a "luxury," is ungenerous, unwise, and impolitic: ungenerous to the people taxed, unwise because too onerous, and impolitic because the extent of the taxation defeats production and diminishes the volume of revenue to be derived from the subject. Luxury indeed! Tobacco may be a luxury to you gentlemen North and East who burden us with taxation and who, in the enjoyment of your otium cum dignitate, chew and smoke our fine productions, but it is a necessity to us. It is really our meat, drink, and wear; for from its sale we supply ourselves with not only the few luxuries we have, but almost every necessary of life. The argument that the tax upon tobacco is paid by the "consumer," and not by the producer, is as unsound as it is fallacious. For in the first place our own people along with others are consumers, and, unlike the people of any other section, we are heavily taxed upon the use of our own products, while on the other hand our energies are paralyzed, our productions lessened, and our profits diminished by the embargo laid upon the fruits of our industry. The poorest system of political economy teaches that, as the area and extent of consumption is reduced and the demand diminished, to that same extent will industry be crippled and production curtailed. The heavy taxation of any commodity will decrease its consumption and impair the demand for it; and in the same proportion in which you lessen its consumption and stifle demand for it, in that same proportion will you burden and injure production. I do not mean to say that the consumer pays nothing of this tobacco tax; it is true he is burdened also, but my argument is to show that he is driven in great degree from the market by the weight of the tax, forced to consume less than he would otherwise do, thereby forcing the producer to lower prices and less production. That the producer has in the end to bear the evils of the tax no one can doubt, for no sooner does the Government tax the manufacturer than he throws it back upon the planter in the way of a reduced price for the commodity, and the planter, having no one behind him upon whom he can thrust the burden, must of necessity bear it.

One of the great objections to this tax is the inequality of its distribution. No more grievous wrong can be conceived of than the manner in which this taxation is distributed in a country which professes to tax its citizens in proportion to their wealth and numbers. For instance, the six New England States, prosperous and powerful, untouched and unharmed by the rude blasts of war, with a population of 3,487,924, pay of internal taxes only the sum of $3,988,810.73, while my own poor old State of Virginia, begirt by fire and sword, ravaged and desolated by the tread of armies for four years, had wrung from her 1,200,000 toiling children the last year the enormous sum of $7,659,639.97, and since the war more than $50,000,000. My own little city of Danville, the center of a collection district composed of four or five counties, paid last year $2,361,261 96 internal revenue, and the Commissioner's report shows that since the war the large sum of over $15,000,000 has been paid there, to say nothing of five to six millions additional, which arose from tobacco manufactured in and around Danville, but which under the bonded-warehouse system was credited to cities in which the warehouses were located.

Now what justice or what reason can there be in such a discriminating system of taxation as this, especially when it curtails production and lessens the revenue? That the heavy tax upon tobacco as upon liquors depresses the trade and decreases the revenue, which by a more reasonable system might be secured, is beyond question. The statistics show that while the tax upon tobacco was at 40 cents the trade greatly languished, besides the temptation to fraud was greatly increased. The same state of things existed with the tax at 32 cents. No sooner, however, was the tax reduced to 20 cents than production was stimulated, the trade revived, the Government commenced to get its revenues, and in fact collected more than ever before during the same period of time or at any other rate.

I quote again from the Commissioner's report, by which it will be seen that while the tax was at twenty cents the revenue steadily increased. Take for example the months of January and February, 1874 and 1875, with the tax at twenty cents:

In January, 1874, there were collected	$1,990,535
In February, 1874, there were collected	1,824,610

In the corresponding months of the following year, with the same tax of twenty cents—

Collected January, 1875	$1,378,828
Collected February, 1875	3,548,877

showing a steady and marked improvement under the operations of the decreased tax and an increase in receipts over the corresponding months of the year before of $1,112,500.

On the 3d of March, 1875, the tax was increased from twenty to twenty-four cents, and at once there was a marked decrease in revenue receipts; for the Commissioner shows that for the months of March, April, May, and June, immediately following the increase of tax—the best manufacturing months in the year—the revenue, as compared with the same months of 1874, decreased to the extent of $1,413,660. I add to the Commissioner's statistics statements from my own city of Danville, the center of the finest tobacco region of the world. Compare the months of February, 1875 and 1876:

Amount of revenue paid at Danville February, 1876, tax 24 cents	48,161 25
Decrease in February, 1876, as compared with February, 1875	118,184 05

Again, from the 1st day of October, 1874, to the 1st day of March, 1875, the amount of revenue paid, with tax at twenty cents, was $390,174.30; for the corresponding months of the succeeding year, 1875, with tax at twenty-four cents, the amount was $341,184.75; thus:

From 1st of October, 1874, to 1st of March, 1875, tax 20 cents	$390,174 30
From 1st of October, 1875, to 1st of October, 1876, tax 24 cents	341,184 75
Showing decrease and loss to the Government of	48,989 55

The statistics of Richmond, Lynchburgh, and Petersburgh show the same results, I am told.

The increase of the tax affected not only the manufactured, but the raw article also, as I will show. Take the same years and months as before. For the month of February, 1875, when the tax was twenty cents, there were sold in the Danville market 1,436,749 pounds of leaf-tobacco at the average price of $22.07. For the month of February, 1876, there were sold—with tax at twenty-four cents—2,844,749 pounds of tobacco at the average price of $10.04 per hundred-weight; or in other words, 1,408,600 pounds more tobacco were sold in February, 1876, than in February, 1875, and for $31,316.30 less money.

Again, from the 1st of October, 1874, to the 1st of March, 1875, when the tax was at twenty cents, there were sold 5,297,348 pounds leaf tobacco for $1,144,610.70, an average of $20.60 per hundred-weight. For the corresponding periods of the next year, with the tax at twenty-four cents, were sold 8,107,952 pounds for $849,652.61, an average of $10.47. Thus we see 3,810,604 pounds more tobacco in certain months of 1875-'76, under the operation of the twenty-four-cent tax, sell for $294,958.09 less money than in the same months of 1874-'75, when the tax was at twenty cents.

Now who can doubt the injustice and impropriety of such a system of taxation?

If it is determined to keep up this tax, discriminating in its effects as it is, good judgment and sound policy alike demand that it should be at once reduced to a reasonable rate, say not over fifteen cents per pound, and for some time kept stationary. As long as the tax remains at its present exorbitant and oppressive figure, the people of the producing regions will remain dissatisfied, the agitation for reduction will continue, and depression of trade and loss both to the people and the Government will be the result. Whenever the tax is reduced to a reasonable rate, such a one as the production can bear, and the manufacturing and planting interests assured that there will be some permanency, some stability in the rate, production will be stimulated, trade will revive, agitation will cease, and benefit will ensue to both Government and people.

I assure this House that the present condition of the tobacco trade, because of its depressed and languishing condition, imperatively demands a reduction of the tax from its present to a much lower rate. The tax is disproportionately high as compared with the tax upon any other product or species of property, and practical results demonstrate beyond all question that a lower rate would induce more business, more consumption, a more faithful compliance with the law, and hence a greater return in revenue to the Government.

In the present condition of affairs in this country, the financial depression existing, the tendency toward contraction, and the universal skrinkage in value of every species of property, it is unreasonable to suppose that an increase of revenue can be derived from a staple so excessively burdened and disproportionately taxed.

As germane to the subject last discussed I will call attention to the import duty upon licorice. A large amount of mass and stick licorice is imported into this from foreign countries upon which a duty of ten cents gold per pound is paid the Government. About three-fourths of this licorice is used in the manufacture of tobacco and one-fourth in medicines and confections. The effect of the law as it now stands is to impose a double tax upon all licorice used upon tobacco, first in the way of the ten-cent gold duty upon the importation of the licorice, and then the twenty-four-cent internal tax upon tobacco, aggregating thirty-four cents per pound upon every pound of licorice used in the manufacture of tobacco. Not only is the tax onerous but discriminating. The manufacturers of fine-cut in the preparation of their tobacco use only the powdered licorice root, which comes in free of duty, while the plug manufacturer is compelled to use mass or stick licorice with the ten cents duty upon it. Unable to pay the heavy tax upon imported licorice, many of our manufacturers are forced to use inferior licorice of American make or to resort to cheap substitutes, whereby the quality of tobacco is greatly injured and the demands for it impaired not only in our own but in the markets of the world. Because of this duty upon licorice our tobacco manufacturing trade has been greatly injured, not only in the advantage thereby given foreign manufacturers but also in the fact that it has stimulated and built up large manufactories in Canada and elsewhere run with American tobacco. It is a matter of surprise why this duty has been so long kept upon licorice when its effects are so plainly injurious to American interests; but the most surprising part of the whole matter is that the American Congress should, in respect to this subject, have been for several years legislating for the protection not of its own but foreign manufacturers.

The repeal of this tax would result in putting ours on an equal footing with foreign manufacturers of tobacco, in increasing greatly our exports, in cheapening the production of the manufactured article, thereby increasing consumption and consequently the Government's revenue. I trust that, for the good of the Government and the encouragement of the people, the House will abolish this onerous tax by proper enactment.

Mr. Chairman, I appeal to this House to take no sectional or partisan view of these questions, but to deal with them in the light of justice and wisdom.

We have for the good of this country had too much sectional and partisan legislation. We have seen the productions of one section—whether intentional or not—heavily taxed for the benefit of another. We have seen the marts and avenues of commerce closed to one section and opened wide for the benefit of the other. We have seen State governments overthrown by the bayonet and unworthy men placed in power by violence and fraud. We have seen the power of the Federal Government directed to the destruction of State constitutions and the silencing of the people. We have seen the Army sent to intimidate and overawe the white population of many sections of the South. We have seen incompetent, unworthy, and unscrupulous men holding by Federal appointment judgeships in the South whose infamous actions have shamed the Government and profaned the name of justice. We have seen hordes of marshals, spies, and informers, men without means, manners, or morals, sent all over the South to harry, to vex, to insult, and to plunder a distressed and impoverished people. We have seen strangers, aliens in feelings, interests, and purposes, sent down among us to collect revenues who added to their duties the role of political organizers and partisan strikers, making their offices the headquarters of bitter hate, intimidation, and threatenings. We have seen that great writ of right—the habeas corpus—suspended in time of profound peace. We have seen the liberty of the citizen outraged, the reserved rights of the States contemned, despised, and set at naught, and the attempt boldly made to erect a centralized despotism upon the ruins of constitutional government.

All these things, Mr. Chairman, and much more have we seen as the result of partisan and republican legislation. Is it not time to put a stop to such a pernicious system of legislation? Is it not time to "call a halt" and consider what should be done for the best interests of the country? Can we not rise superior to partisan hate and sectional jealousies, and, with a single purpose of equal rights, equal laws, and equal justice to all sections, labor for the common good of a common country?

The war, with all its bitter memories, never I hope to be revived again, has long been over, and it is high time that "the sword should be beat into the plowshare and the spear into the pruning-hook," and peace and tranquillity restored to this yet distracted country which by well-directed energy and elevated patriotism can be made what our fathers intended it should be, the grandest and the most prosperous country on the face of the earth.

TARIFF.

Mr. KELLEY. Mr. Chairman, though I am to speak on the tariff bill now pending the gentleman [Mr. CABELL] who has just taken his seat will find that my argument will supplement his vigorous protest against our annoying and oppressive system of internal taxation. It is impossible to discuss a general tariff bill without speaking of metals, wares, fibers, fabrics, and other ingredients and results of the manifold industries of man; but in what I have to say on this occasion these are to be merely incidental. My theme will be, "Our country; the means of maintaining its unity, increasing its power, and endowing it with perpetual youth." These great ends are, in my judgment, to be attained only by developing its vastly varied resources, bringing the producer and consumer into close proximity in its valleys and on its mountains, and giving to the exchange of their productions between citizens of the sections most remote absolute freedom from Government restraint or imposition of excise of any kind or degree. To do this is practicable, and if it had been done by our fathers the great war, from the terrible effects of which we are now slowly recovering, could not have occurred. It was the prevalence of the misnamed system of free trade to which we owe that war. Had the tariff of 1824 been maintained, subject to such modifications as the progress of our industries and the peopling and development of new sections of our country had required, that fratricidal struggle would have been impossible; and, to come to a nearer day, had not the revenue or free-trade tariffs of 1846 and 1857 succeeded the protective tariff of 1842, slavery would have peacefully disappeared or be in the process of gradual extinction, the South would now be a great manufacturing region, and the North and South be interwoven by the indissoluble ties of trade, friendship, and consanguinity. Estrangement between the people of these two great sections so needful to each other's welfare would have been as impossible as it is between the States of New England, or between them and the great Middle States, or between either and the people of the grain-growing States of the Northwest.

That this is not mere theory or rhetoric I hope to demonstrate before I close, and to that end let me invite gentlemen to recall to mind the condition of the country in the years immediately preceding the war. Theoretic economists long taught that England's immense deposits of coal, iron, and other useful metals were an irresistible indication that Providence intended that island to be the workshop of the world to which raw materials from every land should be brought for manufacture. Many a time have I heard this proposition offered as conclusive evidence that the friends of the protective system were fighting against Providence. We accepted this theory and sought to make our exchanges in Liverpool unconscious of the fact that our country was richer in fuel, in metals, in fibrous plants, and in all elements of productive industry than England. If there be force in the argument drawn from the possession of such resources, it is as the exigencies of war disclosed to the South and fourteen consecutive years of experience under protective tariffs has proven to the North a thousand-fold in favor of making the United States the great workshop of the world, for England has no cotton or hemp fields, no sunny fields from which to gather ramie, or swamps in which to grow jute, and no tobacco, rice, or sugar fields. She is dependent largely upon us and other foreign countries for food, animal and vegetable, and must, at no distant day, if she be true to her own theory and buy where she can buy cheapest, go with us of the iron-bearing States of the North to that part of the Appalachian hills that lies in the old cotton States for essential ingredients of both Bessemer and crucible or cast-steel. These results are in the future; but she and her colonies are already getting their best axes, many of their saws, farm implements, and other forms of iron-ware from us; and, thanks to fourteen years of protection to our industries, we are competing with her in locomotives and many forms of machinery in the markets of the world.

But to recur to the period before the war. That I may not be justly charged with misrepresenting the attitude of the South, let me state it in the language of one of her most logical and polished writers, William M. Burwell, esq., who in the course of a public address in Louisiana, in November, 1856, "indicated the points of southern opinion and policy which bore on her subjugation" by saying, among other things, that she had held that "commerce and the mechanic arts and the banking system were incompatible with the social safety of the slave States," and "that great cities were great sores, aggregations of people an evil, immigrant numbers and capital not desirable, and works of internal commerce only to be allowed where they were built at the private cost of those who used them." "The ocean," said he, "was regarded as a 'scene of strife,' and it was thought that our ships and workshops should be stationed beyond the Atlantic." As the South dominated our politics, these propositions indicate the policy that had been pursued by the Government except for brief intervals, as from 1824 to 1832 and from 1842 to 1846. What results did it produce?

During the years from 1854 to 1862, including both, the production of iron was stationary, the amount produced annually averaging less than 800,000 tons. Vast amounts of energy and capital were during this period embarked and lost in efforts to establish manufacturing enterprises. Our exports were of bulky raw material, the freight on which consumed much of what should have been the profit of the producer. Our imports steadily exceeded our exports. Foreign debt increased and general bankruptcy overtook us at intervals of about seven years. The direct interchanges of commodities between the North and South were unimportant; no railroad running North and South could be maintained; indeed the construction of a through line had not been attempted. The longest paying North and South line prior to the war was the Illinois Central Road, extending from Chicago to Cairo, and when the confederacy was established its government found that it had no through line upon which to transport troops or munitions of war. To supply the missing link between Greensboro, North Carolina, and Danville, Virginia, roads running from the chief towns in the interior of North Carolina were dismantled and the iron used in making the only North and South line within the whole confederacy. Why should such a road have been constructed? There were no thriving towns or busy marts to require or sustain it and the two great sections of the country were alien to each other in trade. Commerce between them was conducted by foreign agents in a foreign land, where free traders believed it was best to keep our ships and workshops. The cotton of the South went to Liverpool for a market; the grain and provisions of the Northwest went to Liverpool to feed those who spun and wove the cotton and the gold of California traveled as nearly due East as the then routes of travel would permit, in order that reaching Liverpool it might buy back in the form of fabrics for the use of the American people the food and fiber they had sent thither for exchange. Elsewhere than in and about Richmond there was not an important workshop in the South. At Augusta, Georgia, and Graniteville, South Carolina, a few mills existed for the production of coarse yarns and Osnaburgs. The people of the South knew nothing of her resources. The lives of most of them were passed in thriftless idleness and poverty; even the slaves, when the culture of cotton, tobacco, sugar, or rice did not require their services, were without employment. Nor was the condition of the poor whites happier. Society offered no stimulants to the faculties with which they were endowed; no workshops proposed rewards for skilled or steady labor; no schools of art called into play their faculties or by enlarging their desires impelled them to labor for the means of gratifying them.

These conditions repelled immigration and prevented that increase in the value of southern lands which results from the aggregation of individuals and the diversification of employments, and, though devoting themselves to agriculture, the southern people relied upon others for a large share of their food for man and beast. The risibilities of citizens of Atlanta, Georgia, were excited when, during my visit to that city in October last, I expressed surprise at the fact that they could raise successive crops of wheat and corn from the same field in the same season, and frankly told them that I had not supposed they could raise either crop. Pressed for the foundation of so absurd a notion, I replied that I feared to express it, lest it should then be my turn to laugh, and good-naturedly added that I had known that there were millions of untilled acres in the State, and that tens of thousands of laboring-people were idle when the work of cotton or rice plantations did not employ them, and had been unable to believe that any part of the American people were capable of such fatuity as to indulge both land and labor in unproductive idleness while purchasing their bacon, corn, and oats from distant States with bills of exchange received from Liverpool in return for their cotton. The suggestion was received as kindly as it was intended, and thus emboldened I further modestly confessed that so late as 1867, when I had made my first visit to Memphis, I had observed in front of several warehouses immense piles of what I supposed to be bags of coffee, and had commented upon the enormous quantities of coffee the southern people must consume per capita, and that, when then interrogated as to the foundation of my opinion, I had pointed to the piles of what I supposed to be pure Rio, and had in response been told that they were bags of corn that had come down the Mississippi, but had not yet been stored. Of course such cheap and bulky articles could not bear railroad transportation, and yet they constituted almost the only commerce between the cotton-growing States and the non-manufacturing Northwest. Such was the condition of the South under free trade.

Meanwhile a limited tide of immigration flowed into the Northern States, and as the low rates of duties precluded the possibility of successfully establishing diversified manufactures on a scale sufficient to afford them employment, the immigrants sought the grain-growing regions, populated new lands, increased the already excessive production of grain and provisions, organized new States, and by their demand for admission to the Union as such disturbed the traditional balance of power between slavery and freedom in the Senate.

The condition of the country at that time may be compared to a broad warp set for cloth into which no woof had been woven, and which by reason of its great width was rent apart at the middle; and, sir, such must ever be the feeble and dangerous condition of our country while we make our domestic exchanges in a foreign land, and confine the labors of our people to the few and simple industries involved in the production of raw materials. If we would be one people, prosperous, contented, and thoroughly united, we must weave the parts of the country together. There must be not only warp but woof in the fabric. To this good work every consideration of patriotism and personal interest invites us. The Northwest needs local industries; she should spin and weave her own fabrics; she should consume the hemp of Kentucky, the cotton of the Gulf States, which should also supply her with jute and ramie for all the various uses to which they are appropriate. New England, and even we of Pennsylvania, need the manganiferous ores of Alabama and Georgia, for the equivalents of which we have hitherto depended on Germany alone for conversion into spiegelisen and Bessemer steel; and, as was testified before the committee by Mr. William Metcalf, of Pittsburgh, his exploration of the hills of North Carolina disclosed the fact that they contain a better ore for use in the manufacture of cast-steel than Sweden has produced. That gentleman added with emphasis, that "he had no doubt that the iron-ore of that region would produce a better quality of iron than the best Swedish." The cotton yarns for all the mills of this country should be spun by the water-power that flows through the cotton-fields of the South. The manufacturer then would have the benefit of all the cost involved in pressing, baling, tying, marking, transporting, untying, and passing the cotton through the picker-room of the northern manufactory, together with the saving of interest, the cost of transportation, and commissions of middle-men; a matter which competent judges have assured me would give them an advantage of not less than 15 per cent. over their distant New England or European competitors in the production of yarns and cloths.

The necessities of trade invite the people of the South to develop her resources and make her populous with skilled workmen, and thus create markets for those articles which they may not produce, but which the North will gladly send them in exchange for their productions with profit to both parties. When this work shall be accomplished, the Union will be in fact "one and inseparable." Railroads will stretch from the shores of the Gulf through the notches and passes of the mountains and along the water-courses to the far Northwest, and the cities of New England and the North will be brought into direct connection with those of the States of the far Southwest, and railroads parallel with every water-course and offering commercial facilities to the people of every section of the country will not then be regarded as "premature." They will, to recur to the figure to which I have resorted, make the woof that will weave us together in inseparable union.

In pleading for the maintenance of the protective system, I present the only conditions that will enable us to effect this happy consummation; for new States, wherein capital is scarce and there is an absence of skilled labor and modern machinery, as is now the case throughout the entire South and the remote grain-growing States of the North and Northwest, cannot compete on equal terms with old nations whose manufacturers have the advantage of cheap money, low wages, accumulated machinery, and surplus of skilled workmen.

Mr. Chairman, I have my dream of free trade as vivid as that of those who call themselves revenue reformers and delight in the honor conferred upon them by membership in the Cobden club, but my dream is of free trade for American citizens within the limits of their country. We now number 45,000,000, and by the close of the century, if we may judge by the past, will be very nearly 100,000,000 of people, and I would have trade between these increasing millions absolutely free. No Government exaction should impede it at any point or at any time. I would hasten to abolish every internal tax, so that the cost of American products to American citizens or for shipment to foreign countries should not be enhanced by any form of excise or internal tax; and I would do this by making the foreigner, who could find a better market for his wares in this country than in his own or elsewhere, pay for the privilege of enjoying it, and thus put hundreds of "millions of dollars annually into the Treasury of an untaxed nation." This is the meaning of the protective system, and these are the results its friends strive to produce. It defends the man of enterprise who embarks his capital in a productive industry against being overwhelmed by rich foreign rivals who can afford to undersell and crush him, and then re-imburse themselves by increasing the price of their commodities to a people who have left themselves no second source of supply. It defends the American laborer in his right to maintain his children while receiving that education which is due to every child in a democratic republic against the ruinous competition of the ill-paid though more skillful laborers of despotic lands. Yes, give us free trade for the American people between themselves and defend their right to it by whatever scale of duties may enable them to maintain it while paying a fair day's wages for every fair day's work done by man or woman, and the free Republic of the United States will become the exemplar nation of the world.

Mr. Chairman, it is well to clear a ship's deck of loose spars, rigging, and other rubbish before going into action, and I invoke the assistance of the Clerk in this preliminary work. He will please read the extract I send him from the remarks of Thursday last by the chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means, [Mr. MORRISON.]

The Clerk read as follows:

It was then, too, (May 1, 1872,) that the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KELLEY] drew the following glowing picture of what protection had done for his constituents. He said:

"Would that the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. McNeely,] who spoke yesterday of their hopeless condition and the squalor in which they dwell, would spend a week with me in my home and look from my windows upon the clean brick houses with little gardens in the front and rear, with parlors well furnished, and many of them with a piano or melodeon, or other musical instrument; with their rooms lighted by gas and heated by patented processes; with bath-rooms supplied with hot and cold water, flowing every minute in the year. These, sir, are the houses in which our workingmen dwell, and thousands of which they own; many of them are under the shadow of the public-school house and the church, to the support of which the occupants freely and liberally contribute. A visit to a few hundred such homes would change the gentleman's opinions and convince even him that protection is the right of the laborer and a boon to the consumer."

This picture he presented as the result of protection and urged as a reason why it should remain untouched. Now hear what the Iron and Steel Association, summoned by him to testify in March of this year, say:

"With failure upon failure of our most experienced and respected iron-masters announced in the public prints from day to day, with wages of iron-workers necessarily reduced so low that they and their families can scarcely escape destitution and starvation, the American Iron and Steel Association is astounded to learn that a reduction of duties on foreign iron is seriously contemplated by the Ways and Means Committee, and it respectfully, through you, protests against such action."

And so four additional years of protection and oppression have converted these happy homes of "clean brick houses" into homes of men whose wages are so low that they can scarcely escape "destitution and starvation;" and still protection and opression are unrelenting. If the testimony of the association, the witnesses summoned by the gentleman, as to the "destitution and starvation" which threaten the workmen of Pennsylvania is to be credited, it is reasonable to infer that the "clean brick houses" of workingmen are not the happy homes they once were; their musical instruments will probably tell of little happiness while "starvation and destitution" threaten its inmates; for "hot and cold water" some tears may be "flowing every minute in the year." With all this changed condition in four years who shall say that that squalor of which Mr. McNeely spoke will remain away from these homes if this system is to continue? Yet the gentleman from Pennsylvania and his witnesses "hope the committee will allow the duties on iron and steel and all other manufactures to remain as they are until the country recovers from its present widespread prostration."

Still another reason was then urged by him for keeping up protection, which he asserts is no taxation; he wanted to abolish all internal taxes, as he then said:

"So that in 1876, when our customs revenue, as I believe it will, shall have reached $230,000,000 per annum, and our interest account shall have been greatly reduced, the world may assemble to celebrate our one hundredth birthday and find America a free and untaxed nation. That is possible, and that I aim at accomplishing."

This prophecy this very year will fall about $100,000,000 short of fulfillment; but $100,000,000 is as near fulfillment as could be expected of a prophet who, standing in the United States Congress, talks two hundred and thirty millions into the Treasury of an "untaxed nation." So much of "the world" as may assemble to celebrate our one hundredth birthday will find us not "untaxed," but about the best-taxed nation on the globe. Still the advocates of protection are unrelenting. Then we must not touch the tariff because the country was prosperous; now we must not touch it because it is not prosperous. With them there is no fitting time to loosen the hold which selfish greed has made so firm.

Mr. KELLEY. I am profoundly grateful to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MORRISON] for bringing to the attention of the country the painful contrast now presented by the condition of the laboring-people of Pennsylvania with that they enjoyed four years ago. If it be that the protective system is responsible for this deplorable change, I would also have been grateful to him had he shown or attempted to show the relation of cause and effect. That the sad contrast is faithfully presented by him is freely admitted, and I challenge him and all others to show that it has not come as the result of other causes and notwithstanding the beneficent influence of the protective system instead of by reason thereof. Our customs receipts will not be $230,000,000 this year. No, sir; they will be but about $145,000,000, which is less by several millions than they were in the preceding year, although it was expected that the act of February 8, 1875, would make some additions and that the act of March 3, 1875, repealing the act by which 10 per cent. had been removed from duties on leading classes of imports and 25 per cent. added to the duties on sugar, molasses, and melado would add at least $15,000,000.

Whether my prediction of $230,000,000 would have been verified had unwise legislation not reduced customs duties and increased internal taxes can never be determined. It was based on the assumption that the existing rate of duties and taxes would be maintained and that the general business of the country should not be prostrated by such financial legislation as has been had. But the duties on leading classes of imports were reduced 10 per cent. by the act of June 6, 1872, against which reduction I was protesting when I uttered the words quoted by the gentleman. My prediction was reasonable, and would, I believe, have been verified had wise counsels prevailed. The customs revenues collected in the year ending June 30, 1864, were but $102,000,000, which was $18,000,000 more than ever had been collected in a fiscal year, and in the year ending the 30th of June, 1872, but eight years thereafter, they had swollen to $216,000,000, showing a steady rate of increase, which promised to reach $230,000,000 long ere the centennial year should come around. A further increase of but $14,000,000 would have made good my prediction.

I have never claimed that the protective system could overcome the effect of all adverse legislation. The influences that govern society are subtle and complex, and the prosperity or adversity of the people are inextricably involved with questions of currency and finance. Knowing this, I have frequently warned Congress and the country that mistaken legislation on these questions would prostrate the industry and revenues of the country in spite of any tariff of protective duties that might be imposed.

So early as the 3d of January, 1867, I entered an emphatic protest against the then recently proposed experiment of hastening specie payments by contracting a volume of currency, which was legitimately employed in the business of the country, in the course of which I said:

The experiment, if attempted as a means of hastening specie payments, will prove a failure, but not a harmless one. It will be fatal to the prospects of a majority of the business men of this generation, and strip the frugal laboring people of the country of the small but hard-earned sums they have deposited in savings-banks or invested in Government securities. It will make money scarce and employment uncertain. Its object is to reduce the amount of that which, in every part of our country and for the hundreds of thousands of millions of dollars of domestic trade, is money, and to increase its purchasing power; and by thus unsettling values it will paralyze trade, suspend production, and deprive industry of employment. It will make the money of the rich man more valuable and deprive the poor man of his entire capital, the value of his labor, by depriving him of employment. Its first effect will be to increase the rate of interest and diminish the rate of wages, and its final effect wide-spread bankruptcy and a more protracted suspension of specie payments.

And again on the 18th of January, 1868, after the destructive experiment had been entered upon I protested and said:

The attempt to force a resumption of specie payments by contracting a volume of currency which is actively, legitimately, and profitably employed, is as dishonest as it is unwise. The object and effect of such a movement are to increase the purchasing power and value of the rich man's hoarded or invested dollars, and its projectors pause not, though they discover that it robs millions of laborers of their whole estate. The laborer's income is derived from his thews and sinews and the skill of his cunning right hand. These are his estate—these and his little savings—and of these millions are being robbed by the mad attempt of the Secretary of the Treasury to bring about specie payments. The balance of trade is heavily against us; and our gold-bearing bonds are so largely held by foreigners that resumption would, in less than thirty days, induce the return of bonds enough to drain us of specie and make us feel the curse of absenteeism as keenly as Ireland ever felt it. With our bonds held at home and with commercial exchanges greatly in our favor, we might maintain specie payments; but, with our bonds abroad and the balance of trade heavily against us, we could not maintain them a month; and if Congress does not restrain Mr. McCulloch from persisting in the attempt, he will unsettle the value of every species of property, curtail the productive power of the country, bankrupt men of enterprise, and rob millions of laboring people of their whole estate.

Thus nearly ten years ago did I portray the present pitiable condition of the working classes as faithfully as the representatives of the Iron and Steel Association were able to describe it in March last. It was then as clear to me that contraction must produce these sad results as it now is to our victims that it has done it. But, sir, my efforts to rescue the labor and enterprise of the people and the revenues of the Government from destruction did not end here; for when the act of March 3, 1875, which contained the provision for the restoration of the 10 per cent. which had been stricken from the duties by the act of June 6, 1872, was under consideration, I surprised the protectionists of the country by opposing it, which I did with all my power, because the provisions touching the sinking fund, currency, and the banking system of the country it contained, and the addition of 25 per cent to the tax on tobacco and of 30 per cent. to that on spirits for which it provided, were in my judgment calculated to further prostrate the confidence and productive power of the country. That I was not in error in supposing that that act would enable free-traders to point, as the gentleman from Illinois has done, to the fact that under increased protection production might be made to decline appears from the fact that when the bill was under consideration I said:

The effort to protect the sinking fund and to provide for the exigencies of the Government by re-imposing war taxes in the midst of such general depression as now prevails is as ill-judged as it is inopportune. It will fail of its intended effect. If we adopt this bill, I confidently predict that instead of replenishing the revenues it will deplete them, and that the Administration will meet the Forty-fourth Congress with a demand for a further increase of taxes to supply the deficiency.

The falling off in the revenues demonstrates the poverty of the people. They do not contribute to the Treasury, because they cannot supply their wants. They are unable to consume dutiable and taxable commodities, because we have by our legislation paralyzed their productive power. It is a maxim of mine, and I cannot too often repeat it, that a prosperous people not only supply their wants but gratify their desires; while a people suffering as the laboring people of this country now are, not only do not gratify their desires, but are unable to provide themselves with the necessaries of life.

Water-power hitherto utilized to the advantage of the country and its people now runs to waste; steam-engines and the cunning machinery they once impelled rust in repose; and more than a million of willing working-people are living in enforced idleness and want. Hence it is that the revenues decline, and not by reason of the thrifty economy so eloquently depicted by my colleague on the Committee on Ways and Means, the gentleman from New York, [Mr. Ellis H. Roberts.] Those thrifty laborers who are living on public or private charity are not practicing economy or contributing much to the public welfare.

In view of all these circumstances, to charge that the deplorable condition of the working classes is the result of our protective tariff, as the gentleman from Illinois has done, is like feasting a party on nutritious viands seasoned with strychnine or arsenic, and attributing the consequent suffering and death to the food, and not to the deadly drug.

The issue between the gentleman and myself is fairly made; it is, is protection spoliation, as he affirms, or a right of the laborer and a boon to the consumer, as I maintain?

Now let the experience of nations and the character of their revenue and currency systems settle it. Had the gentleman's devotion to abstract economic science, as the nonsense taught by the Manchester school is poetically called, permitted him to study the present condition of the trade of England, he would not, when pointing to the depressed condition of our industries, have urged us, as he did, to follow her example. It is not easy to undermine or overthrow the power of a country that for more than a century has been the recognized workshop of the world and the acknowledged mistress of the seas, whose commerce has shadowed every sea and navigable river, whose colonies so completely encircle the globe that it is said, with truth, her morning drum beats each hour in the day. To undermine the prosperity of such a country is not the work of a year or decade. It can be effected only by the continued operation of vital influences. Yet, sir, free trade and its inevitable concomitant, internal taxation, have in about the third of a century shaken the foundations of England's commercial and manufacturing supremacy. Her condition is this hour more deplorable than our own in all save the accumulation in the hands of her plutocracy of almost countless capital. It is more than half a century since by the premature resumption of specie payments she impoverished her working-people. Her trade is free. Her money is convertible into gold. She has all the conditions that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MORRISON] would impose upon our country; yet her people are not happy, and cannot be. To escape the effects of these blessings to holders of capital her laborers emigrate by millions, not only to this broad continent, but to the remote and unexplored islands of the sea.

Her exports diminish, while ours increase. The failures in her commercial circles and at the stock exchange far outrun ours in numbers, and in amount of liabilities the excess is still larger. Her condition is a spectacle upon which the nations may gaze with sympathy and pity. Our calamities are but the results of suddenly arrested progress; but hers are the sad proofs of fallen greatness and the unwitting and unwilling surrender of a supremacy the title to which was arrogantly held to be indefeasible.

That these statements shall not rest on my assertion, let me detain the committee while I confirm them by British authority. I submit first a brief paragraph from a letter of the regular Sheffield correspondent of the Iron Age, dated March 21:

THE TIN-PLATE TRADE.

On Thursday a very influential meeting of the Welsh tin-plate trade was held at the Cambrian Hotel, Swansea, twenty-six firms and one hundred and ten mills being represented. The state of trade was discussed, and prices were declared to be simply ruinous. It was unanimously decided that the whole of the works in South Wales should be closed one week in every three up to June 30, commencing April 3, and every member present pledged himself to carry out the resolution under penalty of £500.

This statement does not seem to have much significance upon the question now under consideration. But gentlemen will understand why I quote it when I tell them that they are asked to unite in this conspiracy to diminish the production of tin plates and to raise their price to the American consumer, and that a provision which will effect that purpose is found in line 155 of section 2 of the bill reported by the Committee of Ways and Means. Our people all over the Rocky Mountains, and in the mines, and the interior of the country generally, live upon meat, fish, lobster, oysters, vegetables, and fruit supplied in tin cans. Indeed the store-room in every well-appointed residence in our cities attests the great and increasing demand for tin plates for domestic purposes. Last year we sent $13,000,000 abroad to buy them. Sir, by our large consumption we were largely increasing the price of British plates; and in 1872, gentlemen skilled in the production of tin plates came before the then Committee of Ways and Means, assured them they could get better iron plates in this country than were used in England for tinning, and said to the committee, "If you will give us tin duty free we will undersell the British in our markets." The heavy war duty on tin in pigs, bars, and blocks was repealed by putting it on the free list, and the production of tin plates is now one of our enormous industries, employing many men in the production of iron and rolling and tinning it. And now, in the face of this conspiracy to raise the price of foreign plates by curtailing their production, the Committee of Ways and Means report a bill to impose a duty of 3 cents a pound on raw tin, and thus assist these British conspirators by crushing out American competition.

This is a bill to reduce taxation, is it? A bill to simplify the tariff and reduce the burdens of the people? And yet in view of this information it takes that article, of which we produce none, from the free list and imposes upon it a duty of $66 a ton. The tin-plate trade is not very good in England; but I am not willing to go quite so far to promote its revival.

In his letter of April 10 the same correspondent, writing of more general facts, said:

BRITISH EXPORTS DURING MARCH.

The Board of Trade returns for March again show to disadvantage. The total exports for the month were only worth £17,739,101, as against £18,606,223 last March, and £20,100,814 in March, 1874.

Here in a leader of the London Times of April 3, discussing the budget, it is said:

But the quarter just expired has disappointed this promise. The excise has suddenly declined, as compared with the corresponding quarter of the previous year, by no less than £231,000. This is no doubt a very uncomfortable symptom, for the excise is the best test we have of the prosperity of the mass of the people, and upon the mass of the people, in a very great degree, the stability of our financial system depends. There must have been, during the last quarter, a very considerable reduction in the expenditure of the working classes, and consequently in the wages received and in the work which the wages represent.

The public revenues are being affected by the idleness and consequent poverty of the laboring-people. Here comes Ryland's Iron-Trade Circular, of April 29, the oldest and most valuable of all the organs of the British iron trade, and says:

There is no improvement to report in the demand for iron for shipment. The custom's bill of entry for the ports of Glasgow, Middlesbrough, Cardiff, and Liverpool exhibits but very small quantities, smaller than have been known for a long time past. In addition to this we are informed by merchants, who have hitherto had large transactions in iron, that inquiries are few and far between, and their correspondents assure them that there is no probability of a revival for some time to come. Then we have our friends in the United States who keep us well informed as to the condition of trade in that great country, and from the tone of their reports we do not anticipate any immediate revival from that quarter. The United States is passing through a severe crisis. Its commercial interests have been so rudely shaken that it will be a long time before complete confidence has been restored. We know the American people are quick and sharp when once they resolve upon a course of action, but it seems to take a long time before they can make up their minds to any serious resolution. We have great hopes that the forthcoming exhibition at Philadelphia will do something toward opening the eyes of the Americans to the position in which they are placed by the enormous tariff their Government puts upon the productions of foreign nations, just for the purpose of what is called "fostering home industries," or in other words enriching a few manufacturers at the expense of the whole nation. We print in another place an article on this subject which appeared in the Times during the week, as it so forcibly exhibits the whole question, and we think that the wide-spread circulation of such articles would be of great service to the free-trade party in the States. Not but what the American iron-masters are capable enough in producing iron, and that in great quantities, but as labor enters so largely into the cost of production, and that very article being so dear in the States, iron cannot be made so cheaply there as it can be in the older countries of Europe. When bars are selling here at what may be called a reasonable price they can be sent over to New York and sold for less money than the American article. But this is prevented by the present heavy tariff. During the past year or so an immense quantity of iron has been sold out of store in New York and other places at less money than it cost to make.

The gentleman sneered at the suggestion that protective measures were required to defend the more liberal wages of American workingmen. These practical Englishmen understand the question better than he, and recognize the fact. To further illustrate the depression of British trade, and more especially to show them the terrible competition to which the adoption of this bill would subject our working classes, I again recur to the Sheffield correspondent of the Iron Age, who, in his letter of April 17, said:

TRADES OF SHEFFIELD.

The principal topic of business conversation in this district just now is that relating to the question of getting down the miners' wages. The iron-masters are deeply interested in the problem, seeing that any reduction in the price of coal must inevitably be of service to them. The men employed at the various pits still contend that any drop in their wages would leave them with pay insufficient to maintain their families respectably. The employers, on the other hand, state that their profits are of the most marginal description. It is fully apparent to all outsiders that the contest is one in which the men must inevitably be beaten, as the combination of circumstances is against them. At another time the men may be in a better position, but at this juncture they are guided by new and, comparatively speaking, inexperienced leaders; they are disorganized, and not well provided with funds. The council of the association, then, have resolved to ask their constituents generally to accept a drop of 10 per cent., in the hope that by so doing the masters may be inclined to bring down their requirements somewhat. I have good grounds for stating, however, that the colliery proprietors will insist upon the reduction being 15 per cent., as at first proposed. In the mean time the whole district is in a state of inquietude, and there are at a moderate computation about twenty thousand men out of work. I find that at seventy-three collieries notices have been given, while at twenty-seven collieries the men have received no intimation other than that if the men at the associated collieries gave way they would be expected to do the same.

The iron-stone miners of South Yorkshire employed by Messrs. Newton, Chambers & Co., Thorncliffe Iron-Works and Collieries, and others, have received notice of a reduction of 15 per cent. in wages, but the matter is likely to be compromised by a drop of 10 per cent.

The question of reducing the wages of the local iron-workers is for the present in abeyance, or at any rate I hear of no rupture having arisen. Some of the notices have now expired. Those at the Atlas and Cyclops Works expired on Saturday, as also did the notices at the Staveley Iron-Works, Derbyshire. The whole of the mechanics, foundery-men, and laborers at the Sheepbridge Iron-Works have now received fourteen days' notices terminating contracts, doubtless prior to a reduction of wages. Taken as a whole the district has not been in so unsettled a condition for some years as it is at the present time, and it appears to be by no means unlikely that some weeks may elapse before matters regain their customary working order. In the iron trade there has been no movement of interest during the week. There is very little business in pig-iron of any description and absolutely nothing in merchant iron.

In the Bessemer-steel departments there is a fair amount of activity, particularly in respect of steel rails, which are now quoted at prices which enable the local producers to take orders in the face of the competition of other home districts as well as against Belgian, French, and German competitors.

But I do not stop here. Here is the great financial organ of the world, The Economist, an article in which brings the condition of the country down to May 13, the current month.

I have shown what the board-of-trade returns were for March, and here is an article discussing the returns for the succeeding month:

THE BOARD-OF-TRADE RETURNS FOR APRIL.

The returns of our foreign trade for April are in one respect the most unsatisfactory of any which have appeared during the last two years of depression. While the falling off of the imports in the previous month is more than made up in April, so that for the four months of the current year there is a moderate increase, the exports not only show a diminution but a very considerable one, extending to nearly every article on our export list, and this is by way of addition to a decrease in each of the earlier months of the year. There are some qualifications to be stated which make the return not more, or only a little more, unsatisfactory than those which have lately been issued, but it calls attention, nevertheless, in a forcible manner to the long delay in recovery of our foreign export trade from a condition of most unusual depression.

The decrease of the exports amounts to the large sum of £4,792,000 and 23.7 per cent. for the month, and to £6,976,000 and 9.6 per cent. for the four months. These are the largest, or about the largest, figures of the kind which have appeared during the long depression for any periods of equal length, and, coming after months of falling trade in which there have only been occasional indications of a tendency to recover, they are the more disheartening.

Analyzing the figures in detail, we find that the falling off in the exports is remarkably uniform, comparing the chief articles of our export trade. From the usual tables which we subjoin this will be clearly seen. In every article on our list, without exception, there is a decrease in value ranging in most cases from 10 to 30 per cent., and still higher in a few instances. It is the same with the quantities of the articles exported, with the single important exception of coal, which has increased nearly 20 per cent., although the value has fallen off slightly. Comparing the two tables, it is evident that the falling off in value is more considerable than the falling off in quantity, but the reduction of quantity is also very large.

Altogether, we cannot but look forward with interest to the returns for the next few months, to see whether last month marks the beginning of a new stage of depression or whether the dullness will remain much the same as it has been for several months past. As matters at present stand, it seems hopeless to look for an immediate apparent recovery of any considerable extent, although it is sooner or later inevitable.

So utter is the paralysis of productive industry that the Financier recently stated that there was no market for money and the current rate for loans at the stock exchange on loans at three months is 1⅛ per cent. per annum. My esteemed friend, Henry Carey Baird, returned last week from a visit to France and England, and I find in the Philadelphia Inquirer of Saturday a report of an interview with him. When asked as to the condition of England, he said:

I was assured by one of the most prominent bankers in London, less than a month ago, that never in his experience had he seen anything to equal the disaster, depression, and ruin which, at that moment, surrounded him on every side in England. I asked him if after the crisis of 1866 things were not worse, and he replied that the crash of that period presented no parallel to the present state of affairs; that a class of men who were then unaffected are involved in the financial difficulties of this day. In Manchester, about the 10th of the present month, a panic was momentarily expected, following the numerous and heavy failures and bankruptcies which had there taken place. Throughout England there is a feeling of gloom and depression, and it was stated the other day in a London paper that within a year ten thousand carriages had been put down in that city alone.

But what was the condition in London on Saturday afternoon last, two days ago? The morning papers contain this telegram:

LONDON, May 27.

This afternoon's Globe, in its financial article, says the condition of affairs in the Stock Exchange is little better than a state of panic.

And thus free-trade, hard-money England goes from bad to worse, as any nation ought that legislates in entire disregard of the welfare of its laboring-people, and in its economic theories treats the heart and life, the hope and aspirations of the wealth-producing classes as raw material to be bought in the cheapest market. This is no new doctrine with me, for years ago I said, "The theory that labor—the productive exercise of the skill and muscular power of men who are responsible for the faithful and intelligent performance of civic and other duties—is merely a raw material, and that that nation which pays least for it is wisest and best governed, is inadmissible in a democracy; and when we shall determine to starve the bodies and minds of our operatives in order that we may successfully compete in common markets with the productions of the underpaid and poorly fed peasants of Europe and the paupers of England, we shall assail the foundations of a government which rests upon the intelligence and integrity of its people. To defend our country against this result is the office of a protective tariff, and for this duty it alone is sufficient."

Mr. Chairman, our exports present a pleasing contrast to these sad details. The increase is not very large in value, but in quantity it is immense. The official returns show a steady depreciation of the values of our productions, yet the exports of last year presented a large increase in value over those of the year before. And the first eight months of this fiscal year show an increase of $23,400,000, or considerably over two and one-quarter millions per month. Nor should it be supposed that this is in raw material only. I have here a table of the exports of manufactured articles for the first eight months of 1873–'74, 1874–'75, and 1875–'76. Of such articles we exported in 1874, for the first eight months, $46,000,000; in 1875, $48,000,000; and for the corresponding eight months of 1876, $56,000,000; an increase of $10,000,000 over 1874 and $8,000,000 over last year. Also a statement of exports of domestic products, partly manufactured, during the eight months ending February 29, 1876, and the corresponding periods of the preceeding year, which shows an increase of $2,725,118 in values in the eight months. Gentlemen who will study these tables, copies of which I will hand the reporters, will find that the prices are sometimes little more than half those received in the first year, as is shown by the number of the articles or the pounds or yards as compared with the sum received for them. And if they will bear in mind the fact that there is no shrinking of the face of our bonds or the rate of interest thereon, they will see how many more days' work it now takes to pay $100 of debt or interest than it did when our bonds were purchased with greenbacks, and our own citizens being out of debt were doing business for cash and were able to hold such investments.

If, as the chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means asserts, customs duties are taxes added to the price of commodities, will my friend the chairman of the committee tell me how it is that the exports from free-trade England fall off and those from the protective United States steadily increase? How shall we account for these indisputable facts if it be not by admitting that protection by stimulating the development of a nation's resources and promoting domestic competition cheapens production? Do foreigners buy our productions at greater prices than they can get like ones for from England? In the light of these facts I affirm that a judicious system of protection is a boon to the consumer, and may be demanded as a right by those citizens of a democratic republic whose only estate is their thews and sinews, the cunning of their right hands, and the will to toil for the means of supporting themselves and families and contributing to the public revenues.

The teachings of all history may be invoked in support of these propositions: No nation ever established agriculture, manufactures, and commerce coincidently and in equilibrium, without defending the right of its laboring people to remunerative wages while developing its material resources in competition with nations already in the posession of capital, tools, and established channels of trade.

Before the conquest of India by England, the Hindoos were famed for the delicacy and beauty of their fabrics, and Orme tells us that "on the coast of Coromandel and in the province of Bengal, when at some distance from a high road or principle town, it was difficult to find a village in which every man, woman, and child was not employed in making a piece of cloth," and that "much the greatest part of the whole province was employed in this single manufacture," the progress of which he says "includes no less than a description of the lives of the inhabitants of Indostan." But the prevalence of British free-trade has changed all that, and the condition of the people of India has become a conscious reproach to the whole people of England. Turkey, whose resources are equal to those of the most richly endowed sections of our country furnishes another illustration of the terrible influence of free-trade, and Ireland, another with which our people are more familiarly acquainted.

For the beneficient influence of a proper system of defense or protection to labor the advocate of that cause can point with confidence to Germany since the establishment of the Zollvercin, to the modern history of Russia, of Sweden and Denmark, and especially to the prosperous condition of France and Belgium in these days of general manufacturing and commercial depression.

[Here the hammer fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. The hour of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BURCHARD, of Illinois. I move that the gentleman have leave to proceed.

Mr. FULLER. How much time does the gentleman want?

Mr. KELLEY. I cannot tell how long; my materials are before me and loose. The other side have had nearly four hours on this bill.

Many MEMBERS. "Go on!" "Go on!"

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection the gentleman will proceed.

There was no objection.

Mr. KELLEY. I call attention to the promised table of our export of manufactured articles which I now send to the desk, and which I hope gentlemen will study carefully:

Now let us turn to France and learn what her condition is, and whether she practices free trade or protection. Let me here refer again to the statement of my friend, and see how he found the trade and finances of France. Says Mr. Baird:

As is well known, France was obliged to pay to Germany a war fine of $1,100,000,000. This fine was paid with a loss, in her direct intercourse with Germany, of but little over $100,000,000 of gold and silver, it having been actually paid almost entirely in bills of exchange drawn against merchandise shipped to Germany and other countries. To-day France is the only country in Europe which enjoys any degree of prosperity, and bears every evidence of as high a degree of vitality as she ever before possessed even at the most flourishing period of the empire. This appearance has a real and substantial basis, with the exception probably of the silk industry of Lyons and the shipping trade of Marseilles, whose dullness is explainable in the depressed condition of all the countries with which they trade.

REPORTER. To what cause, Mr. Baird, do you think this remarkable and exceptional prosperity of France is due?

Mr. BAIRD. To the fact that for seventy years she has maintained an intelligent and efficient system of protection to her industries, and that those industries have reached a higher degree of perfection than has ever before been seen by those of any country in the history of the world; and, furthermore, to the suspension of specie payments by the Bank of France in September, 1870, the immediate resultant increase in her paper currency from $275,000,000 to $600,000,000, and notwithstanding the accumulation by import of gold and silver amounting to not less than $350,000,000 since January 1, 1874, a contraction in the circulation of the Bank of France of not over $120,000,000 from the highest point, thus making the instrument of payment subservient to the work that is needed to be performed, and not making the commerce of the people subservient to an arbitrarily limited volume of money, as we have stupidly done in this country since the year 1865.

REPORTER. Has the Bank of France yet resumed specie payments?

Mr. BAIRD. No, and it is not proposed that she shall until January 1, 1878.

REPORTER. Is specie in circulation to any extent to-day in France?

Mr. BAIRD. Yes, both gold and silver to as great an extent as I ever saw on any previous visit to that country, it being a matter of perfect indifference to any banker, merchant, shop-keeper, or hotel proprietor, whether he gives or receives money in large or small quantities in gold, silver, or paper.

REPORTER. To what do you attribute this condition of things?

Mr. BAIRD. To the fact that by the development of her industries, already referred to, France has made herself a creditor nation with every country with which she trades, and has accumulated the precious metals to the amount of not less than $1,250,000,000, for which she has no use except as the basis of her banking system and the commerce among her people. Thus, with a metallic and paper currency of not less than $1,730,000,000, it is in the power of the people to dispense almost entirely with the credit system, and the Frenchman stands to-day with the reputation of being the best pay in the world.

Will the chairman or any member of the committee who voted to report this bill affirm that free trade or low duties has given this exceptional prosperity to France? Here is an official copy of the French tariff. [Holding up a volume.] Look at it, gentlemen; it is a matter of copious detail, filling one hundred and ninety-eight imperial quarto pages. France admits nothing free but raw material with which she cannot supply herself. If she can produce the greater part of what she requires, she protects the workers in that article by imposing a duty upon the quantity required to supplement the native supply. No manufactured article enters her market free of duty.

Here [holding up the volume] is the embodied experience of a century, during which bloody revolutions wrought changes of dynasties and the forms of government, but never shook the confidence of the government or people in the wisdom and beneficence of the protective system. The prohibition by which she now excludes our cutlery was ordained in December, 1796, since when it has stood without change. Our cottons, yarns and fabrics, are excluded by a prohibition established in 1809. From the time of the treaty with Cobden, known as the Chevalier-Cobden treaty, British authors have constantly alluded to France as a free-trade country. Yet, sir, no such all-embracing and ingeniously protective body of law as the tariff, a copy of which I now hold, was ever put together by legislative body or imperial decree.

To give you an idea of the ingenuity with which France protects the labor of the country, I will call your attention in passing to one or two points. I take this page to which I have opened casually; it is in relation to woolen yarns. "Unbleached, 840 francs to 100 kilograms, or 221½ pounds." But if colored, dyed, printed in any way, they are prohibited. Now in regard to the treaty tariff. If spun simply, so that 100 kilograms will measure 30,500 meters, the duty, under the treaty or so-called reciprocal trade tariff, is 32.50 francs; but if spun so as to measure 100,500 meters, the duty is 130 francs, ascending by scales of 10,000 meters with an equal increase of duty. So, too, of fabrics. The number of threads to the pound regulates the duty, which increases with the number and consequent fineness of the threads. But I earnestly request gentlemen to examine the translations I now send to the desk.

The French rates of duty are in black letter; our own are indicated by Roman letter.

The headings of the pages are in themselves most significant. Gentlemen will observe that one column marks the article to which the duties attach, another the units on which duties are computed, another the date of the law establishing the duty; and in the treaty tariff the third and last the duties. But over the general tariff there are three others, the first two marking sometimes the same rates of duties, and the third always denoting an increase of three francs, a special duty imposed to protect French shipping and promote direct trade between her and the country whose productions she consumes as raw material. The first of the three is for the products of European countries, the second for articles imported directly from countries outside of Europe, and the third those imported from European markets, or such as have not been brought from the country of production directly to France. Above these three columns gentlemen will notice a paragraph stating that all the duties of the general tariff were increased 4 per cent. by the law of December 30, 1873, which was the last formal declaration made by the French government against any tendency to free trade.

This consummately protective tariff has made France the imperial power she is in her republican days. By the fact that her debt is held by her own people and that her constantly increasing exports make other countries her debtors, she is financially the master of the world. Nor can bullionists claim this as a triumph of their theories, for a large part of her currency consists of inconvertible bank-notes, no more convertible or redeemable than our greenbacks, except in so far as the government of France, having required the bank to issue inconvertible notes and made them legal tender, has the honesty to receive them in payment of all dues, and thus keeps them at par with her metallic money. With irredeemable bank-notes, which have no other advantages than those I have suggested over our greenbacks, and which, according to the theory of our contractionists, enhance the price of her productions by inflating the currency, protective France exported to free-trade England during the last year two hundred and thirty million dollars' worth, while free-trade England, having impaired her productive power by accepting the plausible fallacies of the Manchester school of economists, could send her but $65,000,000 in part payment therefor. England, under free trade, has ceased to be the workshop of the world. Protective France raises beets and converts them into sugar for the people of England; France makes the silks and laces that clothe her women and the exquisite wall-paper, tapestry, and bijouterie that adorn the salons of her upper classes. The great "workshop of the world" adopted free trade and challenged the world to competition, and the world is beating her in her own marts. Distant Japan finds profit in sending her bricks, Norway makes her doors and sashes and the frames of both, Belgium and Germany compete in London, Liverpool, and even Sheffield in every form of heavy iron and steel goods, while we find a steadily growing market in those cities for our axes, saws, pitchforks, and an increasing variety of implements. Meanwhile, those of her discontented working-people who have the means flee to distant lands in the hope of finding steady and fair wages; and the only article in the whole extended list of her exports which increases is coal with which to create power to keep in motion the productive machinery of her competitors for her home markets.

Why is it that protective France increases her exports and multiplies her markets and that the exports of free-trade England diminish and foreigners contest her home markets with her? It is because protection, which is the right of the laborer, is also a boon to the consumer and cheapens commodities by utilizing otherwise neglected resources and stimulating domestic competition.

I have heard gentlemen assert on this floor that France by entering into the Cobden-Chevalier reciprocity treaty, or conventional tariff, indicated a decided tendency toward free trade. I will not discuss that question. Sir Edward Sullivan has done it effectively in his admirable work on Protection of Native Industry, and has opened the mysteries of that treaty to the popular gaze. Without detaining the committee by reading them, I will ask the reporters to insert a portion of his remarks on the subject, that gentlemen may examine the question from the stand-point of an enlightened English nobleman's view:

At the same time that the question of the French treaty is being freely discussed, and among manufacturers and operatives generally condemned in this country, the same spirit of animosity is being displayed toward it in France.

This fact is joyfully seized by the supporters of the treaty in this country as an argument in favor of its continuance. It is argued that two negatives make an affirmative; that what is supposed by each to be bad must be good for both.

It is argued that French operatives and manufacturers would not grumble at the French treaty with England unless they suffered from English competition, and that their suffering must be our gain; but this is entirely a misapprehension; it is the result of the national habit of magnifying our own importance. It is not English competition that worries and frightens the French operative; it is Prussian, Austrian, Swiss, and Belgian competition that is the thorn in their side. It is further stated that the French market is inundated with Swiss tissues, which are produced at a lower price than French ones, and thus the prices of Zürich regulate the French market. (See Mr. Lionel West's Consular Report, 1869.) It is not the English treaty that they object to; it is the principle on which it is founded; it is free trade in every shape, in its most restricted as in its fullest sense that they complain of. Their efforts are turned against the French treaty first of all because it is approaching the end of its first term of probation, and they fancy it can be easily repealed, whereas it must be a work of time to alter the whole of their commercial arrangements. Certainly in the face of this retrograde agitation by the only nation that has hitherto tried free trade in its mildest form, its advocates in this country have no right to tell the operative class that their principles are spreading over the world; it is a shame so to gull those whose very existence depends upon whether it is so or not.

The objects and intentions and anticipations of Mr. Cobden and those who supported his policy in negotiating the French treaty were perfectly honest; he believed it was another step toward free trade; he found that all his prophecies and anticipation of universal reciprocity had failed, and he naturally grasped at this idea of negotiating a commercial treaty with France as promising some small opening for the realization of his hopes.

Individually, I never could understand the policy or the sense of the commercial treaty; it always appeared to me absurd to go through the form of negotiating a treaty when we had it in our power to do all we have done in the matter just as easily without it; there could be no earthly object in placing ourselves under an obligation to the French for no reason at all.

If it had been a case of reciprocity, of removing corresponding duties on certain articles of manufacture on both sides, there would have been some reason in it; but this was not the case at all; we removed the customs duties absolutely, entirely from forty-three articles, most of them articles of French industry; they, on the contrary, did not remove the duties from one single article of English industry. Now, there was no necessity for having a treaty to enable us to do this; we could have done it just as well without one. When you know it is a case of heads you win, tails I lose, surely it is hardly worth the trouble of tossing.

We gave them bread, while they returned our kindness by handing us a stone; but still they gave it to us in such a grand style and we accepted it so humbly and so thankfully, that most of us believed we really had got a Roland for our Oliver. Of course, for decency's sake, they were obliged to go through the form of an exchange; and this they did in their own way; they did not abolish the duty on any single article of English manufacture; they contented themselves with reducing the duties on a certain number. In some cases they lowered the 50 or 60 per cent. ad valorem customs duties to 30 or 15 per cent.; in some cases they actually substituted for total prohibition a 30 per cent. ad valorem duty.

They followed a very intelligible and I believe a very sound principle; they admitted at low rates all raw materials required for manufactures, coal, iron, cotton, wool, &c., with the machinery necessary to turn them into manufactured products, and continued to impose ad valorem duties that were actually prohibitory on all our manufactured goods; they did not in one single case lower their customs duties to a point that would allow any article of English manufacture to be sold in their markets at a profit that was not already in that position. There have always been a few articles we produce, and they do not, or not so cheap and so good as we do; and these they must buy from us under any condition. To prohibit them would be absurd. These continue, but they have not been added to in one single case.

Now, if it was only a question of the English treaty, French manufacturers would be quite safe, and we should hear no sound of grumbling; the advantages are all on their side; they have taken care to fix a rate of duty that excludes English-manufactured goods from their market; but unfortunately the favored-nation clause admits into France Belgian, Prussian, Austrian, and Swiss articles of manufacture at the same ad valorem duty that is imposed on British goods of the same kind; the duty that is sufficient to exclude in the latter case is not sufficient in the former; and consequently many French industries find themselves galled by foreign-manufactured produce admitted under the wing of the English treaty, but having nothing to do with English industries.

The French were merely throwing dirt in our eyes when they reduced their ad valorem duties from 50 or 30 to 15 per cent. on articles that would be equally as well prohibited by an ad valorem duty of 5 per cent., or in changing total prohibition for a 30 per cent. ad valorem duty on articles that could not be sold at a profit, even if admitted without any duty at all; yet this is actually what was done!

Of the forty-three articles on which the French reduced their tariff from total prohibition, or from 50 or 60 per cent. ad valorem to 30 or 15 per cent. ad valorem, there are not five articles of English manufacture that would not be excluded by an ad valorem duty of 5 per cent. Never, I believe, since the world was made has such a ridiculous fiasco of what is called a commercial treaty been negotiated. To call that a treaty where one side gives everything, the other nothing, is absurd; call it a cession, if you like, not a treaty.

When one considers its original conditions and examines its results, it is wonderful its authors had the face to propose it and that the country should have entertained it without shouts of laughter. In admitting every article of French manufacture into this country free of duty, without in any way securing a corresponding advantage from France, we bargained away the manufacturing birthright of our producing class for a mess of pottage; we bartered the prosperity, even the existence, of a number of our industries, with the hundreds of thousands of workers depending on them, for nothing—actually nothing. It will be asked, is cheap claret nothing, or cheap silks nothing? But we could have reduced the duties on wine or silks at any moment we liked; there was no necessity to consult the French or negotiate a commercial treaty for that.

The French treaty was ostensibly negotiated in favor of the manufacturing classes in this country, and of what conceivable use are cheap clarets and cheap silks to them?

Of course the belief was that our superior excellence, energy, and "appetite" for hard work would enable our operatives to sell many articles with an ad valorem duty of 30 to 15 per cent that had hitherto been entirely prohibited.

Such must have been Mr. Cobden's belief when he negotiated the treaty. He would never have imperiled the prosperity of a number of our manufacturing industries for the sake of the luxury and comfort of the wealthy classes. He could not have foreseen he was legislating for the consumer only at the expense of the producer. He must have had visions of increased prosperity for the producer also; but he was mistaken.

No new market has been opened to us. We do not sell one single article in France now that we did not sell before the treaty. Our liberality has met with no return whatever. The French manufacturers and operatives are no more inclined to reciprocity now than they were before the treaty; on the contrary, far from inclining to reciprocity in any degree whatever, they show unmistakably their intention to stick literally and absolutely to the word of their bargain; they will exact the full pound of flesh, and ridicule the idea of making any sacrifice, however fair and just, to the principle of free trade.

Take an example. English manufacturers may send gray goods to France under bond and have them printed there and returned to England duty free. But if gray goods are brought from France to England, printed here and returned, they are not re-admitted into France without the payment of an ad valorem duty of 15 per cent.

Several calico-printers of Manchester wrote to the French government pointing out the palpable injustice of this law; but the minister of commerce refused to modify the existing order of things, and was candid enough to tell the reason why. "As to the reduction which you solicit in the name of several English firms, I regret it is not possible to meet your views, for I cannot find any legal motive to consent to such a reduction. If our laws admit in certain cases a temporary admission of foreign goods in order to procure work for French hands, they do not allow any such facility to a temporary exportation, the result of which would be, on the contrary, to carry work to foreign countries to the direct prejudice of our own manufactures." This is the sort of reciprocity and friendly feeling that have resulted from the French treaty.

It is certainly marvelous to our ears to hear a public minister openly deciding in favor of a preferential market for native industries instead of devising every possible means for encouraging and giving advantage to foreign rivals.

The plums of the commercial treaty have so entirely fallen to the lot of the French, that it is difficult now to conceive what reasoning could possibly have influenced Mr. Cobden, as representing his own countrymen, in negotiating it. If a committee of the luxurious leaders of fashion of both sexes had drawn up a treaty that was to benefit them exclusively at the expense of the rest of the community, I could perfectly well understand it; but that it should be the work of a man professing to advance the interests of the workers at the expense of the luxurious class appears incomprehensible.

Every single one of the thirty-three or thirty-four articles admitted duty free from France by the treaty are articles of luxury or convenience, whose use is entirely confined to the wealthier and more luxurious classes in the community; not a single one is, directly or indirectly, or in any degree whatever, of any service or advantage to the working classes. Not one single article admitted duty free is either consumed by the working-classes, or cheapens his labor, or adds to his comfort, or, directly or indirectly, benefits him in the remotest way; but, on the other hand, all of them are the articles he produces. Run your eye over the following list of articles admitted duty free by the French treaty, and ask yourself if it is not incredible that this is the work of a man whose sympathies were decidedly with the poor as against the rich; with the consumers of necessaries as against the consumers of luxuries; with the producers of luxuries as against the consumers of them.

Articles admitted into England duty free according to the treaty of commerce, signed January 23, 1860:

Agates and carneliana, set.
Arms of every description.

Articles covered with copper by galvanic process.
Brocade of silver and gold.
Brass and bronze manufactures.
Corks.
Canes, walking sticks, &c.
Cutlery and other articles of steel, iron, &c.
Coverlets, worsted gloves, &c.
Clocks, watches, and opera-glasses.
China and porcelain ware.
Emb roideries and needle-work.
Fancy ornaments of steel or iron.
Feathers, dressed or not.
Gloves, stockings, socks, &c.
Gloves, and other leather articles of clothing.
Goats' and other hair manufacture.
Grapes.
Hats, of whatever substance.
Handkerchiefs, and other manufactures not enumerated.
Jewelry, set.
Lucifers of every description.
Leather manufactures.
Lace manufactured of cotton, worsted, silk, or linen.
Manufactures of iron and steel.
Machinery and mechanical instruments.
Millinery and artificial flowers.
Manufactures of caoutchouc and gutta-percha.
Musical instruments.
Manufactures of lead.
Oils.
Perfumery.
Percussion caps.
Raw fruits.
Sulphuric acid.
Stone and earthen ware.
Sulphate of quinine.
Salts of morphine.
Worsted and woolen shawls.

It is no exaggeration to say that every article admitted is more or less an article of luxury; not a single one is an article of necessity. You cannot pick out a single article that is not or was not produced in this country; not one that is in the most limited degree consumed by the working-classes.

The only possible object that the friend of the working-classes could have had in admitting these articles duty free into England was that articles of British manufacture should in return be admitted duty free into France; it is the only ground on which such a step could have been taken. Now a great number of these articles are specialties of France in general and of Paris especially. They always have been and always will be produced there cheaper than in England. It is only by the help of a small amount of protection they have been able to exist in England at all. To make the trade in such articles perfectly free and to admit them into our markets on a perfect equality with our own is simply to hand over to foreigners the monopoly of the supply, to give them the whole trade at once.

The effect of this suicidal policy is not so immediately evident, because the industries that have suffered most are, with the exception of silk, small industries, employing limited communities, working at their own homes or in small shops, and without any influential capitalist to represent their distress. No immense body of men, like the cotton-workers, are thrown out of work at once. If there had been, the treaty would not have lasted a year, or we should have had a revolution. But numerous smaller bodies have been thrown out of work, a number of small industries are partially or entirely ruined, and it is this that causes the distress and misery that now overflow the manufacturing districts.

On the other hand, France, in return for our liberality in admitting so many of her special industries duty free, agreed to admit the following articles, many of them also her special industries, with the modest ad valorem duty of 30 per cent., to be reduced at her option in a certain number of years to 15 per cent., but liable also to be increased to meet excise and other inland duties and taxes:

1. Brandies and spirits.
2. Brass wire.
3. Carriages.
4. Cabinet-ware.
5. Chemical productions.
6. Common soap.
7. China and porcelain ware.
8. Cotton manufactures, cotton yarns.
9. Cloth list.
10. Cutlery.
11. Extracts of dye-woods.
12. Garancine.
13. Crystal.
14. Glass mirrors and plate.
15. Horse-hair manufactures.
16. Hosiery.
17. Haberdashery.
18. Iron forged in lumps or prism.
19. Manufacture of hair.
20. Manufacture of waste and floss silk.
21. Manufacture of silk and other kinds.
22. Manufacture of flax and hemp.
23. Mixed manufactures of every description.
24. Manufactures of caoutchouc and gutta-percha.
25. Metal wares.
26. Machinery, mechanical instruments.
27. Pig and cast iron.
28. Plated articles.
29. Prepared skins.
30. Refined sugar.
31. Rock-crystal bottles.
32. Stoneware and earthenware.
33. Silk manufactures.
34. Ships and boats.
35. Tumeric in powder.
36. Worsted and woolen yarns.
37. Worsted and woolen manufactures.
38. Yarns of flax and hemp.
39. Yarns of hair.

Now there are not five articles among all these that an ad valorem duty of 30 or 15 per cent. does not exclude entirely or tax at a sum that leaves no profit to the importer. A great many of these articles are also specialties of the French that they can always produce cheaper and better than we can. Is it not rather laughing at our beards to admit English brandies, silk, glass, crystal, mirrors, plate-glass, china, carriages, cabinet-ware, refined sugar, at an ad valorem duty of 15 per cent., when they are actually produced as cheap or cheaper in France than in England. But although the government of France took good care not to allow free entry to a single manufactured article that could in any degree injure any of her existing industries, she took every pains to introduce as early as possible every article that could stimulate or create new ones. She wanted raw material and machinery, and every facility was eagerly seized for introducing them.

Either the most extraordinary ignorance exists among our free-trade professors respecting the relative effect of making England a free port on the manufacturing industries of France and England, or there is an amount of willful misrepresentation that does them little credit. In 1865 the total exports from England to France amounted to twenty-five and one-half millions sterling; the exports from France to England amounted to fifty three millions, of which over forty millions were French products and manufactures.

The relative value of this international trade is shown more by its nature than by its amount. It was nearly as follows: 72 per cent. of our exports to France were raw materials, (seven-eighths of which were foreign and colonial produce merely passing through the country, and one-eighth coal and iron;) 16 per cent. were half-raw materials, chiefly yarns of different descriptions, on which most of the labor remained to be done in France; 12 per cent. only were fully-manufactured articles, a very large proportion of which consisted in the machinery of all kinds required to manufacture the raw and half-raw materials we supplied them with. Our manufactured goods paid duties from 27½ per cent. on glass and potteries to 20 per cent. on cutlery; 13 per cent. on cotton to 7½ per cent. on metal work.

Of our imports from France 16 per cent. were raw materials, all home produce consisting chiefly of brandy, wines, oil, corn, &c., true produce of the soil, annual and inexhaustible, and on which a vast amount of labor had been employed; 31 per cent. were half-raw materials; and 52½ per cent. were fully manufactured articles, on which all the labor was employed in France and all of which were admitted duty free in England.

It is thus a fact that 88 per cent. of the articles exported from England to France in 1865 consisted of foreign and colonial raw produce, on which no labor had been expended in this country, and of half-raw materials, on which comparatively little had been employed, and of the coal and iron necessary to manufacture them; while of the remaining 12 per cent., a very considerable portion consisted of spinning and weaving and other machinery necessary to extend the manufacturing industries of the country.

This was in 1865. Take a later date. In the debate in the French Chambers, January 18, 1870, Monsieur Johnstone said: "Our exports to England are four times as large as our importations from that country; we have exported goods to the value of 490,006,000 francs more than we have imported."

And still, in the face of statements and facts such as these, we find free-trade orators and free-trade penny-a-liners calling on the producing class to be thankful for the blessings they derive from free trade. According to this statement of the exchange of the manufactured products of the two countries, in 1865 the French exported to us seven times the value of manufactured goods we exported to them. To do this, they must have expended seven times as much in wages and found occupation for seven times as many hands.

If it is the case that the proportion of wages expended on manufactured articles is 50 per cent. of the cost, this twenty-one millions sterling of manufactured goods imported from France represents ten and a half millions of wages that have been paid to French work-people in producing them. To the extent that these twenty-one millions' worth of French-manufactured goods have replaced British manufactured goods of a similar description, to that extent have our operative class lost wages that would, if a protective duty had existed, have come to them. It is easy to see how unequally this affects the two classes, consumers and producers: the average difference in cost between English-manufactured goods and similar kinds of foreign goods that compete with them in the English market is from 5 to 12½ per cent., say 7 per cent.; the proportion of wages spent on them is in both cases much the same, say 50 per cent., or one-half. Suppose manufactured goods from France, Germany, or Belgium to the value of twenty millions replace similar goods of English manufacture of the equal value in our home trade, our manufacturers lose their manufacturing profit on twenty millions, which may fairly be put at 10 per cent. or two millions; our operative class lose their wages, which would have amounted to 50 per cent., or ten millions; whereas the consumers would save 7 per cent. on twenty millions, or about one and a half millions sterling. So that on the admission of every twenty-millions' worth of manufactured goods there is a loss to the manufacturing and operative community of twelve millions, as against the saving to the consumer of one and a half millions.

But if home articles of manufacture had been consumed instead of foreign, all of the twelve millions would have remained in the country, fructifying, creating industries, spreading enterprise and energy, &c., taking its share of the burdens and taxes of the country; and, moreover, vast amounts of raw material of home production, coal and iron, would have been employed, giving employment to thousands of workmen and stimulating the endless number of trades and occupations that are indirectly protected by active manufacturing operations. The loss to the community of allowing our capital to be diverted from home to foreign industries is complete, and if carried far enough, would become fatal to the actual existence of the whole country; but, indeed, as a rule, the consumer does not really benefit to the extent of 7 per cent. on the value of foreign manufactures, or anything like it; 1 or 2 per cent. or less will always divert orders in any article of consumption. We have assumed the foreigners have from 5 to 12½ per cent., say 7, in hand; but they do not give it all to the consumer; on the contrary, they only give just so much as will secure them the preference over the home producer in the market; 1 per cent. or 2 may be sufficient for this; if the English producer drops his price 1 or 2 per cent. to meet them, they drop theirs to secure orders; but they do not sell cheaper than they are obliged to, or give away a greater portion of their 7 per cent. than is absolutely necessary. In manufactured articles of equal quality ½ per cent. will often turn an order, especially in large transactions; and if a foreign article of equal value is offered at only ½ per cent. cheaper than the English article, it will get the preference. It does not at all follow that, because the foreign manufacturer can afford to take 7 per cent. less than the English manufacturer, therefore he does so; he takes off as little as he can, but the existence of this difference in price gives him the constant whip-hand of the English manufacturer, and enables him always to undersell him. Of course it will be replied to this that if foreign goods were prohibited the English manufacturer might raise his price to what he liked; but prohibition is folly; nobody now talks of prohibition; all that is ever asked is a duty that will put the British and foreign manufacturers and operatives on a level, and take away from the English consumer the constant inducement to purchase foreign manufactures instead of his own. From 7 to 12 per cent. ad valorem would do this. The English producer would thus get his fair share of the home consumption, but he would be prevented making any oppressive use of protection to impose too much on the consumer.

It is using the a non causa pro causa form of argument, giving the wrong reason for the right one, to attribute to the French treaty our increased trade with France; it is simply part of the cosmopolitan increase of trade, the general distribution of wealth and science, that has extended commerce in every direction, spite of free trade or protection. We should have sold just as much to France if we had retained our customs duties on their goods as we have done by removing them; they would still have bought from us all we produced cheaper or better than they could, or what they could not produce at all; but their manufactured goods would not have replaced ours to the extent they have done if they had been weighted with an ad valorem duty of 15 per cent.

The French treaty has stimulated no new industry in England, but it has ruined many; no manufactured goods whatever are admitted into France that we did not sell equally well before the treaty, and we should sell just as much if it was abolished to-morrow. Since 1857 we have increased our exports to Greece, China,

Egypt, Hanse Towns, Turkey, British India, Denmark, Prussia, Belgium, in a larger relative degree, without the assistance of any commercial treaty, than we have to France with one. Holland is the only country of any importance in Europe that has not increased her import trade with us to a greater extent than France. This particular treaty, therefore, instead of stimulating the export of our manufactured products, appears almost to have hampered it.

Public men have stated in addressing the working classes that our exports of cotton to France alone exceeded thirteen millions per annum; and they have asked them what they would have done but for this market for such a large portion of their produce; but they knew perfectly well that nine-tenths of this cotton exported to France was either in the raw state, merely passing through the country, or cotton in a half-manufactured state. Misrepresentations of the comparative competing powers of ourselves and foreigners are cruel deceits to practice on the ignorance of the operative class, and they have a perfect right to, and in all probability will some day, resent them. The quantity of manufactured cotton exported to France is very small, and is decreasing every year; in 1868 it was 30 per cent. less than in 1866, and in 1869 it is lower still. To say that the increase of our exports to France is owing to the commercial treaty is not true; to say that our increased imports from France is the result of the commercial treaty is true.

The French treaty was negotiated in such a slipshod manner, so entirely with a view to French interests, and with such an absolute indifference to every British interest, except cotton, that a careful sampling of the products of France and England, and comparison of prices was never properly made; we actually knew nothing of the comparative cost and qualities of the manufactured goods we were admitting into competition with our own industries. We actually did not care to examine both sides of the bargain; if we had done so, and an accurate pricing and sampling had been made and published, it is impossible Parliament could have sanctioned a bargain at once so unreasonable and one-sided, and so evidently ruinous to our industrial classes. We chose to assume we were in every industrial respect superior to the French; that we could beat them in anything we chose to turn our hands to; the result has proved the very reverse. But although the gentlemen who so kindly negotiated the treaty knew nothing of these matters, others did so; the able Paris correspondent of the Manchester Examiner and Times, June, 1867, writes: "My own impression on pricing French calicoes six months before the treaty was that certain classes were actually cheaper than similar descriptions by our first and largest makers; and on sending over a few hundred pieces of grays to Manchester, they, to the surprise of every one in the trade, sold readily at a profit, and were the precursors of the large importation of French calicoes that has since followed."

Six months before the treaty was signed, it was known to any one who would take the trouble to inquire, that certain qualities of calicoes could be manufactured in France and sold in England at a profit; and if the same reasonable inquiry had been extended to the other thirty or forty articles of manufacture admitted into England duty free it would have been ascertained that nearly every one of them could be produced in France as cheap or cheaper than in England, and that therefore an ad valorem duty of 15 per cent., plus the cost of carriage, on English goods, was absolute prohibition.

I have always thought that unless there was some great necessity for doing so, it was the height of cruelty and injustice to consign to immediate or prospective ruin so many of the smaller industries of the country. What object had Messrs. Cobden and Gladstone in going out of their way to offer every facility to foreign manufacturers and operatives to compete with our home industries? Was England getting too rich? Were our workmen getting too high wages, or our manufacturers too high a profit, or did they believe that the British consumer was imposed upon, and that this treaty was necessary to relieve them from the tyranny of the producers? They cannot have wished to deprive British operatives of their work in favor of French operatives, or to sacrifice their interests to those of the wealthy classes in England, but they have done so most completely and entirely. The French treaty has added immensely to the comfort and luxury of the wealthy classes, and has enriched to a wonderful extent the foreign manufacturers and operatives; but it has not in the slightest degree facilitated the admission of one single article that the operative class consumes, or that in any manner or degree promotes their comfort or well-being; and it has deprived many thousands of Englishmen of their craft, and reduced them to idleness and poverty.

Almost every one of the French manufactured articles that we admit duty free are, as a rule, sold at a higher price in France than in England; the French manufacturer will lower his price almost below cost to beat the English producer in the British market, but he yet manages to secure a fair average price on his whole make by selling at a much higher price in his own market where he is protected; and is thus enabled most unfairly and most unjustly to filch their market from the British workers.

Now, this is a disadvantage that is so manifestly unjust that one would suppose our statesmen would, in the simple exercise of their duty toward their own countrymen, seek to remedy it. But no; the theory of free trade is right, even though the practice is fatal. There is nothing like dying by a fine sword; if we are to perish, let us perish in a noble cause in laying down our manufacturing life for our neighbors! Such conduct may be very sublime, but it is wonderfully stupid: c'est beau, mais c'est bête.

The gentleness and tenderness with which the French government treated their home industries, and the care with which they sought to guard them from any sudden dangers or loss from foreign competition, was in direct opposition to our treatment of our own industries, whose prosperity or existence was threatened by our commercial legislation. In those cases in France where a fall in the ad valorem duty from 30 to 15 per cent. was decided on, four years were allowed manufacturers and operatives to prepare for the contest, to improve their make, &c. Not so with us; no time or preparation was allowed to our operatives or manufacturers. On the contrary, the possibility of any change was persistently denied till the mine was completed and exploded under our feet. No warning was given to the silk-manufacturer to prepare for unrestricted foreign competition, but suddenly, as a thief in the night, the bill was introduced that has almost annihilated an industry yielding some seven or eight millions sterling.

When the ruin of the silk trade consequent on the French treaty appeared to be inevitable, the operatives and manufacturers were told they must improve their machinery, their designs, their quality, and manufacture cheaper and better than they had hitherto done; but to ruin a trade first, to throw it into bankruptcy, and then to tell it to go ahead is absurd. That is not the way to stimulate its efforts and its energy, to bring new capital and enterprise into it. On the contrary, the very causes that make fresh capital and energy necessary, make it impossible to get them. Energy, enterprise, capital, steadily leave an industry that is declining or threatened with disaster.

Those who negotiated the French treaty might have known, if they had taken the trouble to inquire, that in many points the French were more skillful manufacturers of silk than ourselves, and could beat us in any open market.

Instead of at once throwing our silk trade into a competition that was hopeless, they should have given them time and assistance to improve their product up to the standard of those who they were to compete with, to tell them to do so afterward was the most insulting injustice.

They had no right, unless it was absolutely unavoidable, to remove from them without warning the protection that was necessary to their existence, and on which they had counted when investing their capital. The object, no doubt, was to stimulate the cotton industry; but by what new code is it considered just to ruin one industry on the chance of advancing another?

The direct object of all the free-trade legislation we have seen in England, and of the French treaty especially, was to increase the area of our cotton sales. Every other industry, every other interest, was considered below notice when compared with cotton; if smaller industries suffered or were ruined, so much the worse for them, cotton at any rate must profit! The idea was to stimulate the great industry at any cost. The French treaty was the most selfish piece of commercial legislation this country has ever seen; it was originated by cotton men, negotiated by cotton men, actuated solely by cotton interests, and with the most supreme indifference for any other manufacturing interest except cotton.

It was said foreign competition in our home market would stimulate our cotton industries, put into them more energy, more competition, more capital. No doubt universal free trade or reciprocal free trade would have done this and more; but partial free trade, merely proclaiming England a free port, has had the very opposite effect. The perfectly free admission of foreign manufactures into England, without any reciprocity of return, has depressed and disheartened both manufacturers and operatives, has paralyzed many of the industries of the country, and has driven capital into other channels. It is success, confidence, security, that brings capital, energy, enterprise, progress, into any business. There is no want of these elements when a trade is good, but when it is depressed the most opposite results will be immediately visible. When the silk manufacturers complain their trade is ruined, conscientious free-traders tell them they ought to improve and cheapen their make; with a prosperous and increasing trade they might do so, with a bad and losing one it is impossible. To ruin a trade, and then urge it to improve, is rather like robbing a man of his purse and then asking him to pay for your dinner.

The difference between the theorist and the fanatic is very slight. The theorist becomes enamored of his theory with an illogical intensity that very much resembles fanaticism. He cannot prove his theory is true, though at heart he firmly believes it is, and the incredulity of those who doubt it irritates him into a blinder and more implicit worship. He becomes impatient, unreasonable, indignant at any sign or expression of doubt. This is literally the case with many free-traders. They have raised up a golden image for the worship of the world, and any one who dares to hint its feet are clay, &c., is in their eyes guilty of sacrilege. They will allow no argument, nothing in disparagement of the perfection of its beauty. Their belief is of that nature that treats the doubts of others as knavish, stupid, criminal. Now this is very absurd, for after all this golden image is only a theory. It has no existence. And they can scarcely expect universal belief in what, from its nature, must always be incapable of proof.

Often when I have discussed free trade with free-traders, and it has been conceded that the British operative, taxed and weighted as he is, cannot in a vast number of industries compete with the foreigner, I have been stopped with the fanatical dictum that if the British operative cannot produce as cheaply as his foreign rivals he must shut up and give way to others that can; perish operatives and industries altogether, but do not utter a word of sacrilege against our theory! Now this is fanaticism, and what is more, it is absurd, ridiculous, stupid fanaticism; the British operative cannot in the circumstances in which he is placed, and over which he has no control, manufacture as cheaply as the foreigner, and it is more reasonable and consistent with justice and common sense to recognize it, and by exceptional legislation, if necessary, to foster and protect them, rather than leave them to be destroyed by unjust competition.

Free trade fanatics do not see that the existence of manufacturing industries is of more importance to the country than the maintenance of a theory of any kind whatever.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I come to the bill under consideration. The gentleman from Illinois seemed to apprehend that I would discuss its paternity. I shall do no such thing, further than to say that I do not suspect him of it. [Laughter.] I have too much faith in his patriotism and good sense to lay that charge at his door. There is no one of us that has not introduced a bill to oblige a friend or gratify our party; and he never would have deliberately aimed such a blow as this bill proposes at the rights of the laboring people of the country, at the capital invested in manufactures by worthy and enterprising citizens, and at the revenues of the Government. He is a lover of his country, however much he may be beguiled by abstract theories.

I have before me the bill presented by him, and which, on his motion, was referred to the committee, and the one reported by the committee to the House, and am compelled to say that bad and dangerous as was the original bill it was better when presented and referred than it became in the hands of the committee. In its original form it had, at least, the merit of general consistency; but as reported by the committee it is a mesh-work of incongruities, which practical men who are familiar with the details of trade and the existing system of taxes and duties will, if they read it, regard as a travesty of American legislation. I am aware that these are strong phrases, but they involve no intentional discourtesy to the chairman or any member of the committee.

The subject is of the gravest importance and demands frank and full discussion and prompt settlement. The question as to whether our industries are to be further prostrated should not be permitted to remain an open one until the final session of this Congress shall adjourn. Importers will not order large stocks of goods while a bill proposing sweeping reductions of duties is pending, nor will manufacturers who apprehend the possibility that the markets may soon be flooded with the products of the cheaper money and labor of Europe manufacture sufficient quantities to keep up their stock. The pendency of the measure is impairing the revenues by diminishing receipts from both duties and taxes.

It is true the bill does not propose to interfere directly with every branch of business, yet, should it become a law, it will prostrate all. A generous home market is necessary to the prosperity of every branch of production, and were several leading industries crippled as they would be by the passage of this bill, all would suffer in sympathy. Frank discussion and an early disposition of the bill is, therefore, due to every interest of the country, and especially is it required by the depressed condition of the revenues of the Government.

While proposing damaging reductions on iron and steel in every form and on cotton and woolen goods, the bill as presented by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MORRISON] contemplated the utter eradication and extinction of the production of drugs, chemicals, colors, and paints in this country. Under its provisions not a chemical establishment that makes anything else than sulphuric or nitric acid—articles protected by their dangerous character, which prevents bringing them across the sea—or a manufactory of colors and paints could be maintained six months, for it proposed to put all such articles on the free list; and I may add that but few of them could continue in operation under the provisions of the bill reported by the committee. The adoption of either would be utterly destructive to the interests of the great mass of my constituents. Mine is pre-eminently a manufacturing district, in which there are in operation, I apprehend, more steam-engines than in any other congressional district in the country. One thriving village, Manayunk, is dependent upon the manufacture of cotton and woolen goods and paper pulp; another, the Falls of Schuylkill, as prosperous as any town of its size in the country, depends on woolen manufactures and one branch of the chemical works of Powers & Weightman. The proprietors of the woolen mills tell me that under the provisions of the committee's bill they would have to reduce the wages they pay, and the number of their hands at least one-half; and, apart from personal assurances to that effect, my knowledge of the cost of production and the market prices of the commodities they produce satisfies me that the chemical works must close the day the bill might become a law.

In order to illustrate the effect the closing of this one establishment would have, gentlemen will permit me to say that it employs one hundred and nine men who are the heads of families, and twenty who, though not married, receive the same pay; that the lowest wages paid per day to any one is $1.75; that the amount of wages paid annually exceeds $85,000. The number of dwellings belonging to the firm occupied by attachés of the establishment is fifty-nine, the rent ranging from $5 to $8 a month. It is the immemorial custom of this firm when renting a house to one of its employés to agree with him that while he remains in their service the rent shall not be raised; consequently men who a quarter of a century ago entered these homes at $5 a month are paying but that rent now, when other houses of the same materials and dimensions are bringing their owners $20 a month. The construction of homes for their working-people was necessary at the time the establishment was organized, for it was to create a village where no homes existed. The number of pounds of goods manufactured per annum on an average of five years by this establishment is 17,562,837, and the total value for each year of the products has been $771,971, and their annual consumption of crude material 24,846,000 pounds; yet every one of its productions are transferred by the committee's bill from the dutiable to the free list, by which change these prosperous homes would be abandoned, if not dismantled, and the workmen and their families added to the list of the suffering unemployed in order that our imports of articles yielding no revenue may increase and new demands be made upon us for gold with which to settle commercial balances.

The firm referred to have another establishment for the production of quinine, morphia, tartars, and many other forms of drugs and chemicals requiring the most scientific manipulation, and under the original bill it could not have been maintained, and should the bill of the committee be adopted, it will have to abandon the production of many of the articles with which it now in part supplies the country.

I have said that the committee's bill is a mesh-work of incongruities, and I add that many of these are grotesque in their absurdity. Many duties imposed by the tariff are for the protection of that part of the revenue derived from internal taxes. I allude to duties imposed on those articles of which alcohol is an ingredient, or in the preparation of which it is largely used and consumed. With pure alcohol taxed at $1.80 a gallon, to put articles manufactured from it, of which it is almost the whole in bulk, as is the case with ethers, collodion, chloroform, tannin, and santonine, the other ingredients in most of which are nearly imponderable, and not to protect them by a duty in excess of the tax paid on the alcohol, would, I think gentlemen will concede, be an absurdity that might without exaggeration be characterized as grotesque.

To put such articles on the free list or reduce the duty on them to so low a point as to prevent their manufacture would be to surrender the revenue derivable from both duties and the spirit tax. In other words, it would be to light our candle at both ends in order to illuminate the passage of the foreign producer into our markets. Yet the bill is replete with propositions of this character.

To manufacture these articles in our country out of alcohol taxed as we tax it, while foreign manufacturers have it free, would be simply impossible, and the chemical establishments of Philadelphia alone pay about $200,000 tax on alcohol annually. The free list provided by this bill is also to embrace many articles made of imported ingredients which pay duty. France gives her manufacturers free raw material and increases her duties as the manufacture is advanced by labor; but this bill proposes to impose duties on the ingredients which enter into commodities and to permit the finished article to come in duty free, thus reversing all experience and setting at defiance all theory. It retains on the dutiable list the simplest natural productions and puts on the free list some and fatally reduces the duties on other manufactured articles which require the most scientific manipulation and consume taxed and dutiable commodities as material for their production. Thus sumach, a weed found in profusion in the forests of most of the States of the Union, which is gathered by women and children, is to be protected by a duty of 10 per cent., and emery-ore by a duty of $3 per ton. I do not complain of these duties, but support them. What I protest against is the absurdity of maintaining them while putting on the free list, as the original bill proposed, or seriously reducing as the bill of the committee proposes, the duty on so complicated and delicate a manufacture as quinine, in the production of every ounce of which fifteen cents of spirit tax is wasted, and putting on the free list tannin and santonine, which contribute almost as largely as quinine to the spirit tax. The duty on tannin is now $1 and on santonine $3 per pound. There are other such glaring inconsistencies. It gives to nitrate of lead a duty of 2 cents a pound, but puts acetate of lead, brown and white, an article more important, though belonging to the same class of chemicals, on the free list. It puts citric acid, from which we received more than $3,000 duty last year, on the free list, and retains upon lemon-juice, from which it is manufactured, a duty of 10 per cent., thus repealing the duty, while surrendering our market to foreign producers.

In many instances it puts the same article, under different names, on both the dutiable and free list; thus acetate of potash is to bear a duty of 12½ cents a pound, but potassa acetate, which is identically the same article, is on the free list. Prussian blue, when so called, is to be judiciously protected, but, when imported as Berlin blue, or fig-blue, or Chinese blue, it is to come in free.

But the crowning absurdity of the committee's bill I think is in its last proviso, which is as follows:

Provided, That alcohol, to be exclusively used for the manufacture of ethers, chloroforms, and the vegetable alkaloids, made free of duty by this act, may be withdrawn from bond free of the specific internal-revenue tax per gallon, in quantities not exceeding one thousand gallons at any one time, under such rules, regulations, and bonds as the Secretary of the Treasury shall prescribe.

To how many varieties of chloroform is this proviso to apply? How many of them are there? Chemistry has yet discovered but one; yet this proviso is to admit a whole family of them. Ethers, too, if on the free list, are to have the benefit of this proviso, but gentlemen will in vain search the free list to find that it contains any one of them. They will, however, find them in the dutiable list, at greatly reduced and insufficient rates of duty. So, too, of vegetable alkaloids; they are in terms to have the benefit of this provision; but unless santonine be an alkaloid, which a competent chemist assures me it is not, no one will have the benefit of this proviso. Ethers and vegetable alkaloids were all restored to the dutiable list by the committee, apparently upon a general motion like this: "O, let us settle the controversy by putting them back at half their present rate of duty." I infer this from the fact that so many of them are to bear precisely half the existing rate; that is to say, enough of the duty is to be taken off to prevent their production without free alcohol, and enough left on to keep them out of the benefit of this proviso. Thus it will be seen that where our industry may be damaged by taking an article from the free list and putting it under a heavy duty, as in the case of tin and tin plates, the bill proposes the change; where it can be damaged by transferring an article from the dutiable list at an adequate duty to the free list, it is put there; and where destruction may be as thoroughly accomplished by giving it an inadequate duty, a show of fairness is made by taking that means of accomplishing the end.

Much other such unwise and indiscriminate legislation as I have indicated mars the bill; thus all acids and acetates have been transferred by wholesale to the free list, apparently because they are acids or acetates, although the duties on acids range from 1 cent per pound, which is the duty on sulphuric acid, to $1 a pound, the duty now imposed on gallic and rosallic acids; and the range of duty on acetates is equally great.

A comparison of the duties imposed on the many articles embraced by these two words by France with those we now impose shows that the experience of both nations has justified the maintenance of such rates; yet in its wisdom the Committee of Ways and Means has proposed to surrender all the revenue derived from the importation of any of them, and all spirit tax the payment of which their production causes, as a means of improving the revenues of the country and adding to the prosperity of its people by diminishing the demand for their labor and the rate of their wages.

Sir, this bill should be disposed of at once. As I have said, it should not be permitted to hang over the commerce and productive industry of the country. Nondescript as it is, the people will not know what action Congress may take upon it till we shall have disposed of it, and this ought to be done with the least possible delay. But time and the patience of the committee will not permit me to point out half the crudities and incongruities embodied in the bill, and I must therefore beg gentlemen to scrutinize its provisions for themselves. In conclusion, permit me to renew the expression of my conviction that my friend the chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means, with his generous nature and ardent patriotism, could not have been the author of a measure that thus strikes at the only property of the laboring-man, his right to adequate wages for willing work at the capital invested in manufactures in every part of the country, and at the already-diminishing revenues of the Government.

Mr. CHITTENDEN. Mr. Chairman, it being generally conceded that there can be no change in the tariff at this session of Congress, I have no desire to detain the committee except for a very brief period. I have nothing like an elaborate speech to make. I have no musty records of free trade and protection to read, no ponderous tables to print, no personal aims or theories to support. If what I may chance to say has any interest or value to the country or to members of this House it will be because my utterances are based upon thirty years' experience of an honest business, from the ruin of which I had the good fortune to escape nearly two years ago without any discredit.

Every gentleman within the sound of my voice who understands the true condition of the country will admit that it is hardly an exaggeration to say that the commerce of the whole country, especially the foreign commerce, is in ruins; ruins of broader proportion than the gentlemen who have preceded me dream of; ruins which cannot be restored by partial legislation; ruins which are shaken to their very foundations, and the causes of which must be removed in order that the supreme energy of our people may assert its power to restore and rebuild.

What, then, are the influences which have crushed and which oppress us? Primarily, as every intelligent man knows, we suffer in sympathy with other nations having commercial relations with us from the ravages of the great wars which have raged in our own and other lands for the last twenty years. But this is no longer an active power; and the débris of it should be no match for our boundless resources and intrepidity. We have to look deeper; and when we look deeper we find that we are oppressed and chained by the legal-tender madness and by a prohibitory tariff. Yes, sir, a prohibitory tariff. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KELLEY] argues in favor of a prohibitory tariff, and cites France. It is enough to say in answer to that that a prohibitory tariff is not consistent with the genius of our free institutions, or the intelligent free spirit of our people. Gentlemen speak as if it were possible for the foreign trade of this country to exist, and even revive some time or other, under the existing tariff; but it is not possible. Continue the present tariff and you will, in my judgment, wipe out and virtually extinguish the foreign trade of the country, and you will do it more rapidly in the immediate future than lately.

I am not speaking at random; I am sure of facts which warrant my conclusions. The exportation by Great Britain to the United States of iron and steel during the first three months of this year was next to nothing. The exportation from Great Britain to the United States of textile fabrics for the first three months of this year was barely three-fourths of what it was last year. The importation of dry goods at New York for the first five months of this year, ending to-morrow, is $40,000,000 in round numbers against $50,000,000, and for this month of May $3,500,000 against $6,000,000 last year, being a reduction of 40 per cent. for the last month. And that is not the worst of it, Mr. Chairman. There is not the slightest encouragement to continue the business at all. Those whose lives have been engaged in it confront nothing but vexation, disgust, and loss.

This tariff bill under consideration has many good features, but the things that are most needed are most conspicuous by their absence. The honorable chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means, with a bravery, a courage, and an intelligence which entitle him to honor throughout the country, proposes a tax on tea and coffee. I say here, with some regard to my reputation, and being careful to make no foolish or unwarranted prediction, that however gentlemen may shy the question and say their constituents will not stand it, the revenues of this Government will never again be adjusted to its expenditures until a tax upon tea and coffee is imposed. Let it go into the RECORD that the merchant raised his voice and said it, and let us see whether time will make the havoc of it which it has made of nearly all the great speeches delivered in this House upon our complicated tariff question for the last five years.

Why not tax tea and coffee? They are, beyond dispute, the most natural, feasible, and productive subjects of taxation known to our commerce. No man in Congress has ever placed these facts before the country more forcibly than the honorable Speaker of this House.

When the last tariff bill which was passed by the Forty-third Congress was under discussion, I was indebted to Hon. Mr. Niblack, from Indiana, for six minutes of time to speak against it. I took occasion then to speak of it with more assurance than appeared to my friends consistent with my inexperience here, but I ventured to tell gentlemen who hour after hour talked about it and brought forth their tables that they were deluded, and that the revenues they computed were not in the bill, and so it has proved. Whisky, tobacco, and sugar may have produced a little more than would have been collected under the old tariff, but as a whole, (and for the rest I refer gentlemen who have any interest in it to the RECORD for proof of the boldness with which I denounced it,) it has proved as great a failure as I predicted it would on that occasion.

Now, Mr. Chairman, we come to the close of another session, and the whole country is known to be dissatisfied with the only tariff bill reported to the House. With whatever good there is in it, with whatever fidelity the chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means has endeavored to bring before the country a measure which would to some degree restore its prosperity and provide indispensable revenues, it is undoubtedly impossible to pass any such bill. So we say it is impossible to pass any; I would it were otherwise. It might be otherwise. It were not difficult in six lines to frame a tariff bill which would bring unspeakable benefit to this whole country; a bill which would restore, in some measure, hope in place of despair; which would give courage to thousands who are now struggling desperately to preserve something from the wreck of the foreign and domestic commerce of the country. How should such a bill read? It should provide, first, for the imposition of a tax on tea and coffee in the precise figures proposed by the chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means. For the rest, in one comprehensive sentence, it should provide that all other taxes upon dutiable goods should be reduced, as a temporary measure, to tide us over till next session of Congress and past the presidential election, 12½ or 15 per cent. Such a measure would work no fresh injustice relatively to any interest. It would produce instantly a basis and foundation for reconstructing the shattered commerce of the country. It would inspire men with hope, and be accepted by the country as the promise of a thorough and careful revision of the tariff at the earliest moment. And who shall measure the importance of such precious influences at this juncture?

Mr. Chairman, I had no thought of saying one word here to-day. I intended to compact into a very few lines what I wished to say on this subject, and began to do it this morning, and the paper in front of me was the beginning of it. But I have been left to my good or bad fortune and inexperince in such a case as this. If I am understood I am satisfied.

The point I make is that unless the foreign commerce of this country is to be virtually extinguished, something must be done with the tariff. And I say without the least hesitation that if it were inflicted upon us by any foreign power, with all its present vicious complications, it would be resisted by the American people as the colonies resisted the infamous exactions of King George III. There is no qualification of it as the most tyrannous and destructive tariff that the world has ever witnessed. Eleven full years after the war many of our taxes are at the very highest war rates; and is there an intelligent man who cannot see the absurdity, the criminal absurdity, of such a spectacle? And what will be the sequel? Bankrupt merchants and a bankrupt Treasury!

I hope that this subject will receive the careful and best thoughts of the members of Congress. I would, if there were any way under the rules, propose such a bill as I have suggested in three lines. For I know, if I know anything, that the effect of the passage of such a bill by Congress would not only be salutary, but would be a spectacle to the world. Why compare America with Europe? Why come here and argue that we are to repeat the history of England or France? The gentleman from Pennsylvania referred to practical merchants. I say he would be laughed at if he were to go before practical merchants who could pay their debts and attempt to reason because France prospers under a prohibitory tariff that hence we should have a prohibitory tariff. It is nonsense; it is worse than that; it is a waste of time and a waste of power, and we should have done with it forever. We have our own relations, our own interests to protect. They are peculiar; they are magnificent. There is nothing like them on the face of the earth. There is nothing to be compared with the native resources of this country but the intrepidity, the courage, and the enterprise of our own people. There is no other nation on earth as richly endowed. And now shall we go abroad to find our lessons of economy among the older nations of the earth? Certainly not. We have our own splendid resources. We have our own magnificent opportunities. We are independent. If we will but exercise wisdom and common sense we shall right on, without much delay, rise up from the dust and humiliation in which we are now enveloped, and realize the splendid future of our grand and matchless inheritance.

Mr. KASSON. I see the chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means on the floor, and not knowing when there may be another opportunity, I should be glad to inquire of him whether he intends to bring the House to a vote in Committee of the Whole upon this tariff bill at this session? I make the inquiry for two reasons. One is that numerous letters of correspondents coming to me, as no doubt to other gentlemen, have expressed great agitation and fear in reference to various clauses of that bill, and reports come in further that it is embarrassing the revenues of the country, owing to the timidity of importers. The other reason is that I, as one member, do not desire to undertake the labor of examining in detail what will be all the effects of this bill, unless it is likely to be brought to a vote during this session. For those reasons I ask the chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means, if he thinks proper to do so, to inform the House and the country whether he intends to bring the bill to a vote in this House at the present session?

Mr. MORRISON. I will state, for the information of the gentleman from Iowa, that I would like to bring the bill to an early vote; but that will depend entirely upon the House itself and the condition of business in the House. If I see the House is disposed to have a vote on it, I shall ask for such vote. I do not now anticipate that it will be voted on. I shall yield to the appropriation bills; and if, when these are disposed of, there is time before the adjournment to take a vote on this bill, I shall ask a vote upon it.

Mr. BURCHARD, of Illinois. I would like to ask the gentleman if I understand him correctly as intimating that it will depend upon the length of the session?

Mr. MORRISON. Very much.

Mr. KASSON. I want to say further, that while the chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means gives that assurance, that partial assurance, he still leaves the question very much in doubt, so far as it affects the business interests of the country; and I have only now to add on this subject this further remark, that I do not believe it will be possible to bring this House to an agreement upon a tariff bill embracing such a complete revision of the tariff, except it be first prepared under the direction of a committee of the House, or of committees of the House and Senate, as was proposed in the last Congress, who themselves shall have an opportunity to sit in vacation, hearing evidence in regard to all the great industries of the country affected by the regulation of the tariff. I call the attention of the chairman of the committee to this now, for the reason that near the close of the first session of the last Congress the Senate, appreciating the importance of what I have now said, that is to say a session of committees in vacation coming in contact with the mercantile and industrial interests of the country to perfect the details of the bill, did pass a concurrent resolution for that purpose, which failed in our Committee of Ways and Means owing to the pressure of business at the close of the session; and if the proposition is deemed worthy of consideration by the present Committee of Ways and Means there is yet time to suggest a similar proposition, that during the coming vacation that kind of inquiry may be had.

I speak as the result of a good deal of experience on the Committee of Ways and Means; where we are subject to individual applications, as we are in that committee, and hear individual views, we do not grasp the whole interests of the country in a satisfactory manner, and cannot know what may be put upon the free lists in safety, what and how much may be made dutiable with safety, and the relations between the raw materials and the manufactured products in competition with the manufacturers of other countries. For these reasons I feel for one that I could not vote upon this bill except against it, and I would very much prefer that there should be a proposition from the Committee of Ways and Means to organize a commission that might hear all the great interests of the country, not only those who choose to come before them, but those whom they might summon to come before them and state their knowledge upon the subject. It is for these reasons that I shall be very glad if the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MORRISON] could assure the House now that he will not ask a vote on this bill at this session.

Mr. GOODIN. I now renew the motion that the committee rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and Mr. COX having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. HOSKINS reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, pursuant to the order of the House, had had under consideration the Union generally and particularly the bill (H. R. No. 748) to apply the proceeds of sales of public lands to the education of the people, and had come to no resolution thereon.

PATENT SUITS IN COURT OF CLAIMS.

The SPEAKER pro tempore, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting reports of the Chief of Ordnance on the bill (H. R. No. 3481) extending the jurisdiction of the Court of Claims; which was referred to the Committee on Patents.

The SPEAKER pro tempore also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Interior in reference to the bill (H. R. No. 3481) for the extension of the jurisdiction of the Court of Claims, together with accompanying papers; which were referred to the Committee on Patents, and ordered to be printed.

SETTLEMENT OF RAILROAD ACCOUNTS.

The SPEAKER pro tempore also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting the report of the Judge-Advocate General upon the draught of a bill for the settlement of the accounts of certain railroads; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

PORTABLE CANVAS-BOAT.

The SPEAKER pro tempore also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting copies of letters in the Quartermaster-General's Office in relation to a canvas portable boat, patented by Colonel Buchanan, of the United States Army; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

DISCHARGE OF HALLET KILBOURN.

The SPEAKER pro tempore also laid before the House sundry papers in the case of Hallet Kilbourn, including the opinion of Judge Cartter, discharging him from custody; which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. LAWRENCE. I move that these papers just referred be printed; I want to see how much bad law there is in them.

Mr. RANDALL. Let the question of printing be determined by the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. GARFIELD. It is not a very large document.

The motion to print was agreed to.

Mr. KASSON. These papers are not to be brought back on a motion to reconsider.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It will be so ordered.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

Mr. HAMILTON, of Indiana, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled a bill of the following title; when the Speaker signed the same:

An act (H. R. No. 219) to permit the judge of the district court of the United States for the western district of Pennsylvania to retire.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Mr. HYMAN was granted leave of absence from the 1st to the 15th of June.

Mr. RAINEY was granted leave of absence for six days on account of sickness in his family.

Mr. HUBBELL was granted leave of absence for fifteen days from the 2d of June.

Mr. BASS was granted indefinite leave of absence on account of ill health.

Mr. EGBERT was granted leave of absence for five days.

OSAGE CEDED LANDS IN KANSAS.

Mr. GOODIN. I move that the rules be suspended and the bill passed which I send to the Clerk's desk. It is a substitute for House bill No. 3125, providing for the sale of the Osage ceded lands in Kansas to actual settlers. It is the unanimous report of the Committee on Public Lands; and as that committee will not probably be called again at this session for general reports, it becomes extremely important that this bill be acted upon now.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That any bona fide settler, residing at the time of completing his or her entry, as hereinafter provided, upon any portion of the lands sold to the United States, by virtue of the first article of the treaty concluded between the United States and the Great and Little Osage tribe of Indians September 29, 1865, and proclaimed January 21, 1867, who is a citizen of the United States, or shall have declared his intention to become a citizen of the United States, shall be, and hereby is, entitled to purchase the same, in quantity not to exceed one hundred and sixty acres, at the price of $1.40 per acre, within one year from the passage of this act, under such rules and regulations as may be prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior, and on the terms hereinafter provided: Provided, That the sixteenth and thirty-sixth sections in each township of said land shall be reserved for State school purposes, in accordance with the provisions of the act of admission of the State of Kansas: Provided further, That no bona fide settler as aforesaid on said land shall be denied the right to purchase land under the provisions of this act on the ground that he or she may heretofore have had the benefit of the homestead or pre-emption laws of the United States.

SEC. 2. That any person who is a citizen of the United States, or has declared his intention to become such, who in good faith had purchased any portion of said land, not exceeding one hundred and sixty acres, from either the Leavenworth, Lawrence and Galveston Railroad Company, or the Missouri, Kansas and Texas Railroad Company, prior to the commencement of the two suits in the name of the United States against said companies in the circuit court of the United States for the district of Kansas, to test the legality of title of said railroad companies to said lands, or portions thereof, to wit, before the 25th day of February, A. D. 1874, and shall prove to the satisfaction of the register and the receiver of the proper land office that he or she has, in good faith, before the date last aforesaid, paid said railroad companies, or either of them, the consideration money, or a portion thereof, and also that he or she has, in good faith, made lasting and valuable improvements thereon, shall be, and hereby is declared to be, entitled to purchase said lands, not exceeding one hundred and sixty acres, to include his or her improvements, on the same terms and conditions that actual settlers are authorized by this act to purchase said lands; that the rights of the said purchasers from said railroad companies shall attach at the date of the payment aforesaid made to said railroads, or either of them: Provided, That the said improvements are made before the date last aforesaid: And provided further, That said claimant actually resides on the land at the time of completing his or her entry thereof at the proper land office: Provided further, That the heirs of any deceased purchaser from said railroads shall have the same right to purchase the said lands so purchased from the said railroads as the original purchaser would have had had he lived.

SEC. 3. That the parties desiring to make entries under the provisions of this act who will, within twelve months after the passage of the same, make payment at the rate of $1.40 per acre for the land claimed by said purchaser under such rules and regulations as the Commissioner of the General Land Office may prescribe, as follows, that is to say: said purchaser shall pay for the land he or she is entitled to purchase one-fourth of the price of the land at the time the entry is made, and the remainder in three annual payments drawing interest at the rate of 5 per cent. per annum, which payment shall be secured by notes of said purchaser, payable to the United States; and the Secretary of the Interior shall withhold title until the last payment is made; and the Secretary of the Interior shall cause patents to issue to all parties who shall complete their purchases under the provisions of this act; and if any claimant fails to complete his or her entry at the proper land office within twelve months from the passage of this act, he or she shall forfeit all right to the land by him or her so claimed, except in cases where the land is in contest: Provided further, That nothing in this act shall be construed to prevent any purchaser of said land from making payment at any time of the whole or any portion of the purchase-money.

SEC. 4. That the laws of the United States in relation to the pre-emption of town sites shall apply to the tract of land first above described, except that the declaratory statement provided by existing laws in such cases shall be filed with the register of the proper land office within sixty days after the passage of this act, and the occupants of town sites shall not be allowed to purchase more than three hundred and twenty acres actually occupied as a town site, except in cases where town-site companies have purchased the claims of title of the original settler, and all titles claimed by any railroad company, in which case said town company by its proper agent shall have the same right to enter said lands that the original settlers would have had, not exceeding in amount eight hundred acres, and shall pay therefor the sum of $1.40 per acre in the same manner as actual occupants are required to pay.

SEC. 5. That all entries heretofore made of any of said lands, and set aside or canceled by the Secretary of the Interior, on the ground that the said railroads had a prior grant of said lands, be restored by the said Secretary of the Interior upon the payment by each purchaser to the receiver of the proper land office, the sum of fifteen cents per acre in addition to the sum heretofore paid, to cover in part the expense incurred in litigating the title to said land set up by said railroads.

SEC. 6. That all declaratory statements made by persons desiring to purchase any portion of said land under the provisions of this act shall be filed with the register of the proper land office within sixty days after the passage of the same: Provided, however, That those who may settle on said lands after the passage of this act shall file their declaratory statement within twenty days after settlement, and complete their purchase under the provisions of this act within one year thereafter.

SEC. 7. That nothing in this act shall be so construed as to prevent said land from being taxed under the laws of the State of Kansas, as other lands are or may be taxed in said State, from and after the time the first payment is made on said land, according to the provisions of this act.

SEC. 8. That it shall be the duty of the Attorney-General of the United States for the time being to ascertain and determine the amount of costs and necessary expenses incurred in prosecuting the two suits commenced in the name of the United States against the Leavenworth, Lawrence and Galveston Railroad Company, and the Missouri, Kansas and Texas Railroad Company, in the circuit court of the United States for the district of Kansas, for the purpose of testing the validity of the title to said lands claimed by said railroad companies, and the costs and expenses of prosecuting said cases in the Supreme Court of the United States; said expenses to include the fees justly due to the attorneys retained at the instance of the settlers on said land, with the approval of the Attorney-General of the United States; that after determining the amount of costs and expenses as aforesaid, the Attorney-General shall certify the said amount, and to whom due, to the Secretary of the Interior, and the Secretary of the Interior shall pay to the parties entitled thereto the sum so allowed and certified to, as aforesaid, out of the proceeds arising from fifteen cents per acre on the sale of said lands.

SEC. 9. That said railroads, or either of them, shall have the right to purchase such subdivisions of land as are located outside of the right of way heretofore granted to them, and which were occupied by them on said 10th day of April, 1876, for stock-yards, storage-houses, or any other purpose legitimately connected with the operation and business of said roads, whenever the same does not conflict with a settler who in good faith made a settlement prior to the occupation of said lands by said railroad company or companies in the same manner and at the same price settlers are authorized to purchase under the provisions of this act.

The question was taken on the motion of Mr. GOODIN; and (two-thirds voting in favor thereof) the rules were suspended, and the bill (H. R. No. 3625) was passed.

LEAVE TO PRINT.

Mr. HOPKINS, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to have printed as part of the debates remarks on railroad combinations and discriminations. [See Appendix.]

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. PIPER. I am instructed by the Committee on Commerce to report back a substitute for a concurrent resolution. I move that the rules be suspended and that it be adopted.

Mr. HOLMAN. I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. PAGE. I make the point of order that the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] did not make his motion until after my colleague [Mr. PIPER] had been recognized.

Mr. HOLMAN. I submit that a motion to adjourn is now in order. The gentleman from California [Mr. PIPER] has offered his resolution; that he had a right to do; but when it is before the House I am entitled to the floor to move to adjourn.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Indiana has the right to make that motion.

Mr. BURCHARD, of Illinois. Have we not the right to hear read a resolution presented under a suspension of the rules before the question is put on adjournment?

Mr. RANDALL. I call for the regular order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Indiana that the House adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and accordingly (at five o'clock and twenty minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until Wednesday next.

PETITIONS, ETC.

By Mr. ATKINS: The petition of E. St. Julien Cox, for re-imbursement for expenses incurred in the contested-election case of Cox vs. Strait, second congressional district of Minnesota, to the Committee of Elections.

IN SENATE.

WEDNESDAY, May 31, 1876.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. BYRON SUNDERLAND, D. D.

The Journal of the proceedings of Monday last was read and approved.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of War, transmitting a copy of a letter from the Quartermaster-General relative to the loan of tents to the National Association of Veterans of the Mexican War; which was ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore also laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of War, transmitting, in answer to a resolution of the Senate of the 19th instant, a copy of the report made to the Superintendent of the Coast Survey by Assistant George Davidson, describing and illustrating methods employed for the irrigation of land in India and Southern Europe; which was ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

TAXATION IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore also laid before the Senate the following communication; which was read:

OFFICE OF THE COMMISSIONERS OF THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA,
Washington, May 29, 1876.

SIR: We have the honor to request that the attention of the Senate may be called to the necessity of legislation providing for a just measure of taxation upon property within the District of Columbia, and especially the necessity of providing for a tax to be levied for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1877, so as to provide the public revenues without which the government cannot be carried on in the new fiscal year which will begin in less than five weeks. The act of Congress levying a tax for the support of the government for the fiscal year now just closing became a law on March 3, 1875, and even from that date (three months earlier than the date of this communication) to the time when the tax became payable too short a period intervened for the efficient execution of the provision of the law with reference to the making of assessment and of returns and the preparation of the proper books and records. Since the assessment on which the tax for the present fiscal year was made, taxable real estate of the District has, it is estimated, been increased by upward of $3,000,000 by buildings which have been begun, constructed, or completed during the past year. In order that such property may bear its fair proportion of the burden of taxation for the new fiscal year soon to begin, prompt legislation is absolutely needed.

Furthermore, the present fiscal year will close in less than five weeks, and revenues must be provided for the support of the government during the fiscal year which will so soon begin. The importance of having a well-devised tax law, giving ample time within which it may be carefully executed, cannot be too strongly urged upon the attention of the Senate. The subject is now before that branch of the national Legislature for consideration, a bill having passed the House of Representatives several weeks ago.

In our judgment, it is expedient that the legislation upon this subject at the present session of Congress shall take the form of a permanent law imposing a just measure of taxation within the District and prescribing the tax which shall hereafter be annually levied upon taxable property. In the absence of such a law the property interests of the District are injured by the uncertainty both as to the measure of taxes and as to the property which is to be subject to taxation. The whole system is liable to change in each succeeding year. At the same time, by a permanent law upon the subject, Congress will be relieved from the labor of maturing every year a measure for taxing District property. There will be avoided also the injustice and inconvenience which to some extent must always result when a law upon such a subject is delayed or is hastily prepared or executed. We trust, therefore, that it may be practicable for the Senate at an early day to give its attention to legislation imposing permanently an equitable measure of taxation on property in the District, indicating the property that is to be taxed and prescribing the mode of assessment and collection of taxes.

Very respectfully,

W. DENNISON,
J. H. KETCHAM,
S. L. PHELPS,
Commissioners of the District of Columbia.

Hon. T. W. FERRY,
President of the Senate.

Mr. SPENCER. I desire to say that the Committee on the District of Columbia have been for the last three weeks considering a tax bill for the District. They have not up to the present time perfected it, but have been working as industriously as their other duties would permit, and in due time the committee will be able to report the bill to the Senate. I move that the communication from the commissioners which has just been read be printed and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

The motion was agreed to.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. WEST presented a memorial of the Chamber of Commerce of New Orleans, remonstrating against the adoption of the treaty with the Hawaiian Islands; which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

He also presented the petition of Mrs. Gottlieb Neidhordt, of Louisiana, praying for compensation for damages sustained by the occupation of her property by the Federal forces, and the destruction of the same, during the late war; which was referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. SPENCER presented the memorial of the officers and a committee of the Medical Society of the District of Columbia, remonstrating against the passage of the bill (S. No. 596) to incorporate the National Surgical Institute of the District of Columbia; which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. HAMLIN presented the memorial of J. D. Hopkins and other merchants and lawyers of Ellsworth, in the State of Maine, remonstrating against the repeal of the bankrupt law, and praying for its modification; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. PATTERSON presented the memorial of the city councils of Port Royal and Beaufort, South Carolina, relating to the establishment of a naval station at Port Royal; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. WRIGHT. A few mornings since the Senator from Illinois [Mr. OGLESBY] presented two petitions from citizens of the State of Iowa praying that power be given to the Federal courts to grant a general injunction restraining all persons from mining or any other operation whatever or any cultivation of the soil so as to interfere with the rights of actual settlers upon what are known as Des Moines River lands in Iowa. I hold in my hand two similar petitions. The petitions heretofore presented were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, as I remember, and I move that the petitions which I now present take the same reference.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin, presented the petition of Moses Anderson and 200 other citizens of La Crosse, Wisconsin, praying for the repeal of the bankrupt law; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. ALLISON presented the memorial of F. G. Rathbun and others, of Nashua, Iowa, envelope-manufacturers, &c., remonstrating against the manufacture, selling, and printing of envelopes, newspaper-wrappers, and postal cards by the Government; which was referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

Mr. CHRISTIANCY presented the petition of Alexander Brigham, of West Branch, Michigan, praying for back pay and bounty for services in the First Michigan Cavalry; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also presented a resolution of the Legislature of California, in favor of the passage of a law to secure to the State of California the title to lands listed to it; which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. CAPERTON presented the petition of 35 citizens of the counties of Webster and Braxton, West Virginia, praying for the establishment of a post-route from Webster Court House to Middleport; which was referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

He also presented the petition of John H. King, of Washington County, Maryland, praying for compensation for property destroyed by United States troops during the late war; which was referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. CONKLING presented the petition of the New York Cheap Transportation Association, praying that no further gifts or benefits be conferred upon the Union Pacific Railroad Company and urging that the vast interests of transcontinental commerce demand such immediate action by Congress as can lawfully be enforced to restrain the said railroad company from further misuse of the privileges and powers now controlled by it; which was referred to the Committee on Railroads.

He also presented the memorial of the National Board of Fire Underwriters, favoring the extension of the usefulness of the Signal Service Bureau, and especially that department relating to the direction and velocity of the wind; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. GORDON presented the petition of merchants and business men of Americus, Georgia, praying for the repeal of the bankrupt law; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented the petition of the citizens and business men of Lumpkin County, Georgia, praying for the repeal of the bankrupt law; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented the petition of Oscar Hinnich, late engineer in the confederate army, praying for the removal of his political disabilities; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented the petition of envelope-manufacturers and printers, booksellers, stationers, &c., of Atlanta, Georgia, praying for the discontinuance by the Government of manufacturing, printing, and selling the same; which was referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

Mr. JONES, of Florida, presented the petition of O. I. Daniel and other citizens of Jacksonville, Florida, praying that Congress take steps toward deepening and improving the channel of the Saint John River; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore presented the petition of R. Goodhart and other citizens of Washington, District of Columbia, residing in the vicinity of Lincoln Park, praying that an appropriation be made for a watchman in that park; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

REPORT ON FISH AND FISHERIES.

Mr. ANTHONY. I present a communication from Professor Baird, United States Commissioner of Fish and Fisheries, transmitting his report for 1875 and 1876. I ask that the report be printed. Some of the statistical portions have not yet been handed in, but it is desirable that it should be put in type. I will postpone the motion for printing extra copies until the whole work is in, so that we may get the estimate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The report will be printed under the rule.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. WRIGHT, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 1592) to re-imburse Horace Glover for property unlawfully seized and sold by the United States Government, reported it with an amendment.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the petition of Dr. Moody Mansur, praying compensation for services rendered as a surgeon in the United States Army during the Florida war, submitted an adverse report thereon; which was agreed to, and ordered to be printed.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 715) for the relief of Samuel H. Canfield, postmaster at Seymour, Connecticut, reported it with amendments, and submitted a report thereon; which was ordered to be printed.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the petition of Mrs. Angela Dauzat, wife of Eugène Brochard, praying compensation for thirty-five bales of cotton taken by the Federal fleet under command of Rear-Admiral Porter, at Fort De Russey, on the Red River, on the 16th day of March, 1864, submitted an adverse report thereon; which was agreed to, and ordered to be printed.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the petition of Margaret Knight, of Meigs County, Tennessee, praying additional compensation for property taken and used by the United States troops during the late war, submitted an adverse report thereon; which was agreed to, and ordered to be printed.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the petition of Thomas H. Yeatman, asking payment of $1,275, the amount of vouchers issued for rental of buildings used by the Quartermaster's Department, submitted an adverse report thereon; which was agreed to, and ordered to be printed.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 424) for the relief of Rev. Erastus Lathrop, who claims to have been chaplain of the Sixteenth Indiana Mounted Infantry, submitted an adverse report thereon; which was ordered to be printed, and the bill was rejected.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was recommitted the bill (S. No. 74) for the relief of Mark W. Delahay, late judge of the United States court for the district of Kansas, submitted an adverse report thereon; which was ordered to be printed, and the bill was rejected.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 848) for the relief of William Battersby, submitted an adverse report thereon; which was ordered to be printed, and the bill was rejected.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the memorial of the Legislative Assembly of Washington Territory, praying an appropriation for paying Francis W. Pettygrove for services rendered as clerk of the United States district court for the third judicial district of that Territory from April 30, 1853, to February 1, 1857, asked to be discharged from its further consideration; which was agreed to.

Mr. WRIGHT. I am also directed by the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 542) for the relief of E. F. Darrence, to report it back, and recommend the indefinite postponement of the bill. I will say in this connection that the committee find the bill without any evidence, nor is there any suggestion in the record that evidence will be found anywhere in support of the bill.

The bill was postponed indefinitely.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont, from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 558) making a further appropriation for the erection of Government buildings in Dover, Delaware, reported it with an amendment.

He also, from the same committee, who were directed by a resolution of the Senate of the 25th instant to inquire whether any, and, if any, what, provision should be made for the widow of John King, who was killed by the explosion of gas that occurred in the Capitol on the 19th instant, and for L. B. Cutler, who was severely burned and injured by the explosion, reported a bill (S. No. 872) for the relief of the family of the late John T. King and of L. B. Cutler; which was read and passed to the second reading.

Mr. COCKRELL, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 845) for the relief of W. H. Woodward, of Indianola, Texas, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon; which was ordered to be printed.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 2836) for the relief of Joseph Wilson, of Bourbon, County, Kentucky, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon; which was ordered to be printed.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 2829) for the relief of Ariel K. Eaton and James D. Jenkins, reported it without amendment, the committee adopting the report of the House committee.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 688) referring the claim of John H. Russell to the accounting officers of the Treasury of the United States for adjudication and settlement, submitted an adverse report thereon; which was ordered to be printed, and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

Mr. ALLISON, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 36) amending the pension law so as to remove the disability of those who, having participated in the rebellion, have since its termination enlisted in the Army of the United States and become disabled, reported it with an amendment.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine, asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 873) to provide for the 8 per cent. certificates of indebtedness issued for work done under the direction of the board of public works and chargeable to the private property benefited thereby; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. INGALLS asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 874) to amend section 4721 of the Revised Statutes of the United States; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

He also asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 875) to re-adjust the rates of pension for specific and other serious disabilities; which was read twice by its title.

Mr. INGALLS. This bill has been transmitted to me from the Secretary of the Interior, and is accompanied by a communication which I move be referred, with the bill, to the Committee on Pensions.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. HITCHCOCK asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 876) for the relief of John A. Rowland and Henry Turner, of the District of Columbia; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. SPENCER asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 877) to attach the counties of Lee and Bullock to the middle judicial district of Alabama; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. PATTERSON asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 878) to establish and endow a national scientific industrial institute in Washington County, District of Columbia; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Education and Labor, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. CRAGIN asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 879) for the advancement of medical and surgical science and for the protection of cemeteries in the District of Columbia; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. CONKLING asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 880) authorizing the extension of letters-patent to the heirs of Benjamin F. Rice; which was read twice by its title.

Mr. CONKLING. This bill relates to a case of which I have no knowledge whatever. It was sent to me by a constituent of mine who is a respectable man, and at his request I introduce it. I move it be referred to the Committee on Patents and printed.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. STEVENSON asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 881) for the benefit of Brittania W. Kenyon; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

On motion of Mr. JOHNSTON, it was Ordered, That the papers on file in the office of the Secretary of the Senate in the case of R. and Elsie Reynolds be withdrawn and rereferred to the Committee on Patents.

DAVIDSON'S REPORT ON IRRIGATION.

Mr. SARGENT submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Printing:

Resolved, That the report of George Davidson, assistant, Coast Survey, describing and illustrating methods for irrigating land in India and in Southern Europe, transmitted by the Secretary of the Treasury in compliance with a resolution of the Senate, be printed, with 150 extra copies for distribution by the Superintendent of the Coast Survey.

Luckett, assignees of William T. Cheatham, returned to the Senate by the President of the United States with his objections and sent by the Senate to the House of Representatives with the message of the President returning the bill, with his objections, had passed the bill, notwithstanding the objections of the President, two-thirds of the House of Representatives agreeing to the same.

The message also announced that the House had non-concurred in the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 2441) authorizing the appointment of receivers of national banks, and for other purposes, asked a conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. S. S. COX of New York, Mr. SCOTT WIKE of Illinois, and Mr. JOHN A. KASSON of Iowa managers at the same on its part.

The message further announced that the House had concurred in the resolution of the Senate to print ten thousand five hundred copies of the report of the Smithsonian Institution for the year 1875.

The message also announced that the House had concurred in the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 219) to permit the judge of the district court of the United States for the western district of Pennsylvania to retire.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message further announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills; and they were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore:

A bill (H. R. No. 219) to permit the judge of the district court of the United States for the western district of Pennsylvania to retire;

A bill (S. No. 708) for the relief of John M. English, of North Carolina;

A bill (H. R. No. 755) for the relief of Jackson T. Sorrells;

A bill (H. R. No. 2459) for the relief of Theodore F. Miller, late private Company G, Third Regiment Iowa Cavalry Volunteers;

A bill (H. R. No. 2826) to refund and remit certain duties to Peter Wright & Sons; and

A bill (H. R. No. 3479) making certain transfers of appropriations in the provisions for the contingent expenses of the Department of Justice for the current year.

SCHOOL LANDS IN CALIFORNIA.

Mr. SARGENT. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. No. 805) relating to indemnity school selections in the State of California.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be read for information if desired.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let the bill be read.

The Chief Clerk read the bill.

Mr. SHERMAN. Let the report be read.

The Secretary read the following report, submitted by Mr. BOOTH, from the Committee on Public Lands, May 16:

The Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 805) relating to indemnity school selections in the State of California, beg leave to report:

That Congress, by act of March 3, 1853, donated to the State of California, for school purposes, every sixteenth and thirty-sixth section in the State.

The Mexican grants existing in said State covered large areas of land, and included within their boundaries many of the sixteenth and thirty-sixth sections, by reason of which the State was deprived of a very large part of her grant for school purposes.

Congress, therefore, in said act provided that the State should be entitled to select other lands in lieu of such sections as were included within Spanish and Mexican grants.

As the act specified no definite time or manner for selecting such lands, Congress, on July 23, 1866, passed an act, in section 6 of which it provided that said act of March 3, 1853, "shall be construed as giving the right to select for school purposes other lands in lieu of such sixteenth and thirty-sixth sections as were covered by grants made under Spanish and Mexican authority, which shall be determined in case of Spanish or Mexican grants when the final survey of such grants shall have been made. The surveyor-general for the State of California shall furnish the State authorities with lists of all such sections so covered, as a basis of selection."

The surveyor-general of the United States for the State of California construed this section as authorizing him, on behalf of the Government, to furnish a list of such sections as were covered by Mexican grants, whenever by actual surveys in the field he ascertained that a sixteenth or thirty-sixth section was actually covered by a grant. He seems to have considered that it was not necessary to wait until the patent for the grant had been issued. This construction was acquiesced in by the authorities of the State of California, and the work of selecting and certifying lands to the State as required by the grant proceeded on that basis. This construction was adopted by the Commissioner of the General Land Office and by the Secretary of the Interior unquestioned and continuously down to March 10, 1876, during which time the grant to the State had been largely satisfied by the lands selected.

The honorable Secretary of the Interior on March 10, 1876, made a ruling giving a different construction to the words in section 6 of the act of July 23, 1866, "which shall be determined in case of Spanish or Mexican grants when the final survey of such grants shall have been made," construing them to mean when the patent for the Mexican grant was issued. This ruling and construction would render irregular the title to many thousands of acres of land, mostly in the hands of innocent purchasers for a valuable consideration from the State of California. Many families would not only lose their lands, but would lose their improvements. The records of the Land Department already show that these lands are being extensively jumped, and, in most instances, the committee is informed from reliable sources, that the actual occupants holding the State title and patents from the State are driven from the lands by the jumpers.

Owing to the extreme hardship and damage done to innocent persons, the honorable Secretary has ordered a rehearing.

As the lands have greatly increased in value and in many cases are worth several hundred dollars per acre, much litigation is arising by parties trying to take the lands away from those having purchased of the State.

The titles to these lands have entered largely into the business affairs of the people of the whole State, and valuable rights and interests are resting on them. They cannot now be disturbed without causing great and irreparable damage to the general prosperity of the State and ruin to many families. The value of the property under consideration is estimated by those well acquainted therewith to be many million dollars.

The work of selecting and certifying these lands to the State has cost the General Government and the State of California many thousand dollars; estimated as high as $50,000.

The lands certified are in satisfaction, acre for acre, of the grant to the State.

The interest of the Government requires that this expense should not needlessly be repeated in reselecting and certifying other lands in place of the lands now selected and certified.

The State of California has passed an act to quiet and perfect these titles and prevent litigation so far as her own laws are concerned, and now, by a resolution of the assembly of the State, and by a petition addressed to Congress, signed by the governor of the State and the other State officers, as well as by nearly seven hundred others, asks Congress also to pass an act quieting these titles and thus ending injurious litigation. The officers of the Government supposed they were complying with all the requirements of the law, and innocent third parties purchased on the faith that the titles were good. It is but an act of justice and equity on the part of Congress to now place these titles beyond question and beyond litigation.

The bill (S. No. 805) referred to this committee has been carefully examined, and has been submitted to the honorable Commissioner of the General Land Office, and is regarded as properly protecting the interests of the General Government, as well as securing the title to the State and its vendees.

The committee, therefore, report the bill back and recommend its passage with an amendment to correct a typographical error.

Mr. SHERMAN. It is manifest that this bill involves very large interests and may affect very seriously the rights of private parties. I know nothing about the bill except what I gather from the reading of the report and also from a printed memorial which was sent, I suppose, to every member of the Senate. I do not know who sent it, but it came from California in behalf of thousands of people in the western part of that State. It showed antagonism to this bill, making the charge that the lands were entered by collusion between the authorities of the State of California and the persons who made the entry; that the decision of the Secretary of the Interior simply repeated plain and mandatory provisions of the law; that the grants for lands in lieu of the sixteenth and thirty-sixth sections only applied to places where the Mexican or Spanish grant was actually settled and followed by a patent; but that in contravention of that law and the plain reason and intent of the law of Congress the State of California issued these substituted lands in the place of lands within Spanish and Mexican grants which had not been settled, which are not even yet settled, and which actually belonged to the United States. Therefore the probability will be, if the statements contained in this printed pamphlet are correct, that under the bill the State of California would not only get the sixteenth and thirty-sixth sections of land in lieu of every Mexican and Spanish grant, but would actually also get the sixteenth and thirty-sixth sections of land in alleged Mexican and Spanish grants, which have been set aside, or will be set aside, not having yet been decided.

Mr. SARGENT. A very small amendment would guard against that.

Mr. SHERMAN. Under the circumstances, this bill, it seems to me, ought to be taken up in its regular order at a time when there will be an opportunity to examine it. It is manifest from the report in this case that it involves large interests. It seems that there is a controversy already between persons who are seeking to enter upon portions of this land under the acts of Congress, and that this bill turns out persons claiming under laws which gave them the right to enter upon the public land. There is a contest between persons who claim under the grant from the State of California and persons who claim under the pre-emption and homestead laws of the United States, and private interests are involved.

Upon the face of the paper it seems that the finding of the Secretary of the Interior is plainly correct. The State of California was not entitled to these substituted sections in lieu of lands covered by Mexican and Spanish grants until it was determined by the courts that the Mexican and Spanish grants were valid titles, and that thus the State of California was not able to get the sixteenth and thirty-sixth sections. It seems that lands were taken by the State of California for the sixteenth and thirty-sixth sections which were contained in grants that had not been approved by the courts and were still in dispute. It seems to me that this is too large a subject to be acted upon in the morning hour, and therefore I think it ought to be passed over. I make these remarks in order to call the attention of Senators to what I understand to be the allegation, because I know nothing more about this matter than what I heard read at the Clerk's desk and also from the printed pamphlet, which I suppose was sent to every member of the Senate by the interests hostile to the bill. Who the memorialists are I do not know. At any rate it seems to be a very careful pamphlet, and it makes assertions and declarations which demand investigation and a hearing.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I desire to give notice to the Senate that on to-morrow or the first legislative day thereafter I shall ask the Senate to proceed to the consideration of the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill.

Mr. SHERMAN. In view of the notice that has been given, I shall, as soon as I can get the floor, move to take up, and I hope we shall finish and pass to-day from the consideration of, the bill in regard to the issue of subsidiary silver. If we are to be crowded by the appropriation bills, I hope the Senate, if it takes up this silver bill, will close it to-day.

Mr. BOGY. I hope the bill referred to by the Senator from Ohio will not be taken up to-day. I desire to speak upon that subject, and I am not prepared to do so now.

Mr. BOOTH. I rise now simply to offer an amendment to the bill which has been read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will state that the question has not been put whether the Senate will proceed to the present consideration of the bill.

Mr. SARGENT. The bill was before the Senate, as I understood, and the report read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill is not before the Senate. It is true the report was read, but the question has not been put on the motion to take up the bill.

Mr. SARGENT. I should like to address myself to that motion. The United States law, existing for years on the statute-book, and giving to the State of California the sixteenth and thirty-sixth sections, recognized the fact that there are in that State large Mexican grants.

Mr. INGALLS. Is it in order to discuss the merits on a motion to take up?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is not, strictly.

Mr. SARGENT. I wish simply to show the importance of the bill, and why it should be taken up, and for that purpose I am compelled to glance at the merits. If my friend from Kansas will allow me, I will proceed.

These large Mexican grants, if we could have no indemnity for the sections lying within their limits, would have diminished the school fund of the State materially. Whether it was wise or not to recognize the equity arising therefrom, Congress did recognize it some twenty-five years ago, and provided that the State should have lieu lands. For years and years the State made its selection of new lands, and the lists coming to the Land Office, they were regularly recognized and the lands listed to the State, and the State thereupon issued its titles to these lands. Every one supposed the law was fully complied with. The State did not make lieu selections of lands where the grant was rejected. It simply made selections in lieu of the land where there has been a decree of court in favor of the validity of the claim, where there was an appeal, only after the final decree had settled the right of the claimants under the Mexican grants to receive those lands; but it did not wait after that in all cases, though it did in many, until the actual patent was issued out of the Land Office, and this was not required by the Land Office or the Secretary of the Interior.

After the selections came up in cases where there had been confirmations of the grants and an actual patent had not been issued, the public surveys showing the area of the land and that the section which it was desired to take other lands in lieu of was within the boundaries ascertained by the decree, the right of the State was recognized, the lands listed to the State, and these were sold to parties who have made valuable improvements thereon. There was created a State title, founded upon lands listed by the Government of the United States.

This state of things continued, and everybody supposed he was secure in these rights until the 10th of March last, when a new rule was laid down by the Secretary of the Interior, he holding that the patent to the Mexican grant itself must have actually issued or the selection was irregular. This at once threw distress on a very large class of the community who had gone in on the strength of the State patent, which was founded on lands listed by the Government of the United States, the authorities here having a semi-judicial power to pass on the question whether the selection was properly made, the innocent purchaser not being able to ascertain this fine distinction subsequently laid down by the Secretary of the Interior.

Of course there are large interests involved. The Senator from Ohio thinks it extraordinary that we should ask for the passage of the bill because there are large interests involved. Interests are involved all over the State, because these Mexican grants were numerous and covered large areas, and very many of our selections are in lieu of lands covered by Mexican grants.

After the 10th of March, when the decision was made and the news of it reached California, in Los Angeles County, we saw the first effect of it. Men who had no claims on the lands whatever as pre-emptors or homestead settlers before the time of that decision on the 10th of March, 1876, when the news reached them some time in April, began jumping other people's lands; that is, they went within men's inclosures, went into their grain-fields where the grain was ripening in the early season, took possession of their houses and cabins and improvements, and by means of shot-guns intimidated the men who were the supposed rightful owners of the soil and drove them from it. This made a feeling of consternation and showed what might be expected in the rest of the State. The Legislature memorialized Congress to confirm the selections, recognizing the irregularity of not waiting until after the actual patent had been issued. Recognizing the irregularity, they asked Congress nevertheless to overlook this irregularity in favor of those who had bought in good faith.

Now, the Senator from Ohio says that under this bill the State will get duplicate lands; not only get the original lands, but get new lands. That position must necessarily be a mistake; but if there is any foundation for it the slightest amendment will fix it, providing that the State shall not receive, in consequence of this legislation or any other, any more than the original lands to which it was entitled twenty-five years ago when the selection of lieu lands was allowed to be made. My colleague has prepared a careful amendment protecting the settlers, protecting the mineral lands, and protecting every other interest which it is possible to protect. He was endeavoring to get the floor to offer it when my friend from Ohio rose and said that the rights of settlers were involved in this matter. Those men who, since the 10th of March of the present year, went on their neighbor's possessions, went inside of their inclosed fields, took possession of their fields of grain, took possession of their houses, and drove others off by means of shot-guns, are not settlers in any sense of the word. To allow them to prevail would be to carry distress and tumult throughout the State of California.

The Senator from Missouri [Mr. BOGY] asks me under what right these new men went in. They said, "Your State selections have been irregular; the Secretary of the Interior has overthrown them, declared them to be null and of no effect, and we will enter upon this land ourselves, and take it, and you must keep off it." That was the "right" which made the claim. It was bad in morals, bad in every sense, and we simply come in here and ask that this thing may be righted.

I understand from my colleague that he will propose an amendment that the bill shall not affect the rights of any man who went upon the land claiming as a pre-emptor or homestead settler prior to that decision. As I suppose it will be impossible in the few moments left of the morning hour to pass this bill, in the hope that this discussion may lead Senators to think upon the subject, I give way to my colleague.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is, Will the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill?

Mr. SARGENT. I give way to my colleague for the purpose of offering his amendment; I do not yield the floor.

Mr. SHERMAN. I ask the Senator if he will have any objection to letting this matter be recommitted to the Committee on Public Lands, to whom I will send the paper I referred to. Every Senator has received the same document. The Senator from Michigan [Mr. CHRISTIANCY] showed me the same paper which excited my attention. I ask to have the bill recommitted to the Committee on Public Lands, so that their attention may be called to the distinct statements made in the document.

Mr. SARGENT. I have no objection to that course.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from California [Mr. BOOTH] desire to have his amendment printed?

Mr. BOOTH. As I am a member of the Committee on Public Lands, I will move in committee to have the amendment incorporated in the bill, but I will now read to the Senate what I propose to offer; it comes in after the third section:

Nothing contained in this act shall be construed as affecting the rights of bona fide pre-emptors or homestead settlers in actual possession, and whose right accrued before the 10th day of March, 1867, to mineral lands, or to any lands in the city and county of San Francisco, or any incorporated city and town, or to any tide or swamp lands.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The motion is to recommit the bill to the Committee on Public Lands.

The motion was agreed to.

MARTHA J. COSTON.

Mr. CRAGIN. I move to take up Senate bill No. 728, which is a very short bill, and will not consume time.

The motion was agreed to, and the bill (S. No. 728) for the relief of Martha J. Coston was read the second time and considered as in Committee of the Whole. It appropriates $15,000 to Martha J. Coston, in full of all claim and demand of her upon the Government of the United States for the use of the Coston signal-light, and the manufacture by her of the same.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I should like to have some explanation of the bill. Is there a printed report in the case?

Mr. CRAGIN. There is a printed report, which I ask to have read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will read the report.

Mr. CRAGIN. I hope Senators will listen carefully to the report, so as to save any further explanation of the bill.

The Secretary read the following report, submitted by Mr. CRAGIN, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, April 12:

The Committee on Naval Affairs, to whom was referred the memorial of Martha J. Coston, have had the same under consideration, and submit the following report:

This claim was considered by the House Committee on Naval Affairs the last Congress, and a bill reported for relief of petitioner, accompanied by report No. 334, which is referred to as embracing a statement of the facts in the case before us.

Mrs. Coston is the widow of Benjamin F. Coston, the inventor of the telegraphic night-signals which bear his name, an invention and system perfected by her since her husband's death, and which was adopted and has been used by our naval and life-saving service for many years.

In 1859 these signals were tested, and at the commencement of the war the Department made a proposition to the petitioner to sell to the Government the right to manufacture these signals for the use of the Navy, and an appropriation for the purpose was passed, which she accepted. The officers of the Government found it difficult (if not impossible) to manufacture them to advantage, and the Secretary of the Navy requested Mrs. Coston to undertake their manufacture for the Navy; and the price per set of twelve pieces was agreed upon at $4.50. This was in the spring of 1861; the signals were delivered, and the price named was paid. The petitioner urged at that time, and now claims, that, by reason of the increased cost of labor and materials, she was entitled to, and should have received, an advance over and above the price stipulated. To this complaint, however, the Department would not listen, as the price had been fixed by agreement, and it is believed by the committee that she continued in the business of supplying these signals to the Government almost, if not quite, without profit.

By law it was provided that on contracts made previous to its passage the taxes and duties subsequently imposed should be paid by the purchaser, and when the petitioner endeavored to obtain the amount of taxes from the Navy Department she was met with the suggestion that no written agreement could be found, contracting with her at the price named; therefore the law was not applicable to her case. Near the close of the war the Department increased the price of her signals to $6 per set, thus acknowledging the justice of her demand; but there were very few delivered after this period and the increase did not cover those already furnished. Subsequent to the time of entering into the agreement referred to, taxes on manufacturers' sales were imposed and had to be paid by the petitioner; additional duties were also levied on some of the articles entering into these signals, the prices for labor almost doubled, and the chemicals used increased in cost from 50 to 75 per cent., and the certificates given her in payment were sold at a discount.

The following letter from Rear-Admiral Smith is made a part of this report:

WASHINGTON, July 1, 1865.

SIR: In regard to the reference from you to me of Mrs. M. J. Coston's letter to you of June 28 last, touching compensation to her for the Coston signals, I beg leave to say that the arrangement for employing those signals was made in the Bureau of Detail in the spring of 1861, then in charge of Commodore Paulding. The price was agreed upon, as well as I remember, at $4.50 per set of twelve pieces. The signals were furnished as required, and paid for at that price.

The war greatly increased the cost of the materials, and, consequently, Mrs. Coston petitioned for an increase of price on that before the war agreed upon. This was not granted, on the plea that the price had been fixed. The delivery, receipt, and payment for the signals are ample evidence of that fact.

By the act of June 30, 1864, section 97, persons who shall have made any contract prior to the passage of said act are authorized to add to the prices thereof so much money as will be equivalent to the duty so subsequently imposed. Now Mrs. Coston claims that the price of the signals was fixed before the passage of the act referred to, and that she has a just claim upon the Government for the amount of the tax.

The claim of Mrs. Coston for an increase of price on the signals, after the contingencies of the war had greatly increased the cost of the materials, was just and fair, in my opinion; as that request was denied by the Ordnance Department, she is certainly entitled to the tax on the bills rendered.

I have the honor to be, respectfully, your obedient servant,

JOS. SMITH.

Hon. GIDEON WELLES,
Secretary of the Navy, Washington, D. C.

The petitioner paid taxes, as per statement, $13,000, and if allowed interest would make her claim amount to some over $21,000.

The committee, after careful examination of the papers before them, have arrived at the same conclusion as the House committee of the Forty-third Congress, and recommend that Mrs. Coston be paid the sum of $15,000, in full satisfaction of her claim against the Government, and report the accompanying bill and ask its passage.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment.

Mr. WRIGHT. I wish to make an inquiry of the Senator from New Hampshire. As I remember the reading of the report, the committee find that this lady is entitled to some $13,000. Upon what principle is it that the bill allows more than $13,000?

Mr. CRAGIN. I cannot state exactly the principle. It was clear to the committee that she paid taxes in the neighborhood of $15,000, which the Department ought to have paid under a law that was passed after this contract was made authorizing the manufacturer or contractor to add the tax to the price. It also appeared to the committee that the price which she received was very low indeed, and as the House committee had reported upon this same subject to give her $15,000 we thought that we would put it at $15,000. The sum was between thirteen and fourteen thousand dollars, and there was some question about the amount, she claiming that she paid $15,000 of actual taxes. I believe the bill to be a very just and proper one, and I hope it may be allowed to pass.

Mr. WRIGHT. I have nothing to say in reference to the justice of the bill. As I understand the claim, so far as it applies to anything in excess of the $13,000, in round numbers, the gentleman from New Hampshire admits it does not depend upon any principle so far as any right to repay interest is concerned, but he rather puts it upon the ground that the committee do not think she is entitled to the interest but is entitled to something more than $13,000, and therefore they fix the amount at $15,000.

Mr. CRAGIN. The sum was not fixed upon any ground of allowing interest at all. It was clear that she paid over $13,000 taxes, and it may have been $15,000. The exact calculation as to dollars and cents was not made, but the taxes amounted to between $13,000 and $15,000; in my judgment as near $15,000 as $13,000.

Mr. WRIGHT. With the understanding from the record and from what has taken place in the debate that it shall be considered and understood that the Senate does not recognize in any way whatever the right of one dollar's interest upon this claim, I shall withhold any objection to the bill.

Mr. CRAGIN. That is the understanding. It was the understanding of the committee.

Mr. WRIGHT. I do not think one dollar of interest should be allowed upon any claim of this kind. As I understand, the committee have made no such allowance; but they find that this $15,000 is what she would be entitled to, independent of and outside of any claim for interest, and this is not coupled with a recommendation to pay interest.

Mr. CRAGIN. That is all.

Mr. COCKRELL. I should like to ask how we are to get around this clause in the report of the committee

> The petitioner paid taxes as per statement, $13,000.

That seems to be the statement of the petitioner herself as to the amount of taxes paid, according to the report.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I would not vote against any claim which I was satisfied was correct; but this stands as a claim of indemnity for taxes paid upon a contract made with the Government of the United States in 1861. It is no doubt true that, like all other contractors under the Government, the contractor in this case realized a profit upon the contract. She was subjected by the laws of Congress to taxation upon certain materials used in fulfilling the contract. The party now comes to Congress to be indemnified for the amount of taxes paid upon materials used under the contract, which were furnished to the Government.

Mr. CRAGIN. The Senator will allow me to suggest that he certainly is in error. The law authorized the manufacturer to add the tax to the price of the goods.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I understand that.

Mr. CRAGIN. And the Department claimed that this contract was not in writing. They could not find any written contract and therefore they did not allow her to add the tax. It was not a tax for materials; it was a tax for the gross price of the manufactured articles, and there could be no distinction made in justice or equity whether this contract was in writing or whether it was verbal. The Department did not allow her this tax, while under the law she ought to have been allowed the tax, especially as she was manufacturing these articles at a loss. That is all there is in the case.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I take it for granted if this lady, who had a contract, had come within the terms of the law, the Department would not have refused to allow her the amount of the tax which she paid. At any rate, I am opposed, after persons have entered into contracts with the Government and have made profits upon their contracts, that they should come here and be exempted by the action of Congress from taxes which have been imposed by the laws of Congress upon them. The people of the United States, all over the country, have been subjected to taxation, and have paid taxes when they had no contracts out of which they might have made a profit. In the State in which I live, and in other States of the Union, private citizens having no contract with the Government have been subject to the taxation of the Government, and have paid their taxes. I see no reason why parties who have had contracts and made profits out of their contracts should not be subject to the same measure of justice. I am therefore opposed to the appropriation of money for this purpose.

Mr. WRIGHT. I should be glad if the Secretary would report the bill again.

The Chief Clerk read the bill.

Mr. WRIGHT. I move to strike out "15" and insert "13;" so as to make the allowance $13,000 instead of $15,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, and was read the third time.

On the passage of the bill a division was called for; which resulted—ayes 24, noes 6; no quorum voting.

Mr. SHERMAN. Many Senators are present who are not voting. I call attention to the fact.

Several SENATORS. Let us divide again.

The question being again put, there were on a division—ayes 27, noes 13.

So the bill was passed.

AMENDMENTS TO APPROPRIATION BILLS.

Mr. HOWE, from the Joint Committee on the Library, submitted certain amendments intended to be submitted by that committee to the bill (H. R. No. 2571) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1877, and for other purposes; which were referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

JAPANESE INDEMNITY FUND.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The morning hour has expired.

Mr. SHERMAN. I move that the Senate postpone the consideration of all other matters and take up the bill (S. No. 263) to amend the laws relating to legal tender of silver coin.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will lay before the Senate the unfinished business, being the bill (S. No. 626) in relation to the Japanese indemnity fund.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Mr. President——

Mr. SHERMAN. I submit my motion to postpone.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I do not wish to interfere with any of the rights of the Senator from Ohio; but I understood that I had the floor on this bill when it should be taken up.

Mr. SHERMAN. I was recognized before the bill was called up. I do not wish any controversy with the Senator from New Jersey on the subject. I simply wish to have the Senate decide by its vote which of these bills shall be taken up.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair submitted the unfinished business to have it properly before the Senate, and the Senator from Ohio had risen pending the statement from the Chair for the purpose of moving a postponement. The Senator from Ohio moves to postpone the present and all prior orders for the purpose of considering the silver bill, so called.

Mr. SHERMAN. Senate bill No. 263.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. This bill has been reported upon six times, and been favorably reported upon. It had been discussed for two or three days fully before the Senate at the time when the Senate took up the matter of impeachment. I think that it will be economy of time to dispose of this bill now without further discussion.

There was an amendment offered striking out that part of the bill which provides for interest, and I wish to call the attention of the Senate now to amendments that I propose to the bill which I think will meet with the approval of all the Senate, and I shall be very brief.

Mr. SHERMAN. I would rather the Senate should dispose of the pending question first. However, if the Senator says it will take but a little time——

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I believe I am strictly in order for this reason, because the brief remarks which I propose to make will show the Senate the propriety of disposing of this subject now.

Mr. EDMUNDS, (to Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN.) The merits of your bill are perfectly open on this question.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. This fund amounts to $1,414,051.96. That is the value of the fund as invested at the price the securities now sell for.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Coin or currency?

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Coin. The amount of charges that there are against the fund, I understand, is $19,956. That is money which has been expended by the Navy Department, which ought properly to be charged to this fund. The prize-money, if the second section is retained in the bill, as I hope it may be, is $125,000. These two sums, taken out of the fund as soon as it is received, amount to $144,956. Now, if we pay the balance to the Japanese, with 5 per cent. interest, they will receive $795,956, and there will be to cover into the Treasury $473,000. So the Senate will see that after taking out the $125,000 and the $19,000, and after you pay the Japanese government the balance with 5 per cent. interest, there will be $473,000 to cover into the Treasury. I think that is right for this reason: That excess of the fund is made up of the items of exchange, compound interest, and the appreciation of the securities.

If this money had been loaned by Japan to this country we would not give them the benefit of the exchange; we would not give them the benefit of compound interest; we would not give them the benefit of the appreciation of the securities; or, if the securities had depreciated, that would not relieve us from our obligation to pay this money. Therefore, it seems to me that the amendments I shall propose must commend themselves to the Senate, and I should think would commend the bill. I propose, if the Senate go on with this bill, so to amend it as that all charges against this fund shall be met, and that we pay the balance with 5 per cent. interest, not paying the compound interest, not paying the appreciation of securities or the profit of exchange, which amount to some $473,000.

I trust the Senate will adhere to this bill, and now finally dispose of it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The unfinished business being before the Senate, the Senator from Ohio moves the postponement of this bill and all prior orders for the purpose of considering what is known as the silver bill.

Mr. SHERMAN. I ask the Senator from New Jersey how long he thinks this bill will occupy?

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I do not think it will occupy more than half an hour; but, if it does take more, it will occupy less time now than at any future period.

Mr. SHERMAN. I am willing to let the matter pass, because I do not wish to antagonize the silver bill with a matter which has been partially discussed. I withdraw my motion for the present.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I move after the word "fund," in the fourth line of the first section, to insert "originally paid to the Government of the United States."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There is an amendment pending.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Perhaps the Senator is perfecting the text of what is proposed to be stricken out.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is informed that it is not an amendment to the amendment. The Secretary will report the pending amendment.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to amend the bill by inserting——

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. The pending amendment is to strike out all that relates to the accumulation of interest in the ninth line, I think.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I thought the amendment was to strike out the first section.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. No; that has been voted on.

The CHIEF CLERK. The pending question is on the amendment of Mr. THURMAN, in line 9 of section 1 to strike out the words:

> Said indemnity fund, including all accumulations of interest.

And in lieu thereof to insert:

> The sum paid by said government without interest.

So as to authorize the President—

> To pay over to the government of Japan the residue of the sum paid by said government, without interest.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from New Jersey desire to amend this?

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. No; I do not desire to amend that. I think that amendment ought not to be adopted. The amendments which I have suggested will have the effect of taking out the $125,000 and the $19,000 of the money as soon as it was received, so that the Japanese government shall not have interest on the $144,000, and then to pay them the balance with 5 per cent. interest, which will leave about $473,000 in gold to be covered into the Treasury, that excess arising from the profit in exchange, from the appreciation of the securities, and from the manner in which this fund has been confounded, three items which I do not see that the Japanese government have any claim upon.

Mr. SHERMAN. As I understand, then, the Senator proposes to give back the principal of the fund less the amount which we now appropriate for salvage.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. With 5 per cent. interest.

Mr. SHERMAN. Compounded?

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Five per cent. simple interest; and that will leave of the fund $473,000 in gold.

Mr. SHERMAN. I do not think the Government ought to set the example of paying interest. This money was collected from Japan, and we certainly ought not to pay interest on it.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. The reason for it, I think, is this: if we improperly got the money, and compelled the Japanese government to pay 5 per cent. interest to obtain it in England, and 7 per cent. to obtain another portion of it, it is right that we should pay it as if it had been a loan to us at 5 per cent.

Mr. SHERMAN. If so, we ought to pay the compound interest as well.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I think not.

Mr. SHERMAN. They had to pay it on the Senator's ground.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. If the Japanese government had loaned us the money—and I treat it just in that shape—we should have paid them 5 per cent. simple interest, and that is what I propose to do, after deducting the claims and charges properly made upon the fund when first received.

Mr. SHERMAN. If anybody else had loaned it to us, we should have paid interest annually or semi-annually, regularly, which is the same as compounding interest. I had made up my mind to content myself with simply voting against the bill, to gratify a sentiment that seems to prevail with the Senator from New Jersey and in the Senate that we probably exacted severe and hard terms from Japan, though I do not think the arguments establish that position. If to gratify that desire to do a generous, liberal thing that might probably aid us in our intercourse with Japan, and perhaps with China, it is thought desirable, after deducting the expenses incurred by the United States and paid to our officers in the nature of salvage or as a reward for extraordinary services, to pay back the balance of the principal sum to Japan, perhaps I would content myself even by not voting against the proposition, though I cannot answer the argument of the Senator from Vermont, [Mr. EDMUNDS,] which showed very conclusively that we received this money not only for expenses incurred in putting down a rebellion but we received it for services rendered to Japan in putting down a rebellion, as stated by the treaty itself.

But without enlarging upon that argument, if the Senator from New Jersey will confine his proposition to a simple refunding of the principal sum without interest, deducting only the principal sum that we pay out of the fund, I would not object. I think it rather generous and not a very wise thing to do; but still there is a kind of reason for it that may be given that from it we should derive benefit in attracting to us the kindly feeling and good-will of the government of Japan.

Mr. HAMILTON. I merely rise to put the same question as the Senator from Ohio. If the Japanese government borrowed money from England, did it practically compound interest? I ask if in any case there is not compound interest paid where you pay interest every six months?

Mr. EDMUNDS. It appears to me, if the ground on which this bill is pressed by my friend from New Jersey is sound, there is no escape from the conclusion that we ought to pay back this money with all its accumulations, because his ground is that by force of superior power we coerced the government of Japan into paying us an enormous sum of money in respect of which we had no claim; and thereby there was created a kind of trust—a wrong-doer holding this money—a kind of trust in favor of the government of Japan. On that state of facts it is evident that equity in all such cases, as well as the law, charges the wrong holder of money with all that he has made out of it. If he has put it to profit the profit belongs to the owner of the money; and we have put this money to profit by way of exchange in getting it here, which happened to be largely favorable at that time, I believe; and by way of investing it in our own bonds, so that it accumulates to $1,400,000 and upward. If we took this sum of money of $750,000, or whatever it was, from the government of Japan wrongfully, and that money has earned in our hands by way of exchange and interest enough to make it $1,400,000, the $1,400,000 belongs to Japan on every principle of justice that prevails between man and man.

Mr. HAMILTON. I ask the Senator if the money has earned anything in our possession?

Mr. EDMUNDS. So it is stated, that it has accumulated until it is $1,400,000; that in the first place there was a large accretion to it on account of exchange; and then it was invested by the State Department in our own bonds, which otherwise would have been put into the market for so much, and we used the money, and the bonds are in the State Department in place of it, just as if it had been invested in English bonds or State bonds; so that in truth and in fact, so far as equity goes, this sum of money that Japan gave to us has earned by sheer force of its own industry, if I can use such a term, so much. It has got up to that, not by a system of fictitious book-keeping, but by real gains, as the money, if it had been invested by a private individual in the same way, would have accumulated.

Now I repeat if this money really belongs to the government of Japan in equity and good conscience, and was wrongfully taken from her, (which is the ground on which we are asked to restore it,) then it does seem to me that every dollar it has earned in respect of the exchange which accumulated upon it in bringing it to this country and in respect of the interest upon it, ought to be restored. But the bill itself as reported from the Committee on Foreign Relations, if the Senate will look at it, does not seem to proceed on the theory, after all, that this money was wrongfully extorted from Japan and that it is the money of that government, because you will observe that the first section provides that the President—after taking out a certain sum from it, $125,000—"is further authorized" (I pass over the unimportant words about being incompatible with our relations to foreign powers) "to pay over to the government of Japan the residue of said indemnity fund, including all accumulations of interest." So far it is on the theory named. Now—

> Or after correspondence with said government, and in a manner satisfactory to it, to transfer said fund, together with its increase, to the government of Japan in trust, the income thereof to be perpetually used for the promotion of education in Japan.

That is a very extraordinary provision in a bill if this money belongs to the government of Japan and we are wrongfully withholding it.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. That was stricken out.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I understand that it was stricken out; but I am speaking of the theory on which this bill went when it left the hands of the Committee on Foreign Relations, as derived from the face of the bill.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I will state to my friend that when I called up the bill, after conferring with the members of the committee, that provision was stricken out on my motion, as their organ, and the reason that it was ever introduced there, as I understand, was at the instance of the representative of Japan.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I do not know what the representative of Japan has done. If the representative of Japan is authorized by his Emperor to provide that the money of Japan now held in trust by the Government of the United States shall be turned over to the government that owns it in trust for another purpose, then it is rather extraordinary diplomatic intercourse I must say; but it may have taken place, and I have no doubt my friend so understands it; and as we are dealing with oriental nations perhaps it is fair to infer that it did take place.

But what I was saying was that on the face of the bill as it comes from the committee it is inconsistent, plainly inconsistent to my mind, with the idea that this money belonged to the government of Japan of right and that it was in our hands by wrong. The committee undoubtedly saw the force of that, and the correction was made, striking out anything which would raise an implication of that character.

I do not want to spend the time of the Senate over again (although it is a long time ago since we had the bill up we have had our thoughts devoted to a good many other subjects since) in discussing the merits of the first section, which is the chief section of the bill, in respect to the government of Japan; but I merely wish to repeat what I said before, founded upon what appeared to me to be the clear result contained in the reports of the Department of State on this subject in print, that this money was not obtained from Japan by any unjust exaction of force, that it was obtained from Japan as the treaty states and as the correspondence and negotiation state, as a settlement of all accounts, so to speak, down to that date, and among those with the serious injuries done to the commerce of the United States by the interruption of intercourse through the so-called inland sea and by the interruption of our trade and commerce with ports which by treaty they had from time to time agreed to open and had not opened; and I do not believe that it was a penny in excess of what the real injury was, although not computable in figures, as such injuries never are, arising to our interests in the East from that course of conduct on the part of that empire. But, as I say, I am not going into the reference to the communications on the subject. I do not feel justified in doing so as it has been once done, and merely rose to restate my own conclusions. On the present and exact question, it appears to me plain that if we owe this government anything, we owe all that this money has accumulated.

Mr. DAWES. Mr. President, I had made up my mind from the beginning to vote for this bill. This is no part of the money of the Treasury of the United States; it is a distinct fund by itself, not held in the Treasury as a part of our money. There has been about it from the beginning stamped a character by those who hold it special, like a special deposit for a particular purpose. The first Secretary of State into whose hands it came, and those who have followed him, have all felt that about this fund there was something that prevented them from proposing, for a moment, to cover it into the Treasury and make it the money of the United States. Here it stands a fund by itself for that reason. I have been told from the beginning, ever since I have been here, in connection with the fund, that it really, in the forum of conscience, did not belong to us, and that that was the reason why the Secretary of State had kept it distinct. No one has more impressed me with that belief, or strengthened me in that belief, than the Senator from New Jersey himself, and he will permit me now to express my surprise that he proposes himself to take this fund so kept, stamped with that character, and divide it up. It does not belong to us, he tells us. I believe so. I believe so more firmly after I have heard him than before, and I believe that it never will rest until it reaches the place to which it justly belongs.

It is vain for us now to undertake to make terms with our sense of right and fair-dealing with this weak nation, and say "if they will quit with us by taking a third of it, or a half of it, or anything less than the whole of it, we will settle with them." Those who come after us will do this business over again, if we do not do it fully and fairly and frankly and because we feel that we have not this money. If we have a right to this money, let us say so, as the Senator from Vermont frankly and fairly, from his point of view, speaks as he ought to do. It belongs to us fairly in his opinion. From my standpoint it does not belong to us, and here it is. It has of its own momentum accumulated and grown into double and more. And yet the Senator from New Jersey this morning is willing to take $125,000 of it to pay as prize-money to those who, upon his showing here, had no more right to it than a banditti who had waylaid across the plains or the desert a train of merchant-men and in the name of the government whose flag they bore had arrested it, and then it had come into the hands of the Government itself and we proposed to take out $125,000 and stamp it prize-money and pay it as prize-money over to those parties, and then pay the parties robbed 5 per cent. simple interest on the balance, after taking out also $18,000 which may be or may not be, but I presume is, a proper charge upon it for expenses or something of that kind, as the Senator thinks it is. I do not speak of that; I speak of the item of $125,000. And then the idea is proposed that although 15 or perhaps 20 per cent. upon this fund has been made by the Secretary of State, for the Government of the United States has not done it, the Secretary holding it in trust for those to whom it belonged and for nobody else and investing the trust fund, as every trustee ought to, to the best of his knowledge and prudence and sagacity, and thereby making that trust fund which was once $500,000 now $1,400,000, the accretions shall be retained by this Government, and thereby the United States will strike a balance in this operation and have just as much when they get through as if they had not paid this out.

I prefer to let the matter go on a little longer. Let us postpone this a few years longer, and with a Secretary of State of such business capacity as I hope we shall always have, we cannot only pay back the original sum and 5 per cent., but we can make a handsome speculation; we can found a benevolent institution here, and we can name it something that will be expressive of the origin and the method by which we have acquired this fund; and we can make it, like the Smithsonian, an instrumentality for the diffusion of knowledge among men, or something of that kind. But there will come after us those who will not deem this right, and they will think one of two things: that we have no business to pay back anything to Japan, as the Senator from Vermont thinks, or that we should pay back all that we got from her.

I shall vote against the amendment; and then I shall vote against the bill itself if the amendment be adopted.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Mr. President, there seems to be no difference of opinion in the Senate as to the amendment which is now pending. Those who are favorable to the bill are in favor of paying no interest, which is the amendment of the Senator from Ohio, [Mr. THURMAN,] and those who have opposed the bill are in favor of paying compound interest. I suppose, therefore, we may all unite in voting down, if that is the opinion of the Senate, the amendment of the Senator from Ohio. I would much rather pay this money back with all the accumulations of interest. I would much rather adopt the theory of the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. DAWES] and pay it back with all its accumulations. It would be a more generous thing. But it struck me that we should do common justice if we made the deductions which are properly chargeable to this fund at the time of its receipt, and then pay interest on the balance.

My friend from Texas [Mr. HAMILTON] asks me whether if we had paid the interest every six months it would not have been compounded. It would certainly have been compounded, but then the Government of the United States when it owes a claim does not generally pay any interest; and therefore our paying 5 per cent. interest here is exceptional. In looking at the other items which go to make up this fund, while it would be magnanimous and generous to pay over the fund with all its accumulations, still it struck me that it was hardly a demand of justice, for if we had borrowed the money we should have profited by the exchange in our favor. If we had borrowed the money they would have no claim to the appreciation of the securities in which it was invested, and their claim on us would not be affected by the depreciation of its securities. And if we had borrowed the money we should not have compounded that interest to them. It struck me, therefore, that it would be just, not magnanimous, not generous, to pay them back all, after we made the deduction of the proper charges from the fund with 5 per cent. interest; that they could not say they had a claim for the appreciation of the securities in which the money was invested, for the compound interest, or for the exchange, but I would a great deal rather, as the Senator from Massachusetts suggests, that we should pay back to them the whole fund just as it is, for I believe it is unclean money in our Treasury. I believe that we might better pay ten times the amount than cover it into the Treasury. We are a poor people, but we are an honorable people, and the people of this country, without a dissenting voice almost, demand that this money, the result of their treaty with seventeen ships of war threatening them, should be paid back—a fund taken for indemnity when they had within a year paid us every cent that we demanded and when there had been no injury during that year. There is but one sentiment in this country. Six committees of Congress have reported that the money should be paid back.

Talk about its being a sentiment! Common honesty is a sentiment. It is not a romance; it is a reality. I trust that this Congress will pay back the money. I would rather see the whole fund paid back, as my friend from Massachusetts suggests; but common justice requires that we should pay back the balance with at least 5 per cent. interest.

I hope, Mr. President, that the amendment of the Senator from Ohio now pending will be voted down.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Ohio, [Mr. THURMAN,] which is in line 9 of the first section, to strike out "said indemnity fund, including all accumulations of interest," and in lieu thereof insert "the sum paid by said Government without interest."

Mr. SHERMAN. The remarks made by the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN] need a little reply. The Government of the United States made the demand upon Japan, enforced that demand, and received this money. That was in 1864. The money has remained in the custody of officers of the United States from that time to the present. Not only that, I find that in March, 1870, the Government of the United States formally demanded of Japan the prompt payment of the balance then unpaid of this indemnity; not only did it in a peremptory way, but told Japan distinctly, in strong diplomatic language, that this was the final demand; and this demand was made by three other civilized and Christian nations of the world. Now, for a Senator of the United States to come here and say that the Government of the United States made this demand in 1864 without any color of excuse; that this was a robbery; that this was money extorted from a weak and feeble nation; that we ought to pay it back; that it is dishonored money in the Treasury of the United States or in the custody of her officers, it seems to me, is to characterize in strong language, stronger that it deserves, the conduct of men who have held office for ten years in this Government, and men who have held office under four leading Christian nations of the world, and I believe it is totally unjust.

Sir, the conduct of Japan in interfering with the commerce of the world in those straits was unjustifiable. Undoubtedly the diplomatic policy of the Tycoon and of the other authorities there, together with the governor of one of his provinces, the name of which I cannot recall, was full of duplicity—confessedly so. It did put the governments of Christian nations to great trouble to enforce their conceded rights to navigate an open navigable strait. Not only that, but Japan agreed to the payment of this money, and never has set up a claim that the demand for it was unjust, so far as I know. The papers here before us, and the communications which I have now, admit the justice of the claim in 1870, and give reasons why the money had not been fully paid according to the treaty before that time.

It seems to me, therefore, that this is a mere sentiment. It is not a just claim, in any sense of the word, for repaying back money extorted. It is simply a sentiment, a disposition to be liberal and generous, more than generous, to a nation with whom we desire to make friendly relations; and, hence, I do not like to hear our Government charged with being dishonest, and the governments of other Christain nations charged with being dishonored, with being robbers and oppressors upon Japan, merely because we demanded of her the enforcement of our commercial rights, merely because we made a treaty with her in which she acknowledged that this money was due to us, and because we demanded that it should be paid.

It seems to me, therefore, that the Senator from New Jersey, in his eager desire to advocate this bill, goes too far. I do not believe this money was extorted from Japan. I believe this is money that under the laws of the United States should have been covered into the Treasury; and I wish now to call attention, as I have done heretofore, to the tendency of officers of the Government to make these special funds, to have them rest in some place where they can get at them for some other purpose than the general purposes of the law. All the money should be collected and put into the Treasury for the general good. It has been the practice of this Government since its organization to set aside funds in the hands of some officer instead of covering them into the Treasury. We have twenty or thirty special funds. We have the Cherokee fund; we have the Chickasaw fund; we have the Chinese fund; we have the Japan fund; we have also the fund derived from the Geneva award, and various funds kept aside in the nature of trust funds. This should not be. By the plain mandate of the law, this money when received from Japan ought to have been covered into the Treasury of the United States; and I ask the Senator from New Jersey if he can show me any authority of law to keep it out of the Treasury? The law is mandatory.

Mr. DAWES. Does it not require a positive authority of law to cover it into the Treasury?

Mr. SHERMAN. A treaty is the highest law. Here is money received under a treaty. When money is received from an individual in the nature of taxes it is covered into the Treasury. This money was received under a treaty, and the law required it to go into the Treasury of the United States; and, when it is covered into the Treasury, it is under the seal and sanction of Congress.

Mr. DAWES. Of course the Senator from Ohio is very familiar with these things, but I call his attention to a manifest distinction between money covered into the Treasury and money that is in the Treasury outside of any specific authority. Any money covered into the Treasury is subject to all the drafts that may be made on the Treasury; money that gets into the Treasury otherwise than by a special covering of it into the Treasury is not subject to draft. It would remain there for all time as a special deposit. In one sense money put into a bank is a deposit in the bank; but money that is put in on a general deposit is one thing, and that put there as a special deposit is another. This, if it ever could have been treated as a part of the money in the Treasury, could never have been treated as covered into the Treasury subject to the drafts of the Treasury generally, except by special act of Congress.

Mr. SHERMAN. What I complain of is that this money was not covered into the Treasury in pursuance of the law. All money received by the Government of the United States from taxes, or any other source, unless the law makes it a trust fund, is by law in the Treasury, and it is made the mandatory duty of the proper officers to cover it into the Treasury. What is meant by the term "covered into the Treasury?" It means simply to put it under the bar and seal of the Treasury of the United States, so that it cannot then be paid out except in pursuance of an appropriation made by law. This money has been lying there for years. I do not blame the Secretary of State, for he has only followed the example of his predecessors and of many officers, for there has been a tendency constantly to set aside special funds to be kept in reserve. I do not say that the officers would do anything improper with the money so reserved; but when this money was collected under a treaty it ought to have been covered into the Treasury of the United States, and then we never should have had this controversy; but, it being separated and segregated as a trust fund without any law, it is now, of course, subject to some other disposition. It is kept out of the Treasury.

I do not like to hear or see my Government arraigned and the governments of other Christian nations arraigned in their intercourse with Japan merely because of a sentiment, of a desire simply to be generous and magnanimous with this country, with whom our relations are becoming important. There is a disposition to give it back this fund. We may reconcile it to our sense of propriety to do that as a matter of commercial interest as well as commercial honor, if it is deemed public policy to do so; but I do not like to hear our Government classed as a robber plundering a weak and feeble nation, nor do I believe such a position can properly be assigned to it. I think now the better way would be to cover this money into the Treasury of the United States, where it ought to have gone the very day it was received by any officer of the United States. There it would have been surrounded by the safeguards of the law and the Constitution and could only have been paid out in pursuance of appropriations made by law. It then could long since have been applied to the reduction and extinguishment of a part of our national debt.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Ohio, [Mr. THURMAN.]

Mr. SHERMAN. I call for the yeas and nays on the amendment of my colleague.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. SHERMAN. This amendment is to pay the principal sum without interest.

Mr. MAXEY. Before the vote is taken I wish to say that on this question I am paired with the absent Senator from New Jersey, [Mr. RANDOLPH.] He, if present, would vote against and I should vote for the amendment.

The question being taken by yeas and nays, resulted—yeas 18, nays 23; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Bogy, Cameron of Wisconsin, Caperton, Cockrell, Goldthwaite, Harvey, Hitchcock, Howe, Ingalls, Johnston, Kelly, McCreery, Norwood, Robertson, Sargent, Sherman, Wadleigh, and Withers—18.

NAYS—Messrs. Anthony, Booth, Boutwell, Bruce, Christiancy, Conkling, Cragin, Dawes, Edmunds, Ferry, Frelinghuysen, Hamilton, Hamlin, Kernan, McMillan, Mitchell, Morrill of Vermont, Morton, Spencer, Stevenson, West, Windom, and Wright—23.

ABSENT—Messrs. Alcorn, Allison, Barnum, Bayard, Burnside, Cameron of Pennsylvania, Clayton, Conover, Cooper, Davis, Dennis, Dorsey, Eaton, Gordon, Jones of Florida, Jones of Nevada, Key, Logan, McDonald, Maxey, Merrimon, Morrill of Maine, Oglesby, Paddock, Patterson, Randolph, Ransom, Saulsbury, Sharon, Thurman, Wallace, and Whyte—32.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. EDMUNDS. In order to take directly the sense of the Senate on this question of the duty of paying back this money to Japan, separated from all question about prize-money and bounty, I move to strike out the first section, and ask for the yeas and nays. I have no remarks to make about it.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. That vote was taken.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Not as it is now stated.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. But the question?

Mr. EDMUNDS. I do not remember that.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. That vote has already been taken, I think, without the section being even altered.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. So the Chair understands. The motion to strike out was rejected.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Has not the section been amended since?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It has not been.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Then I do not want to make the motion over again, and I do not suppose it would be in order if I did.

Mr. SARGENT. Has not the amendment which the Senator from New Jersey reported to the bill, so aptly stated this morning, been offered yet?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New Jersey has not offered an amendment to-day.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended.

Mr. SARGENT. I do not understand this proceeding. The chairman of the committee stated that he was going to offer certain amendments, and very carefully stated the character of them. I wanted the pleasure of voting on those amendments. I do not understand why they are not offered.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. My friend from California was not in his seat when I made a statement to the Senate, which I suppose will be accepted as the reason why they are not offered. I hoped to make this bill more acceptable to the Senate—to those who have voted against it, and for whose opinion I have the highest respect; and therefore I proposed to prune the bill down, so that it might be nothing more than an act of cold, narrow justice. I proposed to deduct from the sum charges which might be made against the fund, to make that deduction when the fund is first received, so that they would carry no interest, and then to pay over the balance, with 5 per cent. simple interest, not giving to Japan the benefit of any compounding of interest, or of any exchange, or any appreciation of securities. I found, however, that that made the bill more unpalatable to those who were opposed to it, and that the amendments were not acceptable even to the friends of the bill, and for that reason I do not propose to offer them. I think that as a matter of magnanimity, of generosity, the bill is better without the amendments than with them.

Mr. EDMUNDS. What is the pending question, Mr. President?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on concurring in the amendments made as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. SHERMAN. I ask for the reading of the bill as it stands amended.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be read as amended.

The Chief Clerk read the bill as amended as in Committee of the Whole, as follows:

That the President be, and hereby is, authorized to reserve from the Japanese indemnity fund the sum of $125,000, to be used in the manner hereinafter provided; and is further authorized to pay over to the government of Japan the residue of said indemnity fund, including all accumulations of interest.

SEC. 2. That the President be authorized to ascertain the claims of the officers and crew of the United States ship Wyoming for bounty, ransom, or prize-money on account of the destruction of piratical vessels on the 16th day of July, 1863, in the Straits of Simonoseki; and also the claims of that portion of the officers and crew of the United States ship Jamestown who manned the Takiang in the bombardment of the hostile forts at the Straits of Simonoseki on the 5th, 6th, 7th, and 8th days of September, 1864; and if, in his judgment, they are found either in law or equity to be justly chargeable against this fund, then he is authorized and directed, in full satisfaction thereof, to cause the sum of $125,000, reserved from said indemnity fund, or such part thereof as, in his judgment, shall be just and equitable, to be distributed among said officers and crews, in accordance with the laws and regulations governing the distribution of prize-money in the Navy of the United States: Provided, That no money in said distribution shall be paid to the assignee of the mariner, but only to the mariner or his duly authorized attorney in fact, or, in case of his decease, to his legal representative, excluding any assignee: And provided, That if, after the satisfaction of the aforesaid claims, any part of the $125,000 reserved for this purpose shall remain unused, then he is further authorized to pay over to the Japanese government the said remainder in the manner provided in the first section of this act.

Mr. HAMILTON. I move to strike out the whole of section 2.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The first question is on concurring in the amendments made as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. EDMUNDS. There is no objection to those amendments, I take it.

Mr. SARGENT. Let me make one remark. I listened to my friend from New Jersey while he gave the reasons for not offering his amendments which he suggested this morning. To my mind the reasons given are hardly satisfactory, and I should still like to have an opportunity to vote for the amendments.

The question of the amendment offered by the Senator from Ohio now absent [Mr. THURMAN] was decided by a very slight majority, and it may be that there are Senators who might not vote for that who would still vote for the amendments proposed by the Senator from New Jersey on the ground that they provide for simple interest at 5 per cent. from the time the money was paid to the United States, and would prefer to pay that simple interest rather than to return the whole amount, less that which is retained to reward our sailors; and that they would prefer that it should be 5 per cent. rather than none.

I am opposed to the whole bill, as is well understood. I am opposed to it both on principle and on policy. I desire to protect the Treasury so far as I can, and if I cannot prevent any of this money being paid, then I am in favor of preventing as much as possible. I voted for the amendment of the Senator from Ohio because it retained the largest amount for the Treasury. I should, if I had the opportunity, vote for the amendment of the Senator from New Jersey because it retains the next largest amount, and I should certainly vote for an amendment to reduce the amount in any way. I do so because I do not believe we have improperly received the money. I do not believe we ought to pay it back in advance of a request by the Japanese government therefor. I think there are claims very much more pressing on us than these claims, appealing more strongly to our sense of equity and to our sense of justice. We received consideration by treaty from France years and years ago, and yet we have always refused to pay the French spoliation claims, and thereby bankrupted hundreds of our own citizens, and allowed their just claims to remain unpaid. True Congress on repeated occasions recognized them, but the Executive at one time, on account of the condition of the Treasury, or for some other reason he might give, refused his assent. Sometimes one House has passed a bill to pay them, and it has not received action in the other House during the same Congress. Then again the House which had before refused or declined to pass the bill has passed it, and the other branch has not given its consent. So years have rolled away and this money has not been paid, although the right to it has been recognized as just by repeated reports to Congress, and by the action of the different branches of Congress, and there have been Presidents in the executive chair who never had an opportunity to sign such a bill who unquestionably would have done it if the opportunity had been presented, they believing in its full justice.

It seems to me it would be very much more magnanimous and just for us to attend to that matter, to apply this money to the payment of those claims, and whatever additional amount is necessary, rather than to engage upon this Quixotic, allow me to say, contest with other nations, whether we first shall carry back money of which we, in connection with them, as we say by our action, have robbed Japan.

I am opposed to it because it casts a reflection upon other nations who acted with us. I am opposed to it because the bill itself confesses that there were meritorious services rendered by our sailors in Japanese waters, the necessity for which was raised by the acts of Japan and by those whom they should control and those for whom they are responsible if they do not control. Our sailors were compelled to go there and protect our commerce and the honor of our flag and vindicate our national right; and for the insult to our flag which they redressed or punished who can estimate the damage? Who can say that one million or two million is too great to cover up a spot like that? If there were an insult to the flag, an interruption of our commerce, and annoyances such as one nation may inflict upon another, then the reparation which was made and which was agreed to by the United States and by the other powers and by Japan cannot be held to have been too great.

Therefore I am opposed to the bill, both in principle and in policy. I am opposed to it because it is contrary to our own proceedings heretofore. If this is demanded of our equity, there are many instances in our history where that equity is more strongly appealed to. We treated with ruthless hands the Indian tribes which were nations upon this continent from time immemorial, when, in spite of the strongest equity presented by themselves and considerations for their improvement in the arts of civilized life, we drove the Cherokees from Georgia and practically confiscated their lands, and have continued the same course down to the time when we just now have invaded the Black Hills to rob the Sioux of the minerals which are in their domain. During all these years we have used with ruthless hands the Indians, have robbed them of their territory, and meanly doled out the compensation made for them. If our equity, our sense of justice, is appealed to, here is a field where it may have ample exercise. If the Treasury of the United States is to be depleted in order that we may do justice to those whom we have oppressed heretofore, they being weak and we being strong, let us make some ample reparation to the Indian tribes who under our fell influence have been wasting from us and have had all opportunities to rise in the scale of civilization cut off.

I might allude to other instances in our history where we have stolidly and steadily refused to pay the money which we as honestly owed as if it had been determined by the judgment of a court. I could give instances of moneys advanced for the United States raising both legal and equitable considerations which Congress studiously has refused either to recognize or to pay. I will not take up the time of the Senate by referring to these matters, but I do say that this amount of $1,400,000 which the Senator who reports the bill is now willing shall all go to Japan would lessen materially the burdens of the people. I think it is well for us to consider that we are trustees for the people and should look to their direct benefit. Before we are generous and lavish to others we should be just to our own people. We should remember that the tax-collector visits every door; that not an article goes upon our table or upon our backs or those of our families but is taxed; that a great national debt and an expensive Government compel these things; that in our appropriation bills we cut down discretionary items to the lowest point. Still the burden is very heavy upon the people and must continue to be until our debt is paid off. Yet we can coolly take a million and a half of money in gold out of the Treasury of the United States upon some fantastic idea that one nation which we select, having dealt with a rough hand toward many, is entitled to receive from us this amount because we were robbers and thieves. That is the theory of the bill, and I say it is unjust to our own people to take means which should relieve them of taxation and send it elsewhere unless we are prepared to confess our sins from the start, unless we are prepared now to make a clean breast, unless we are ready to say mea culpa; we have been robbers heretofore but we intend now, in view of a judgment which is likely to overtake us if we persist in our sins, to confess them and make reparation to Mexico, to the Indians, and to all those to whom we owe just and honest debts which for these years we have refused to pay.

I really hope that I shall have an opportunity to vote for an amendment cutting down this bill. If not, the last resource which is left to me and others who think with me is to vote against the bill entirely. My impression is that with a full vote of the Senate the bill could not pass. Upon the proposition to strike out the first section the other day, there was only a majority of four against it, and Senators have had time to think of it since, and have had time to remember that the people are burdened and that they have a right to require that we shall be just to them and lift their burdens before we are lavish with their money in sending it abroad.

Mr. MORTON. Mr. President, it seems to me that the proposition embraced in this bill is an extremely plain one, and is not to be answered by saying that we have done wrong to others in other directions and do not propose to redress those wrongs. The simple fact is that we have taken from Japan a large sum of money for which we have given no consideration, for which we have suffered no loss, for which we have endured no wrong. We have gotten over a million dollars for nothing, absolutely for nothing. It is simply money taken by the strong hand, in which there is neither justice, equity, nor reason; and now we are asked to pay it back to a nation that is trying to become civilized and to take her place in the family of nations—a nation full of friendship, that desires to cultivate amicable and commercial relations with us. I believe upon every principle of natural justice we ought to refund this money, first deducting expenses that we have incurred or those debts which we ought to pay to our officers and sailors.

Mr. SARGENT. If we got it for nothing, we should pay it all back.

Mr. MORTON. When the damages which have been sustained by our commerce have been repaired and made whole, if we have suffered nothing and all our sailors who have incurred damages and have rendered services are paid for them fully, what right have we to retain a single dollar beyond that? What argument is it to say that we have robbed the Indians? What argument is it to say that we have robbed Mexico? What argument is it to say that we have plundered anybody else? Is one wrong to justify another wrong? Japan was in the hands of three or four nations. She simply paid what they demanded, and we came in and divided the plunder; and we have taken, as has been said before, perhaps over $1,200,000 for nothing over and above all these expenses. As a Christian nation, as a civilized nation, can we afford to do it? It is a wrong that will rest in the minds of the Japanese and will rankle through all time, while if we come forward and restore it, it will give to us a claim upon the friendship of Japan that nothing else will give. As long as we keep this money, the people of Japan will never cease to forget that we have robbed her, absolutely robbed her, by the strong hand, of over $1,200,000.

Mr. WITHERS. Mr. President, I would not have detained the Senate by any remarks upon the bill before us, but would have contented myself with quietly voting against it, had it not been for the allegations which have been made and repeated in this body that we have no right to this money, that it is unclean, that we have ruthlessly robbed the people of Japan of it by reason of our superior strength, and that our claim to it is founded in neither justice, nor reason, nor equity. I do not desire without a word of explanation to occupy the position here of voting for a bill which can be properly susceptible of such severe strictures.

In the first place, have the people of Japan ever presented themselves here and made such allegations as to the action of the American Government in connection with this matter? Have they ever asked us to restore this money? Have they ever presented any claims to us to show that this money is theirs beyond a fair equivalent for the damage which we have suffered at their hands? Have they ever exhibited in any manner, shape, or form, through the recognized action of their officials, any consciousness of the fact that they have any claim upon our Government for the rendition of this money?

Mr. INGALLS. They have a minister resident here.

Mr. WITHERS. They have a minister resident here; they are represented in our diplomatic circle; and yet we hear of no movement from Japan, either through the minister resident here or from our accredited agents abroad, asking that this money should be returned.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. If my friend will permit me, I think he has fallen into an error in intimating that we criticise this Government. I do not understand that the United States ever made any demand that Japan should pay us $785,000 in gold. I have examined the diplomatic correspondence pretty carefully and I have never discovered any such demand. As I understand the history of the affair, it is this: When England, France, and the Netherlands determined to make this attack upon the batteries they applied to Mr. Pruyn, our minister, and told him that it was very desirable to have the moral support of the United States in that attack. I remember the language: that while the governments understood the relations of this country the people did not. Therefore he hired the Takiang, put the crew of the Jamestown into it and joined in that expedition, and then joined with those powers in this treaty.

The statement made by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN] was entirely correct, however, that after the treaty was made, inasmuch as Congress did not remit the third payment, the Secretary of State, as he was bound, made demand of Japan that the payment be made through our minister there, Mr. Bingham. He delayed for some time making the demand for the third payment; but, as Congress took no action, he did, as instructed by the Secretary of State, make the demand. Therefore my friend from Virginia is wrong in saying that while this is unclean money, as I believe, it is dishonest money for us to hold. I do not charge the Government of the United States with anything, because this was a matter which occurred entirely without their direction. Our minister made this treaty and sent it to us, and Congress has been delayed in its action. Six committees have reported that we ought not to have received these other payments; but, because of the delay, the executive department has gone on and collected it. Now the thing for us to do is to pay it back.

Mr. WITHERS. I have listened with a great deal of patience to the explanation of the distinguished Senator from New Jersey.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I am much obliged to my friend for yielding to me.

Mr. WITHERS. But it entirely fails to satisfy me that the report of the committee and the arguments which have been used to support this measure are not a direct attack upon the Government and upon its action in this matter. I hold that the Government of the United States is fully responsible for the retention of this indemnity, not only by the fact which has been quoted, and which the Senator from New Jersey very speedily saw would substantiate the allegation that they had demanded in explicit terms the payment of the third portion of the indemnity fund, but at the time this indemnity was fixed and agreed upon we had a diplomatic representative in Japan. He himself acted conjointly with the commissioners of other powers. This sum was agreed upon. The proportion allotted to the United States was agreed upon. The report of this agreement was made to the Department of State, and the Secretary of State, Mr. Seward, and the Senate of the United States, by accepting the result of that apportionment, made themselves responsible to all intents and purposes, as far as any government could make itself responsible, for the action of its accredited agents abroad.

I take issue with the distinguished Senator from New Jersey. I repeat my allegation that if the Empire of Japan had presented themselves here and claimed that this money had been improperly paid, if they believed that the damages in which they were mulcted were excessive, if they asked us to return this money because we had exacted from them far more than the amount of damage we sustained would justify, this plea would come before us with additional force. But how stand the facts in the case? The Empire of Japan is not represented on this floor at all. It does not come before us in the bill asking the return of this indemnity, but the whole thing has been concocted in a different quarter. There are certain persons who are presumed to be interested in certain educational enterprises which have been inaugurated in Japan. They come before us with their minds filled with holy horror at the outrage and wrong which have been perpetrated upon the Empire of Japan. They ask us to return this money in order that they themselves may be the beneficiaries.

I deny, in the second place, that this amount which we have received was defined to be merely indemnity for losses actually sustained. The able and exhaustive statement of the distinguished Senator from Vermont, [Mr. EDMUNDS,] when this question was up for consideration before, established in my mind conclusively the fact that the Tycoon of Japan had prevaricated, in numerous instances avoiding the responsibility for the outrages which had been practiced by the daimio in that strait with the almost unpronounceable name. When this daimio was finally conquered and brought to terms, he presented the original papers showing that the rulers of Japan, as he asserted himself, had given him orders to fire upon vessels passing through those straits. The money was given not merely for remuneration for losses sustained by our vessels of war and for expense to which the Government was subjected in putting down this resistance to commercial treaties, but there is such a thing as punitive damages, exemplary damages. It was as a punitive measure, not merely remunerative, that this sum was fixed upon. It was designed as a punishment to the Empire of Japan for a violation of her treaty obligations, and it was made exemplary, as I understand it, for that very purpose.

The allegation that this amount was extorted by the hand of violence, and that the people of Japan were ruthlessly robbed by the gentleman who fixed this sum as a consideration to which we can equitably lay claim, I think is hardly justifiable from the facts. For a violation of her treaty stipulations, for attempting to fire upon the vessels of other nations passing through this strait, through one of her high officials, she was held to be responsible not merely for the actual damage sustained by this firing, not merely for the actual expenses incurred in fitting out a military expedition to punish and suppress this outrage, but she was punished in order that it might afford a warning to all other nations that these treaty stipulations cannot be violated with impunity and that such acts or violations would not be countenanced by the United States.

Mr. THURMAN. If my friend will allow me an interruption for one moment, I think if he will look into the reports upon this bill—I do not at this moment remember which one it is—he will find this state of facts: that the amount of indemnity demanded of Japan was suggested by the French minister, the object being, if possible, to get Japan to make a treaty which would open certain other ports to the Christian powers; and this sum of indemnity was purposely put much beyond what was necessary to indemnify all concerned in the hope that rather than pay so large a sum Japan would open her ports. I think it is stated in the correspondence with the Japanese government that the object was not money which we wanted but free trade with that country. If I am mistaken about that, I would thank some Senator to correct me.

Mr. MORTON. It was given as indemnity for losses.

Mr. THURMAN. But the sum was suggested, I think, with a view to the opening of certain ports.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. It is expressed in the treaty itself that the indemnity is to be remitted on their opening certain ports.

Mr. THURMAN. I know that was the idea.

Mr. WITHERS. It makes very little difference in my mind as to what was the particular motive which influenced those powers to fix upon the sum of $3,000,000, which I read was the amount of indemnity fixed by them. I care not what was the motive which influenced them, whether it was indemnity for actual losses sustained, whether it was a punitive measure to pay for an insult offered to our flag and the flags of other nations, or whether it was designed to secure the opening of other ports in Japan for foreign trade. Suffice it for me that the official representatives of the United States abroad sanctioned the amount which had thus been fixed upon; that through every official mode of recognition possible under such circumstances the Government did indorse the action of our minister and of the Secretary of State in the premises.

I fully concur with what has been said by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN] and the Senator from California [Mr. SARGENT] upon the subject of this money being held as a special trust. The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. DAWES] advocated this idea, that this money was different from any other money; that it was reserved as a special trust fund; that it could never be regarded, therefore, as properly belonging to the United States Government at all, but was reserved as a special fund subject to particular regulations, and could not be expended as money which was regularly in the Treasury. That may be all true; but I concur with the sentiments of the distinguished chairman of the Finance Committee in saying that this ought not to be the case.

Mr. SHERMAN. If my friend will allow me at this point I should like to read the law. As a matter of course, having been suddenly called upon, I could not turn to the statute at once.

Mr. WITHERS. I would be very glad to have my views and the Senator's strengthened by a citation of the authority.

Mr. SHERMAN. There is no doubt at all that the attempted use of this money in the nature of a fund has created all this difficulty. I call the attention of the Senator from New Jersey to the law of the United States, grouped in the Revised Statutes. He will see that the law is stronger even than I stated it. Section 3617, on page 717, provides that—

> The gross amount of all moneys received, from whatever source, for the use of the United States, except as otherwise provided in the next section, shall be paid by the officer or agent receiving the same into the Treasury, at as early a day as practicable, without any abatement or deduction on account of salary, fees, costs, charges, expenses, or claim of any description whatever. But nothing herein shall affect any provision relating to the revenues of the Post-Office Department.

That is the law of August 6, 1846. The next section excepts all proceeds of sales of old material, condemned stores, supplies, &c., which are set aside as a special fund for a special purpose, and then provides that—

> Every officer or agent who neglects or refuses to comply with the provisions of section 3617—

The one I have already read—> shall be subject to be removed from office, and to forfeit to the United States any share or part of the moneys withheld to which he might otherwise be entitled.

Then there is still another statute stronger yet. I will read the law of 1857, section 3621:

> Every person who shall have moneys of the United States in his hands or possession shall pay the same to the Treasurer, an assistant treasurer, or some public depositary of the United States, and take his receipt for the same, in duplicate, and forward one of them forthwith to the Secretary of the Treasury.

This applies to all officers and to all money. Then there is still another section, primitive in its character. Section 3639 provides that—

> The Treasurer of the United States, all assistant treasurers, and those performing the duties of assistant treasurer, all collectors of the customs, all surveyors of the customs, acting also as collectors, all receivers of public moneys at the several land offices, all postmasters, and all public officers of whatsoever character are required to keep safely, without loaning, using, depositing in bank, or exchanging for other funds than as specially allowed by law, all the public money collected by them, or otherwise at any time placed in their possession and custody, till the same is ordered, by the proper Department or officer of the Government, to be transferred or paid out; and, when such orders for transfer or payment are received, faithfully and promptly to make the same as directed, and to do and perform all other duties as fiscal agents of the Government which may be imposed by any law or by any regulation of the Treasury Department made in conformity to law.

That is the law of 1820. It is plainly manifest that money received under a treaty is money of the United States and ought to have been covered into the Treasury. In that case no interest could accrue upon it, and therefore there is no pretense or ground for the claim of interest, because, if the law had been complied with, it would have been in the Treasury, subject to appropriations made by law.

Mr. WITHERS. Mr. President, after the quotation from the Revised Statutes to which we have just listened, I scarcely think that it will be possible to find a loop upon which to hang a doubt as to the duty of the officials of the United States with regard to the proper treatment of this money. There was no reason for reserving it as a sacred fund. It was an unclean one perhaps, but, for the life of me, I cannot see how this particular fund is more unclean than any other, except in the general term that it consists of "filthy lucre." It is clear, from the authorities which have been just read, that it was the duty of the officials of the Government to put this money into the Treasury of the United States where it would form a part of the common treasure of this Government. The reason why it was not thus treated, it seems from what I can gather from the debate, was that from some custom or regulation or ruling of the State Department dating back to some period in the remote past, "to which the memory of man runneth not to the contrary," they had been thus accustomed to treat such moneys. I do not think such precedents and such customs should be permitted to override the plain letter of the law. I believe the Secretary of State and all other Government officials should be required to conform to law in every particular.

We are told by the Senator from Indiana that this money has been extorted from the Japanese government, and it has been reiterated by nearly every speaker who has advocated the passage of the bill that therefore, because we have wrested it from them by the strong hand of violence, it ought to be returned. The distinguished Senator from Indiana very properly quoted the old adage that two wrongs never made a right; but he attempts to make this case an exception to the general rule which has prevailed in this country with regard to all similar difficulties. We must remember that when differences between nations are subject-matters of negotiation, we deal in honeyed phrases and ambiguous terms; but when these fail to bring the opposing nations to a proper sense of propriety and of right, the silver tongue of diplomacy is laid aside and the mailed hand of war intervenes. They know little of diplomacy then. What is violence? Military power is a tyrannical and an arbitrary power, and it is that power to which nations resort when all other expedients have failed in asserting their proper rights. It was this mailed hand of war that wrested from Mexico, California, New Mexico, and all those fertile and beautiful provinces of the West, which certainly are worth far more than any expense to which this nation was subjected in carrying on that war, or any loss or damage to particular citizens, from which it directly resulted. By parity of reasoning we ought now to have an accurate computation made of the value to this country of the mines of California and Nevada, or gravely propose to return these beautiful and wealthy provinces to Mexico, because we wrung them from her by the strong hand of power when we had her down and our foot upon her neck. The argument is just as potent and valid in the one case as in the other, and if carried out to its legitimate conclusion we should lose that fairest jewel in the diadem of the sisterhood of States by reason of wrong and violence perpetrated when it was wrested from Mexico and incorporated as a component part of this Government.

For these reasons, very briefly given, I shall oppose the passage of this bill. I shall vote against it, seeing that we have done nothing in this case but what has been done time and again by this and every other nation, in exacting indemnity for loss and subjecting other countries to penal process for the wrongs which they have done us and the indignities which they have offered to our flag. I shall vote against the bill for the additional reason that the Empire of Japan has never asked for a return of this money, but other parties are moving in it in the plentitude of their benevolence. I think it is time enough to return the money to the Empire of Japan when that empire asks that it may be thus returned.

Mr. THURMAN. Will my friend allow me to call his attention to one point? He has stated the reasons why he would vote against the bill. I submit to him that the reasons which he has given do not touch the second section of the bill at all, but only relate to the first section, which proposes to return a certain sum of money to Japan. His reasons do not touch the question whether or no for their meritorious services our officers of the Navy ought to receive what the second section provides to give them in strict consonance with more than a dozen—I was going to say more than twenty—examples in the history of the United States.

Mr. WITHERS. It is true that the second section makes provision for the payment of prize-money under certain conditions; but it is so small a matter comparatively, taken in connection with the provisions of the first section, that it had really passed from my consideration at the time I was discussing the bill on its merits. While I will not say that I shall vote against the second section, I think that very strong reasons might be urged why we should not at present pay it, because prize-moneys are not usually paid from such sources.

Mr. MORTON. As I understand the logic of my friend from Virginia, it is that inasmuch as Japan has not asked directly to have this money refunded which we obtained from it for nothing, without consideration, and by the strong hand, therefore we are authorized to keep it.

Mr. WITHERS. The Senator does not state my position correctly. If he will pardon me for the interruption, he has erroneously stated it. In attempting to state my position he says that I oppose the bill because Japan has not asked the rendition of this money which we have wrested from her without consideration by the strong hand of power, without any justice or equity. That is not my position.

Mr. MORTON. I understood the Senator's reason was because Japan had not asked the return of this money.

Mr. WITHERS. Yes, so far the Senator states my position correctly.

Mr. MORTON. That is just the point I was going to meet, that Japan had not asked it, and therefore we ought not to return it. Japan paid what she was compelled to pay at the mouth of the cannon. She had no choice in the matter. She felt the injustice of paying a large sum for nothing, and the conscience of all mankind must recognize that; but Japan, weak as she is, has some little pride, and does not go on her knees to these strong nations, asking them to refund what she by treaty agreed to pay; and therefore, because she has not thus humiliated herself, we are justified in keeping this money of which we have plundered her! That is the force of my friend's argument. The strong man knocks the weak one down, takes his pocket-book, and when he is asked by somebody else to return it, he says, "I am authorized to keep this; the man whom I robbed has never asked me to return it to him; he has some pride or something in the way; he has never asked me to refund the plunder; therefore I am authorized to keep it." This is a stronger case than that. A weak nation has agreed to pay this extortion, and because she does not ask the strong nations to return it to her, they are justified in keeping it! I do not recognize that logic at all, Mr. President.

But I come now to the argument of my friend. He concedes that, so far as we are concerned, we have sustained no injury; no ship was fired into for this money on our part; we sustained no loss under heaven. The firing was on the ships of other nations, not ours. We joined in the bombardment; but we sustained no loss. No American ship was fired into. My friend says the payment was in the nature of punishment; I suppose something in the nature of impeachment!

Mr. DAWES. I should like to correct the statement if the Senator will permit me. We did not join in it; we only gave it our moral support.

Mr. MORTON. We did not even fire a gun.

Mr. DAWES. Sharing the plunder, however.

Mr. MORTON. That makes the case still stronger. We did not even spend any gunpowder. It was all grab, all plunder. If we had wasted a few shot and shell, there might have been a little better argument; but nothing of the sort occurred, according to my friend from Massachusetts. I am not so familiar with this transaction now as I once was.

This was punishment! If the Senator will look at the treaty, he will see it was not punishment at all. What were we to punish her for? Any wrong on us? Not at all. She had done nothing to us; we had no cause of punishment as a nation so far as we were concerned. The treaty says that if she will open her ports the money shall be remitted. It was to compel her to open her ports. Japan had her own policy, a policy of hundreds of years' standing, a policy of exclusion. We thought it was against our interest as a commercial nation; but she had a right to her policy; she was not bound to trade with anybody unless she wanted to do so. But we wanted her to open her ports and let us trade. We said to her: "You cannot have your own policy; you cannot pursue your own pleasure; we will compel you to pay this enormous sum; but if you will abandon your time-honored policy and throw open your ports and let us trade with you and extend to you our civilization and Christianity"—just as we did to the Indians—"we will remit the money." That is what the treaty says.

Mr. WITHERS. Will the Senator read the treaty?

Mr. MORTON. There were no past offenses as far as we were concerned.

Mr. WITHERS. They fired on a vessel of ours.

Mr. MORTON. They fired on a vessel, but that firing was a year before, and was paid for and the whole thing settled. But afterward she fired on the ships of other nations.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. In 1863 the Pembroke, an American steamer, was fired into by the rebel batteries. Then the Wyoming made an attack upon the vessels of Japan in those waters, and, as the diplomatic correspondence shows, punished them by sending a ball through the boiler of one, which destroyed forty men, and by sinking the other, thereby doing a damage of $350,000, destroying that much of their property; and then Japan paid to a cent all that was demanded of her for that transaction, besides. A year afterward, without any American commerce that ever I have been informed of, or that the diplomatic correspondence shows, being fired into at all, Mr. Pruyn employed the Takiang to join with the English, French, and Netherlands' ships in their attack upon these batteries. The minister of England had expressed his opinion very decidedly that no such attack ought to be made; but the dispatch did not reach there until the allied powers had made the attack.

Mr. MORTON. There was a wrong done which was fully indemnified. Revenge was taken in the first place by the destruction of ships and men, and this wrong was paid for in money, and after that we suffered no wrong. We after that took this money for nothing. I think that proposition is not to be changed at all. The third section of the treaty provides:

Inasmuch as the receipt of money has never been the object of the said powers—

Why not? Because they had lost nothing. If damage had been done the receipt of money would be an object always to repair the damage—but the establishment of better relations with Japan, and the desire to place these on a more satisfactory and mutually advantageous footing is still the leading object in view, therefore, if His Majesty the Tycoon wishes to offer, in lieu of payment of the sum claimed, and as a material compensation for loss and injury sustained, the opening of Simonoseki, or some other eligible port in the inland sea——

Mr. WITHERS. As material compensation for losses sustained?

Mr. MORTON. Yes, sir; but not to us; we had not sustained any.

Mr. WITHERS. Is not that signed by all the commissioners, ours included?

Mr. MORTON. Certainly; but they say the receipt of money never was the object; it is "better relations." In other words, there is no damage to be repaired, and if there was damage it was not to us, or so far as we are concerned. Some French ship might have been fired into, but not ours. What right had we to mix ourselves in it and become a party to the quarrel? It was enough for us to do to take care of our own quarrels.

Therefore, if His Majesty the Tycoon wishes to offer, in lieu of payment of the sum claimed, and as a material compensation for loss and injury sustained, the opening of Simonoseki, or some other eligible port in the inland sea, it shall be at the option of the said foreign governments to accept the same, or insist on the payment of the indemnity in money, under the conditions above stipulated.

There is a construction of the whole purpose. This proceeding is very much like that of the English government about the admission of opium into China. The Chinese people were destroying themselves by the use of opium. The government issued a decree forbidding the importation of opium. It interfered with English trade. England battered down her forts and compelled her to admit English opium, by which she destroyed her people. If Japan says she does not want to trade with the world, she has a right to say so if she chooses; but we say to her, "We compel you to pay this money unless you open your ports"—a large sum for nothing. I repeat, therefore, my first remark to my friend from Virginia that this money is simply plunder, simply robbery by the strong hand.

Mr. WITHERS. I know very well that the distinguished Senator from Indiana would abide by his first declaration. I never supposed he would recede from it an inch, knowing his tenacity of purpose so well as I do; but I am a little obstinate myself, and would merely re-assert my position. But that is not the way to meet the question. I propose to call the attention of the distinguished Senator to one or two inconsistencies, if he will pardon me for thus characterizing them, in his argument. In the first place, he asserts that the amount which we received far exceeded any damage that we sustained; and that if any party sustained damage it was not we; and he goes on then to read from the treaty itself, which has attached to it the sign-manual of our diplomatic agent in Japan, and in which it is asserted that this is a consideration for losses sustained. That we had not sustained any loss in this last and final attack may be true; but it does not at all involve the position I took originally, that this was a punitive measure designed to bring the government of Japan to a proper consideration of the rights of the United States and other foreign nations into which she had entered into treaty relations. In 1863 an American merchant-ship was fired into. For this the Senator says that ample reparation was made by the bombardment and blowing up of several steam-vessels. That may be true; we may have received remuneration for the amount of damage actually sustained at that time; but how were the facts? These representatives of the great powers had, each of them or one or more of them, some of their vessels fired into, and, inasmuch as this was an alliance offensive and defensive of these parties against Japan, we were just as much bound under the law of nations to aid them in redressing this grievance as if the outrage had been on a vessel of our own Navy.

I here would suggest to the distinguished Senator that it is too late now to go back behind the award of that commission and attempt to show that the Government of the United States, as it is claimed here, acted as a ruthless robber in extorting this amount from this feeble nation, because the proper time to have made that issue was when our diplomatic agent reported the decision of this commission, and when it came up for consideration at our State Department, and when the report from the Secretary of State was sent to the Senate for confirmation and the Senate confirmed the treaty in every letter and portion of it. Then was the time to have made the issue that it was wrong to have extorted this money from this weak nation. Then it was that we ought to have been shown that we had made an unjust claim and that here was unclean money which would contaminate and defile every other dollar in the Treasury with which it was put. But after we have indorsed by our official action the conduct of our diplomatic representative, after the Secretary of State has given his sanction to this treaty, and after the Senate of the United States have in solemn session given their indorsement to the whole procedure, I submit that it is too late now to raise the question of the consideration which underlay the award made by the commissioners.

Mr. DAWES. It seems to me that it is late for us to raise the question. We are bound no doubt by the official action that the Senator from Virginia has brought to our notice; and cannot set up that we had been wronged or anything of that kind; but this bill does not go on that ground at all. It admits that the United States committed itself——

Mr. WITHERS. With the Senator's permission I will state that I did not allude to the bill itself as taking that ground. I was replying to the position of the Senator from Indiana.

Mr. DAWES. The whole proceeding goes on the ground that the United States, in all its departments and officers, committed itself to this thing, and now finds that it committed itself to a great wrong. The fact that our minister in Japan recommended this proceeding, that our Secretary of State indorsed it, that the Senate of the United States, following these indorsements, committed themselves in the form of a treaty, is not the question raised by this bill. If we had gone on step by step very many steps further, if there were any more steps to be taken, it would not alter the character of the first step. It is the character of the first step that is called in question, and that character is not changed at all by the fact that very many officials, following that first step, indorsed it. Is there such a thing as undoing what we have done? The Senator from Virginia I know does not mean to say that, because we have done a thing, therefore we will not ever look at the character of an act we have done to see whether that is a proper act. I know the Senator does not mean that; but somehow it seems to me the Senator conveys the idea that because we have multiplied approvals of this act we have thereby changed the character of the act itself.

I have been utterly amazed that anybody should set up that by the law of nations these nations had a right to complain of Japan because she closed those straits of which we have heard so often. As I look at the map, there would have been just as much propriety in Japan insisting that she had a right to command Hampton Roads, or Lake Champlain, or Lake Michigan. As it looks to me on the map, here was an inland water within the government of Japan, as much as those bodies of water to which I allude are inland waters of the United States; and I am amazed when I look at it that the Government of the United States could join with those other governments in forcing at the cannon's mouth admission into those waters. I know that it contributed to their commerce. Would it not contribute to the commerce of the other nations of the world if they could plow our waters?

Mr. WITHERS. Will the Senator permit me a moment? I ask him to address his remarks to this point: The analogy does not hold where by treaty they had agreed to open the navigation of this strait.

Mr. DAWES. By treaty! They had just such a treaty as this, just such a sort of procedure as Tom Corwin, if I may be allowed to use the term, used to describe so graphically the Mexican war; it was Christianizing the Mexicans, with the Bible in one hand and the revolver in the other!

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I think the Senator from Virginia is in error. They had by treaty agreed to open certain ports, but those ports were not reached through these straits and there was no treaty to open these straits.

Mr. DAWES. It was a short way around; a short way of reaching the ports.

Mr. WITHERS. I have not the treaty before me, but it has been repeatedly stated in the debate that the free navigation of the strait was agreed upon in the treaty with Japan.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Not a treaty before this, I think.

Mr. BOGY. I will state to the Senator from Massachusetts, if he will pardon me, that no treaty had been made opening the strait he is now speaking of; but it is claimed that by the law of nations well known it was a sea open to the trade and commerce of the world, not by treaty, but by the law of nations; not like Lake Michigan and Lake Champlain, but an open sea.

Mr. DAWES. That was the claim unquestionably.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. That is a fact subject of discussion.

Mr. DAWES. But put it on the map by the side of Lake Michigan, or Hampton Roads, or Lake Champlain, and it dwindles by the side of them.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Except that it is connected with two oceans.

Mr. DAWES. How connected with two oceans? Not in any such sense as makes it a highway of nations. It was a very convenient roadstead, it was a very convenient course to take, safer than it was to go around, as if there were a ship-canal across Cape Cod, and because it was inconvenient to go around into Buzzard's Bay, around the cape there, the nations of the earth could come straight across! That is the way it strikes me, and I say it amazes me to think that we should with ships of war, seventeen ships of war of different nations going out on this void of civilization, as Mr. Corwin said, at the cannon's mouth, claim the right to go through, out of which grew this demand that the nations made upon Japan and upon China that they should cease the exclusive right that they asserted over their own waters and over their own ports. The time came when they were obliged to yield to this demand, and having yielded to it in part the nations became more aggressive in these demands, and here were three nations undertaking this work, and not quite satisfied with the character of the work they wanted, in their own language, (I use their own language,) "the moral support of the United States," and the United States chartered a merchant-vessel and put their flag on that merchant-vessel, and sent it up there to overlook this Christianizing and civilizing mission of those three nations. They got together when they had the Japanese nation at their feet to see what amount they should make it pay for being Christianized and civilized in this summary manner. Then our minister and the British minister, I think, or he and the minister of one of the powers, got together and thought the sum ought to be $2,000,000; that two millions would be about sufficient; but when they came to confer again they said, in substance, and what will go down into history as the true interpretation of it, that they could just as well get three millions as two, and it would divide easier. That is what goes into history as being the proper interpretation of it, and that is why the Secretary of State, in the years past, when it came into his hands, instead of paying it into the Treasury of the United States, where it would disappear with the other receipts of the Government, addressed a letter to Congress, pointing out the impropriety of our retaining this money, and year after year it came from the official representing this nation that this fund which has so been kept was not proper money to go into the Treasury; it was in too much of a sense blood-money.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. My friend said he could not give the exact language when they changed the two millions to three millions. I will give it. Mr. Pruyn, in his letter to Mr. Stewart, in 1864, said:

I assented the more readily to the proposition of the envoy of His Imperial Majesty the Emperor of France to fix the amount at $3,000,000, because I thought it more likely to lead to the substitution of a port as a material compensation for the expenses of the expedition.

Mr. DAWES. Yes, "we will put an exorbitant sum in our demand, and perhaps they will buy their peace rather than pay it;" and thus see how we proposed to them the opportunity to buy that peace; see the language to which our minister put his sign-manual and the ministers of the other governments put theirs. I ask the Senator from Virginia to listen to this language:

Inasmuch as the receipt of money has never been the object of the said powers—

O, no—

but the establisment of better relations with Japan—

That is the sublime mission of these governments.

Mr. WITHERS. Go on; "and"—

and the desire to place these—

That is these relations—

on a more satisfactory and mutually advantageous footing is still the leading object in view, therefore, if His Majesty the Tycoon wishes to offer, in lieu of payment of the sum claimed, and as a material compensation for loss and injury sustained—

If he wishes to offer instead of the $3,000,000—

the opening of Simonoseki, or some other eligible port in the inland sea—

If he wishes to offer it—

it shall be at the option of the said foreign governments to accept the same, or insist on the payment of the indemnity in money, under the conditions above stipulated.

That is to say, we will put $3,000,000 on them and then we will make them believe that they can avoid its payment by opening the port; and we put it into the treaty that if they offer the port, after all it shall be at our option whether we will take it or not! As the poor Indian said "that is not saying turkey a single once" to Japan. Now suppose she had offered the port; they had got the three million in their grasp, and they say, "O, well, if you do not want to pay three million then open this port;" and when she offers to open the port, they say, "Well, we guess on the whole we will not take the opening of the port."

Mr. WITHERS. Suppose they had accepted and agreed to open this port?

Mr. DAWES. Suppose who had?

Mr. WITHERS. Suppose the Tycoon of Japan had accepted the alternative therein offered, and opened the port, and the representatives of the powers had agreed to accept that as ample restitution for all the wrongs done and injuries sustained, would the Senator now be found advocating the closure of that port?

Mr. DAWES. They did not agree to it.

Mr. WITHERS. Suppose they had done so; they had the option.

Mr. DAWES. What I say is that they pretended to agree, when they did not.

Mr. WITHERS. But if they had agreed, would the Senator now advocate the closing of the port? because ethically the same argument would apply.

Mr. DAWES. I have as much trouble to-day as I can attend to in dealing with the case before us.

Mr. WITHERS. I agree with you.

Mr. DAWES. I rose simply to call the attention of the Senator from Virginia to what seemed to me to be the conclusion that would be naturally drawn from his remarks, so wide from what I knew he intended; for I knew that he intended to be entirely just. I do not see how it made this proceeding just at all or changed its character in the least because through successive steps it had received the sanction of our Government. Go back to the origin of it, straighten it, and make it plain English, and spread it out on the map beside these inland waters of Japan, and history will record in the margin of this record that this was another of the many instances where the weak have been compelled to yield to the strong and where principles have gone into the laws of nations, the origin of which has been that might makes right. If this money had gone into the Treasury straightway from the hands of our minister as we received it from Japan, I should have despaired of ever justice being done to Japan in this matter. But the conscience of the nation has kept it from going there. It seems so much like "the thirty pieces of silver," that there has been no time since it came into our hands when it could be got into the Treasury by any process. I once engaged myself in the advocacy of a resolution to cover it into the Treasury of the United States, because at that time I saw that it was to be plundered by those who were trumping up claims against Japan and because I did not then quite understand as I do now the real merit of this case; but from the hour I did understand it I have endeavored to keep it; and since those who were out with those claims have left it for a period, I have been strengthened every hour in the belief that it would do good to our name and our credit among the nations whose commerce with us and whose trade with us and whose relations with us in every respect are growing more and more important every day, if we should feel that it was incumbent upon us to do absolute justice. That is why I felt so this morning at the idea that it was to be divided. I would rather see the bill defeated than to see anything short of full and ample justice done in this case; and unless we can do that, we had better do nothing. I do not fear as long as the fund is in the custody of the Secretary of State but that sooner or later it will go where the dictates of justice require that it should go. The only haste I have in this matter is the fear that some such claim as that contained in the second section of this bill will succeed and that other claims, encouraged by the success that may await it, would, if that section should be attached to this bill and become a law, spring up thick enough and fast enough until the whole fund itself would be diminished below even the original principal, so that we should have no trouble about the accumulations of interest or accretions to the general fund.

Let us decide whether this is our money in the forum of fair and honest dealing. If it is, as the Senator from Vermont believes, let us say no more about it and put it into the Treasury. If it does not belong to us in that forum, then the sooner we put it where it does belong the better for our interests, the better for our material interests, and the better for our future relations with that nation.

Mr. HAMILTON. Mr. President, I renew my motion to strike out the second section of the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. INGALLS in the chair.) The pending question is on agreeing to the amendments made as in Committee of the Whole. When these are acted upon, the motion of the Senator from Texas will be in order.

Mr. KELLY. Is it in order now to offer an amendment to the second section?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair would state to the Senator from Oregon that the pending question is on concurring in the amendments made as in Committee of the Whole. After that question is disposed of the bill will be open to amendment.

Mr. KELLY. Very good. I shall offer an amendment after that.

Mr. BOGY. I merely wish to say a few words in relation to this treaty. The Senator from Massachusetts and also the Senator from Indiana have read only a portion of the treaty. If there be anything at all in a treaty, this money was not obtained from Japan as a means to compel that country to open one or more ports for the purpose of carrying on our trade, but was an amount fixed as a just indemnity for past wrongs. If the treaty be not founded in what really these commissioners believed to be true, that is the end of the whole thing; but presuming that the commissioners, not only the minister who represented this country but the ministers who represented the other three powers, were men of honor, the treaty means very different from what has been stated both by the Senator from Indiana and the Senator from Massachusetts.

The Senator from Indiana read one or two lines of a section without reading what preceded, and so did the Senator from Massachusetts. Now I will read a little further on, and it will be very plain that the amount here, let it be large or small, too large or not large enough, was intended as a reasonable compensation by way of indemnity for wrongs perpetrated by the government of Japan upon American commerce for an unlimited number of years before. It is true that a year or two prior to that time a specific wrong had been perpetrated by the government of Japan, as mentioned and related by the Senator from New Jersey, and for that a settlement had been effected and was complete in every respect; but that was a specific arrangement for a specific purpose, for a wrong perpetrated at a particular time. But the amount of money obtained by the four powers under this treaty was obtained by way of just indemnity for wrongs committed by Japan perhaps for more than forty or fifty years on the commerce of these different powers. I will read:

The undersigned, representatives of the treaty powers—

Leaving out several unnecessary lines—

animated with the desire to put an end to all reclamations concerning the acts of aggression and hostility committed by the said Mori Daizen—

Who was the prince of that province where the main acts were perpetrated—

since the first of these acts, in June, 1863, against the flags of divers treaty powers—

Wrongs committed against the flags of nations with whom Japan had made treaties—and at the same time to regulate definitively the question of indemnities of war, of whatever kind, in respect to the allied expedition to Simonoseki, have agreed and determined upon the four articles following.

It was by the way of indemnity for wrongs perpetrated by the government of Japan against the flags of the powers having existing treaties at that time with Japan. If I am wrong in this, the treaty is false, because I take it from the treaty. If this be not true history, the treaty is a false one. If the treaty is true, the history is correct. This amount of money was agreed to be paid as indemnity for wrongs committed by the government of Japan against nations having existing treaties with Japan.

Mr. THURMAN. Will the Senator allow me to ask him can it be possible that the indemnities could have been for anything that preceded the treaty we had made with Japan? How could we claim indemnities for any acts done prior to the treaty of peace and amity which we had made with Japan? Are not then the wrongs that are spoken of wrongs that occurred after the making of that treaty, and not wrongs that went back forty years?

Mr. BOGY. That question cannot be answered without having before us the treaties previously made, one or more, and the correspondence connected with those treaties. I take the comprehensive language of this treaty itself, which says that it is for indemnity for wrongs committed against the flags of divers treaty powers. It cannot be possible that Japan was and is to-day so utterly incapable not only of helping itself but so utterly incapable of using proper language in that treaty. It cannot be true that its ministers had so far left all sense of honor and propriety as to have put a thing of this kind in a treaty when it was utterly false. It is impossible. These persons at that day had all the facts before them better than we have now. They say that this sum of money, $3,000,000, was obtained for these things. Whether the previous treaties had included indemnities, I am unable to say; but I will read to my friend from Ohio again:

Animated with the desire to put an end to all reclamations concerning the acts of aggression and hostility committed by the said Mori Daizen, since the first of these acts, in June, 1863—

No doubt this referred to acts committed after June, 1863—

against the flags of divers treaty powers, and at the same time to regulate definitely the question of indemnities—

Then they go on to stipulate—the amount payable to the four powers is fixed at $3,000,000, this sum to include all claims—

Admitting that claims existed, I cannot go outside of a public treaty. Mr. Pruyn was a gentleman of honor; the other ministers who were there representing the governments of England, France, and the Netherlands, we must presume were men of honor; and according to this treaty claims did exist—

this sum to include all claims, of whatever nature, for past aggressions on the part of Nagoto, whether indemnities, ransom for Simonoseki, or expenses entailed by the operations of the allied squadrons.

If you analyze the arguments of Senators who have spoken, they wish us to confine the question of the amount of money we were entitled to merely to the expenses entailed by the operations of the squadron, for the expenses, no doubt, under the circumstances must have been small, because it was a chartered vessel on which the flag of the United States was raised. It was not even an expensive ship of war, but a mere merchant-vessel. Doubtless the expense was small. But that is only one of the enumerated items. The sum is to include indemnities, and "all claims, of whatever nature, for past aggressions" on the part of this prince. He might have been, and no doubt was, but a subordinate of the Japan Empire. My friend from New Jersey shakes his head. I should like to be corrected.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I would only correct my friend in this: He was in no manner representing the Japan Empire, either as a subordinate or a co-ordinate. He was a rebel against the Japan government. That is why I shook my head.

Mr. BOGY. It may be that he was in that sense at that time and had acted even against the specific and positive orders of his superior officer, the Emperor of Japan—call him Tycoon, or Mikado, or whatever name you give the man in whom is vested the sovereign and supreme power. But it was stated here that he had fired upon the American vessel by positive orders of the Tycoon. Whether that be so or not is of no consequence. The superior power vested in the Tycoon is responsible to all outside nations for anything which may have been done by any of his princes within his dominions, whether they were at the time being rebels or not. You cannot make war against one of them; you cannot hold him responsible; you cannot make a treaty with him by which the indemnity shall be paid; you are compelled, ex necessitate, to look to the head of the nation, and that is the Tycoon. Whether this prince be a rebel or not does not change the law in that respect. As a matter of necessity, you look to the head of the Japanese government, although it was stated by some Senator who is more familiar with this subject than I pretend to be that he had done this act of aggression by the orders of the Emperor of Japan; but whether he had or not I say does not change the question. The sum is to include "all claims." Again, the whole sum is to be paid in quarterly installments; and—

Inasmuch as the receipt of money—

Not the amount fixed upon; not the amount which they had agreed should be paid by way of indemnity for past aggressions, as well as for the expenses entailed by the operations of the allied squadron, but for all claims of past indemnities the amount had been fixed at $3,000,000; still—

Inasmuch as the receipt of money has never been the object of the said powers, but the establishment of better relations with Japan, and the desire to place these on a more satisfactory and mutually advantageous footing is still the leading object in view; therefore, if His Majesty the Tycoon wishes to offer, in lieu of payment of the sum claimed, and as a material compensation for loss and injury sustained, the opening of Simonoseki—

If he chooses to give a port, then the amount of money shall not be exacted; but the question of material compensation for loss and injury sustained is again reiterated in this third section of the treaty. Thus, there must be nothing at all in this treaty but falsehood, fraud, deceit, dishonesty, disgraceful not only to the American minister who made it, but equally disgraceful to the allied powers that were there represented, if what is stated here is true; and according to that the amount fixed was indemnity for the past.

My friend from Massachusetts speaks of this strait being somewhat like Lake Champlain or Lake Michigan or any of these inland seas. This is not so. It is a strait connecting two seas, over which the commerce of the world has an undoubted right to pass without being molested; and althongh both shores may belong to Japan, yet Japan has no right, according to the law of nations, to interfere with the trade in that strait or the passage of merchant-vessels through it; but she had done so.

Without detaining the Senate to argue this point, it does strike me that this thing has less foundation than any claim presented in the Senate since I have been a member, and which we are in the habit of rejecting every day. It is a sentiment which prompts it. It may be very commendable, and I am inclined to commend my friend from New Jersey. I think he is inclined to a little sentimentality at times; but I think he is only carrying out here rather a lofty sentiment. Nevertheless, it is nothing but a sentiment. To my friend from Massachusetts it is an enlightened policy that would impress all the minds of the oriental nations that we are extremely generous. I do not believe in the sentiment or in the wisdom of the policy. I take the treaty to be what it is, that the government of Japan had committed wrongs against the flag of the United States, and were liable therefor by the law of nations.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Permit me to put a question to my friend?

Mr. BOGY. With pleasure.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Admit that that was a public highway of the nations, my friend will not deny that Japan had the right to have batteries on each side of it the same as we have at the Narrows. That he will admit, of course?

Mr. BOGY. I admit that.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Japan did not put the batteries there, but a rebel put the batteries there whom she could not control. My friend will not deny that the Japanese government was not answerable to this or any other nation for the acts of rebels that she could not control, any more than we are answerable for the acts of those whom we could not control during our recent rebellion, and therefore I do not see the force of his argument. He makes it an indemnity. They were not bound to indemnify for the acts of rebels. They had a right to have the batteries there.

Mr. BOGY. I am astonished at my friend, who no doubt is a good lawyer, and I have no doubt he understands international law better than I profess to do. I do not profess to be a very great international lawyer, but I will tell my friend, as a matter of law, that he is entirely mistaken. Although it may be true that that prince at that moment was in a state of rebellion, all acts committed against the outside world by him involved his government in responsibility, and there is no escape from it. You cannot make comparison by the condition of the Southern States, because there an explanation could be given, but I put it down as a proposition of law, and I am perfectly satisfied my friend cannot find a single line written in any book of international law that will sustain his position to the contrary, that any person in an empire who is holding office involves his principal in acts of aggression against foreign nations.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I confess that I cannot agree with my friend. I do not understand that this nation or Japan would be answerable, even to its own citizens, for a rebellion which it could not control, and nobody ever has claimed that any nation would be. Nobody has ever claimed that this nation was answerable for the forts at Charleston which might do damage to neutral powers. There is no such principle.

Mr. BOGY. The explanation of course would be too late to show why we were not responsible when a state of open war existed between this Government and the Southern States, and they had been recognized as belligerents according to the law of nations. But if it were not so, then Japan or Mexico or any of those nations could commit any acts of aggression they might please, provided they were not done by the specific authority of the chief of the state, without being held responsible.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. That would be fraud.

Mr. BOGY. It matters not; the fact is so that you do hold a prince as but a link in a chain. We know enough of the government of Japan to know that the Tycoon and Mikado were the supreme authority, one representing the temporal and the other the spiritual power, and that a chain went from them down connecting all the princes of the empire with the government; and although it might be true that for the time being this prince was at war with his chief, yet the acts he committed against the outside world involved his chief in responsibility. There can be no doubt of it, and the heading of this very convention admits this fact, for the Tycoon assumed the responsibility of the acts of this subordinate.

Therefore it seems to me that this was a treaty by high functionaries representing four of the leading powers of the world with this empire of Japan, by which the empire of Japan stipulated to pay for wrongs done by it for years past a given sum of money; we have received our portion, which was less than $800,000; and now, twelve or ten years after, we are called upon to refund that money, not only the principal but we are called upon to refund the money with interest, and I think if the calculation is made it will be found to be compound interest. The amount is said now to be nearly $1,500,000, while we received $785,000; and you cannot at the rate of 5 per cent. interest make that sum double itself in ten or twelve years' time; therefore there is here compound interest. We are called upon to return the money with compound interest.

If the law had been obeyed, as stated by the Senator from Ohio, [Mr. SHERMAN,] and this money had at once been turned over into the Treasury, as it ought to have been, there would have been no discussion of this kind; but it has been held as a specific fund, as a trust fund, and it has been inviting this thing for years. I have heard such a discussion before; I heard of it in the Committee on Foreign Relations; but I have never heard a single good reason why this sum of money should be returned to Japan. It may be good policy in the estimation of certain Senators, but there is no good reason founded in that sense of justice which should govern the relations of one nation with another; but if we are to return the money we ought to return the whole of it, and not make any appropriation of a portion of it by way of prize-money to men who did nothing, who never fired a gun. The Senator from Indiana says these men never fired a gun, never expended a single grain of powder. He so stated here this morning that they did nothing, that they only gave their moral support. That was satisfactory. If that be true——

Mr. THURMAN. Why, Mr. President, my friend never was more mistaken in his life.

Mr. BOGY. The Senator from Indiana made that statement, not I.

Mr. THURMAN. You must have misunderstood the Senator from Indiana.

Mr. BOGY. I did not.

Mr. THURMAN. So far from their not firing a gun, I will say that eight of them lost their lives. They did not fire a gun! Let us see how that was. The first report on this subject was made in the House of Representatives on the 2d of February, 1870, more than six years ago. Mr. Archer, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, made the following report:

That in the month of July, 1863, the American steamer Pembroke was fired upon in the Straits of Simonoseki, in the Japan Sea, by two vessels of war, a brig of ten guns and a bark of eight guns, belonging to the Japanese prince of Nagato. Commander McDougal, then in command of the Wyoming, in the China and Japan Seas, being informed of the attack, ordered the vessel to sea and proceeded to the locality of the outrage. On the morning of the 16th of July, he approached the Straits of Simonoseki and upon entering the straits he discovered a steamer, bark, and brig of war, and as he approached them and passed between the brig and bark was fired upon by the vessels and six batteries on shore. Commander McDougal returned the fire at short range, and placing his vessel in proper position maintained the fight for about an hour. The boilers of the hostile steamer were exploded by the shell of the Wyoming, and the other vessels were believed to be badly disabled, and the brig to be sinking, and Commander McDougal reported that he had accomplished great destruction on shore. Having thus maintained the fight, Commander McDougal withdrew from the action, the fire being continued by the batteries as long as he was in range. The Wyoming lost four men—

I wish my friend would pay a little attention to this report—

The Wyoming lost four men killed and seven wounded, and received considerable damage in her smoke-stack, and the rigging aloft was hulled eleven times and sustained other injuries, as papers will show. The straits were three quarters of a mile wide, with a strong current, and the want of charts greatly increased the difficulties of the position in the presence of a much superior force.

And here I may mention that he fought that battle—I have the exact figures somewhere—with three hundred men and I believe a comparatively small number of guns against thirteen hundred and odd men and more than ten times the number of guns. I will go on with the report:

The action was maintained by Commander McDougal, his officers and men, with skill and bravery. In the Japan Commercial News of the 24th of July, 1863, it is thus described: "The captain, all his officers and crew, behaved with the utmost coolness and bravery. The Wyoming was run into the midst of the enemy's vessels, receiving and returning broadsides at pistol range, at the same time sustaining a hot and continuous fire from the shore batteries." The committee believe that Commander McDougal, his officers and men, punished the outrage committed upon an American vessel skillfully and gallantly, and that their conduct entitles them to the gratitude of their country.

That was the first report. Speaking, however, further upon that subject the committee say:

The firing into the Pembroke and the attack upon the Wyoming were piratical acts, and have been so treated both by the United States and Japan. Prize is allowed in piratical cases only when the craft is captured and condemned, in which case the proceeds of the capture are equally divided between the government and the captors.

If this large Japanese vessel, instead of having been blown up and sunk, had been captured and brought in and condemned in a prize court, as it would have been in that case, there would have been no necessity for this bill.

In this case there was no capture, although the benefits which accrued to our Government were infinitely greater than if an actual capture had been made, and it does not come within the letter of the law. Can the claim, then, rest upon the equity that the "officers and crew, constrained by a discreet and patriotic sense of duty," fought "three piratical or hostile Japanese vessels," and sunk and destroyed two, and that the United States subsequently justified their conduct, by concluding a convention with Japan, whereby she received a full indemnity? The conduct was gallant; it aided to suppress formidable hostilities to our commerce, and contributed to securing the convention of October, 1864—

That is the treaty in question—whereby an indemnity was received far beyond the injuries done to the Pembroke and Wyoming. The sum of $650,000 has been paid to our government by Japan as indemnity, and is now in registered bonds, subject to appropriation by Congress. The committee think it proper that prize-money be allowed out of the money received under the convention.

Mr. BOGY. What is the date of that report?

Mr. THURMAN. It is the first report, and was made February 2, 1870.

Mr. BOGY. And what is the amount named?

Mr. THURMAN. Six hundred and fifty thousand dollars.

Mr. BOGY. I think my friend from New Jersey stated it at $785,000.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. A portion alone at that time had been paid. The other installment raised it to $785,000.

Mr. THURMAN. A subsequent report was made by Senator Scott, of Pennsylvania, than whom a more careful man never was in this body, as I think all will agree who knew him. The bill then included the case of the Kearsarge. That was stricken out of the bill because there was no reason in the world why the officers and crew of the Kearsarge should be paid out of this Japanese indemnity fund. They were put upon a separate bill. That case is precisely analogous to this case. They did not capture the Alabama; they sunk her; just as McDougal blew up one of the Japanese vessels, their largest vessel, a vessel larger than the Wyoming too, and sunk another, and silenced their shore batteries. We paid the officers and crew of the Kearsarge, and upon the same principle we ought to make this allowance to the officers and crew of the Wyoming.

After giving the order of Mr. Pruyn, our minister, to Captain McDougal, Mr. Scott goes on to say—and it is the whole committee speaking, this report having been made from the Committee on Naval Affairs:

In obedience to the orders of the properly constituted authorities of the United States Government, the Wyoming weighed anchor at Kanagawa on the 13th of July, 1863, and set out on her voyage to the Strait of Simonoseki. She entered the Bay of Simonoseki on the morning of the 16th of July. When she approached the entrance of the bay the fort next to her fired a signal gun, which was answered by all the forts and by the ships in harbor. At this time the Wyoming had no flag up, but upon the signals being fired she hoisted her flag and proceeded into the bay, keeping as close as she could to the northern shore, contrary to the expectations of the Japanese. The first fort immediately opened a heavy fire upon her, and so did all the others, as she moved slowly on, shelling the forts with such an effect as to silence such of them as received her fire. The men in the forts which received shells from the Wyoming were observed to rush off and to jump from the heights in such a precipitate manner as to lead to the belief that the shells must have told with greater effect and done more damage than the Japanese anticipated.

The bark and the brig Lanrick—the two vessels which fired on the Pembroke—were still there, and another vessel also, the steamer Lancefield. Those vessels lay close under the town, the bark being inside, the Lanrick next to her, and the Lancefield outside, with steam up, and a great number of men on board, apparently making preparations to approach and board the Wyoming. Captain McDougal ordered the Wyoming to be taken between the Lancefield and the Lanrick, and prepared to give each of them a broadside in passing. The Lanrick fired first, but immediately after the Wyoming delivered her broadside on the two Japanese vessels and sent a ball through the stern of the Lanrick in such a way as to leave her apparently sinking. The Wyoming moved on slowly, firing into the forts of the town as she went, and making a curve to enable her to return fire on the ships again; but, as she was turning, the Lancefield moved on across the track of the Wyoming, further into the bay, to escape at the western outlet, but the Wyoming while curving brought her great pivot-gun to bear on the Lancefield in her new position, and sent a ball right through her boiler, causing her to blow up, and scattering destruction through every part of the vessel; steam, cinders, &c., were blown out in all directions, and such of the crew as were not immediately overwhelmed jumped overboard. The Wyoming returned under a slack fire from the forts, and having done all that she deemed necessary for that time, she returned to Kanagawa to report what had taken place. She arrived here about two a. m. on the 20th of July. The engagement lasted an hour and ten minutes. The Wyoming received eleven shots, and had four men killed in action and seven wounded, one of whom died on the passage back.

The committee say in respect to this fund:

It is also manifest that the officers and crew of the Wyoming did their duty gallantly, and that the fund now invested in bonds is really the product of their service. If it were proper to institute a comparison of deserts as to payment out of this fund, no other officers or men of the Navy can present stronger claims to it than those of the Wyoming.

I might read from three other reports, all to the same effect; one made by Mr. ANTHONY, from the Committee on Naval Affairs of the Senate, one by Mr. Myers, from the Committee on Naval Affairs of the House, and the report now before us made by the Senator from New Jersey, from the Committee on Foreign Relations. Here, then, are two reports in the House and three reports in the Senate, all to the same effect.

I said something about the number of men. McDougal had six guns and one hundred and sixty men. The piratical prince had thirty-four guns and about thirteen hundred men. As I said on a former occasion, this action of McDougal, at pistol-shot range, with one vessel unsupported by any other, has been called in my hearing by as gallant officers as are in the American Navy, "Dave McDougal running a muck." There is not in all the history of our Navy anything more gallant, anything that sheds greater luster upon the bravery, the skill, and the fortitude of our sailors and seamen than this action in the Strait of Simonoseki. There is no principle involved in this matter that has not been again and again affirmed. Again and again has our Government awarded prize-money where there was no legal right to it at all, but where the services were great, meritorious, and such as ought to be recognized by any government that wants to maintain its naval force, that wants to stimulate its army and its navy to great and heroic deeds and recommend their services to the country. This case falls within that category, and has been established by numerous precedents, some few of which I ask my friend to allow me to read, begging his pardon for occupying his time so much. Let us see some of them.

Congress voted to the officers and crew of the United States frigate Constitution for the destruction of the British frigate Guerriere $50,000, to be distributed as prize-money, when there was no law for that allowance.

Mr. CRAGIN. Allow me to say right there that in that engagement there were only seven men killed and seven men wounded on the Constitution, about the same number as on the Wyoming; and the Guerriere was destroyed.

Mr. THURMAN. Sunk.

Mr. CRAGIN. The same as these vessels in this case.

Mr. THURMAN. To Captain William Bainbridge, his officers and crew, for the destruction of the British frigate Java $50,000 was voted to be distributed as prize-money. That required a special act of Congress. There was no law under which they could get prize-money.

To the officers and crew of the sloop of war Wasp, for the capture of the British sloop of war Frolic, $25,000 was voted.

To Captain Oliver H. Perry and the officers and crew of his squadron, for the capture of British vessels on Lake Erie, September 10, 1813, $255,000 was voted; and to Captain Perry $5,000 in addition to his share of the aforesaid sum. Joint resolutions of Congress were passed expressing thanks to Captain Perry, his officers, and crew for the aforesaid service, and requesting the President to present suitable medals and a sword to each of the commissioned officers and giving to each petty officer, seaman, and marine three months' pay in addition to regular pay; and that in addition to the previous vote I have mentioned.

The next case is the grant to the officers and crew of the sloop of war Wasp, for the capture and destruction of the British vessels Reindeer and Avon. Congress had given them $25,000 for capturing the Frolic. This is for capturing the Reindeer and Avon, $50,000, and one year's pay in addition.

To Commodore Decatur, his officers and crew, for the capture of the Algerine vessels, which were afterward released and restored to the Dey of Algiers, $100,000 was voted.

To the officers and crew of the United States steamer Kearsarge for the destruction of the Alabama $190,000 was appropriated, the full estimated value of the Alabama; and here permit me to say that the sum which this second section proposes to give to the officers and crew of the Wyoming is less than they would have received had the vessels that they sunk been brought into a prize-court and condemned, for the testimony is conclusive that one alone was worth at least $300,000. The officers and crew would have been entitled to one-half if she had been captured and brought into a prize-court and condemned. Here we propose to give them only $125,000; but in the case of the Kearsarge we gave the value of the Alabama, $190,000.

These are some out of the numerous precedents that might be cited to show that it has been the rule and policy of this Government to recognize such deeds of gallantry and heroism as marked the conduct of McDougal and his seamen and sailors, and I hope never to see the day when this Government shall refuse to recognize such services. We have had a small Navy. This Government never had a large one; not even in the civil war did we have what could be called a large and effective Navy; but no government, not even Great Britain herself, ever had a navy that shed more luster upon the country than the Navy of the United States has shed upon ours, and I, for one, must say that, so long as I have a vote, conduct such as that which I have laid before you from these reports shall receive my recognition.

Mr. BOGY. I yielded to my friend to make an explanation, but he has made so good a speech that I will ask him to include that speech as part of my own. [Laughter.] That is the only indemnity he can give me for taking my time.

I will say no more on this subject; but call the attention of the Senate to the fact which I stated two or three times before, that this sum of money was not only to cover the expenses of the expedition of the joint powers, but as indemnity for wrongs committed by the empire of Japan not only upon the commerce of the United States, but for wrongs committed in the very act alluded to by my friend from Ohio. Some of our men lost their lives, a serious engagement took place, and for all these numerous acts of aggression the sum of $785,000 was allowed to us. This sum is insignificant, and I think so far from its having a good effect to pay the money back now, it will only be telling Japan, "We did hector over you and we did take advantage of your weakness; we were strong enough to do it; but we in a spirit of policy, because we want to trade and have commerce hereafter, will return you the money." It will be adding insult to injury. The treaty has been made, and I think the facts read here sustain the propriety of that treaty; and I am therefore opposed to paying back any portion of the money whatsoever to Japan.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on concurring in the amendments made as in Committee of the Whole.

The amendments were concurred in.

Mr. KELLY. I offer two amendments changing the phraseology of the second section of the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendments will be reported.

The CHIEF CLERK. In section 2, line 3, it is moved to strike out the words "bounty, ransom, or prize-money, on account of," and insert "gallant, meritorious, or specially valuable services in," so as to read, "claims of the officers and crew of the United States ship Wyoming for gallant, meritorious, or specially valuable services in the destruction of piratical vessels on the 16th of July, 1863, in the straits of Simonoseki."

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I see no objection to that.

Mr. CRAGIN. It seems to me there is objection to striking out the words "in the nature of prize;" this simply comes within that consideration.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. There are more extended words put in the place of them. The friends of that measure have prepared it, the Senator from Ohio and the Senator from Oregon. I have no objection.

Mr. CRAGIN. Very well.

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHIEF CLERK. The next amendment of the Senator from Oregon [Mr. KELLY] is to strike out of the same section, lines 11 and 12, the words "either in law or equity to be justly chargeable against this fund" and insert "to be worthy of special recognition," so as to read, "and if in his judgment they are found to be worthy of special recognition, then he is authorized and directed, in full satisfaction thereof, to cause the sum of $125,000, reserved from said indemnity fund, or such part thereof as in his judgment shall be just and equitable, to be distributed among said officers and crews."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HAMILTON. I move now to strike out the second section.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Texas moves to strike ont the second section of the bill.

Mr. HAMILTON. I beg to say a word. It seems to be conceded generally that the United States did not acquire this money from Japan properly. If that is so, the Government cannot keep any portion of the interest which has accrued on the fund; and still less, in my judgment, can the Government of the United States pay for meritorious services to any officers or seamen of this country out of a fund that does not belong to the Government of the United States, whether it is in the shape of bounty, prize-money, or a mere douceur. If the money belongs to Japan, it ought to go back to Japan, the whole of it, and all that has accumulated upon it. We ought to make a decent job of the thing and end it. I move therefore to strike out the entire section.

Mr. THURMAN. I have only one word to say in reply to that. Those who favor the first section of the bill, everybody admits that we were entitled to receive from Japan, not merely what would pay the actual injury to the Pembroke and the Wyoming, the two American vessels that were injured, but such sum as would fairly and properly reward our officers and sailors who were engaged in that undertaking—that is, a proper indemnity—and there is not a word in the second section of the bill that is inconsistent with the first section, not one word.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment moved by the Senator from Texas.

Mr. HAMILTON. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. BOGY. The second section is confined alone to the question of indemnity, is it not?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The section will be read, if the Senator desires it.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. It is confined entirely to indemnity in the nature of prize.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll on the amendment of Mr. HAMILTON.

Mr. PADDOCK, (when his name was called.) On this question I am paired with the Senator from Florida, [Mr. CONOVER.] If he were here, he would vote "nay," and I would vote "yea."

Mr. MAXEY. On this question I am paired with the Senator from New Jersey, [Mr. RANDOLPH.] If he were present, he would vote in the negative and I in the affirmative on this motion.

The roll-call having been concluded, the result was announced—yeas 15, nays 29; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Booth, Boutwell, Cockrell, Dawes, Hamilton, Harvey, Howe, Ingalls, Key, Logan, McCreery, McMillan, Mitchell, Wadleigh, and Wright—15.

NAYS—Messrs. Allison, Anthony, Bayard, Bogy, Bruce, Cameron of Pennsylvania, Cameron of Wisconsin, Caperton, Christiancy, Conkling, Cooper, Cragin, Eaton, Frelinghuysen, Hamlin, Johnston, Jones of Florida, Jones of Nevada, Kelly, Kernan, Morrill of Vermont, Patterson, Ransom, Sargent, Sherman, Spencer, Thurman, Windom, and Withers—29.

ABSENT—Messrs. Alcorn, Barnum, Burnside, Clayton, Conover, Davis, Dennis, Dorsey, Edmunds, Ferry, Goldthwaite, Gordon, Hitchcock, McDonald, Maxey, Merrimon, Morrill of Maine, Morton, Norwood, Oglesby, Paddock, Randolph, Robertson, Saulsbury, Sharon, Stevenson, Wallace, West, and Whyte—29.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I would move to amend the first section, in the sixth line after the word "authorize," by inserting "after deducting all payments properly chargeable to the said fund;" so as to read:

That the President be, and hereby is, authorized to reserve from the Japanese indemnity fund the sum of $125,000, to be used in the manner hereinafter provided, and is further authorized, after deducting all payments properly chargeable to the said fund, to pay over to the government of Japan the residue of said indemnity fund, &c.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SHERMAN. I now offer the amendment that I suggested a while ago, to insert in the eighth line after the word "Japan" "the principal sum received from the government of Japan," so as to confine the payment to the refunding of the principal sum, less the payments already made. The amendment of the Senator from New Jersey just made causes a repetition of the words "government of Japan," but the Clerk can alter that. My purpose is to confine the payment to the re-imbursement of the principal sum, less the payments already made and the sum of $125,000 reserved under the second section.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Ohio.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SARGENT. I now move to strike out the first section, and on that I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. DAWES. I did not quite understand the amendment which has just been adopted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. SHERMAN. I ask the Clerk to read the whole of the first section as it will stand.

The CHIEF CLERK. The first section of the bill as amended and now proposed to be stricken out reads:

That the President be, and hereby is, authorized to reserve from the Japanese indemnity fund the sum of $125,000, to be used in the manner hereinafter provided; and is further authorized, after deducting all payments properly chargeable to the said fund, to pay over to the government of Japan the principal sum received from that government.

Mr. DAWES. Without the interest? Is that in the amendment?

Mr. SHERMAN. That is already in by confining it to the principal.

Mr. DAWES. I hope no friend of the bill will vote for the bill after that amendment has been adopted.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I think that amendment was not understood by the Senate when the vote was taken, and I hope the vote will be taken over again.

Mr. SHERMAN. I have no objection to that being done if Senators say they misunderstood the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to reconsidering the vote by which the amendment of the Senator from Ohio was agreed to? The Chair hears no objection, and the amendment is before the Senate.

Mr. SHERMAN. I wish to change the phraseology of the amendment a little. It is a little obscure as it now reads.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I hope the amendment will not be adopted. We really have had a vote upon it once this morning. It is only a change of words, repeating the same proposition. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. SHERMAN. This would simply leave the matter to stand as if the money had been paid, as it ought to have been paid under the existing law, into the Treasury of the United States, and it would give the government of Japan the balance of that sum, whatever it was, $785,000, less $125,000 and the amount previously named, which I think is $19,000.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. This money was used by the Government as we received it, to pay our troops in the field. If we had not had this money we should have been obliged to have paid interest on it all the time.

Mr. SARGENT. I should like to ask my friend if he is literally correct in that statement. I understand this money was put into a separate fund by itself, into United States bonds; that it never has been used for any purpose whatever by the United States, but simply has been rolling over like a snow-ball, and gathering its accumulation.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. The money is not kept in the State Department. The money was sent to the Treasury and used to pay our troops, and the account was carried the same as we would be obliged to carry an account if we had borrowed the money from anybody else.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. May I ask the Senator from Ohio whether his amendment returns to the Japanese government the amount which we originally received from them, after deducting this $125,000 from the amount that they paid?

Mr. SHERMAN. It does deduct, as I understand, the $125,000.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. Would it not be better to leave the exact amount and say nothing at all about that?

Mr. SHERMAN. I think, as we had to lose some valuable lives and had a very severe battle, which my colleague seems to think was one of the great events in American history, we ought to have that returned to us at all events. We ought to get that much of the fund.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Ohio, [Mr. SHERMAN.]

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. MAXEY, (when his name was called.) On this question I am paired with the Senator from New Jersey, [Mr. RANDOLPH.] If he were present he would vote "nay" and I should vote "yea."

Mr. PADDOCK, (when his name was called.) On this question I am paired with the Senator from Florida, [Mr. CONOVER.] If he were here he would vote "nay," and I should vote "yea" on this amendment.

Mr. WITHERS, (when his name was called.) I will state that I am paired with the Senator from Indiana, [Mr. MORTON.] If present he would vote "nay," and I should vote "yea."

The Secretary resumed and concluded the call of the roll, which resulted—yeas 22, nays 21; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Bayard, Bogy, Cameron of Wisconsin, Caperton, Cockrell, Cooper, Eaton, Goldthwaite, Harvey, Hitchcock, Howe, Ingalls, Johnston, Kelly, Key, McCreery, Morrill of Vermont, Sargent, Sherman, Thurman, Wadleigh, and Wright—22.

NAYS—Messrs. Allison, Anthony, Booth, Boutwell, Bruce, Cameron of Pennsylvania, Christiancy, Conkling, Cragin, Dawes, Frelinghuysen, Hamilton, Hamlin, Jones of Florida, Kernan, McMillan, Mitchell, Patterson, Ransom, Spencer, and Windom—21.

ABSENT—Messrs. Alcorn, Barnum, Burnside, Clayton, Conover, Davis, Dennis, Dorsey, Edmunds, Ferry, Gordon, Jones of Nevada, Logan, McDonald, Maxey, Merrimon, Morrill of Maine, Morton, Norwood, Oglesby, Paddock, Randolph, Robertson, Saulsbury, Sharon, Stevenson, Wallace, West, Whyte, and Withers—30.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I wish the attention of the Senate for a short time. This subject is coming about to the spot we had it this morning. The bill as it now stands deducts $144,000 from $785,000, and pays over the balance, about $640,000, without interest. I think the Senate ought, without any question, to add this amendment:

With interest at 5 per cent. per annum.

Let me give my reasons. That would pay to Japan about $780,000. I have calculated the interest at 5 per cent. per annum on that balance, and can give the exact figures if it is necessary. The value of that fund in our hands to-day amounts to $1,414,000. If you vote the 5 per cent. interest, it would leave to be covered into the Treasury $473,000 in gold. I do not think this is great injustice, as I said before. I think the other would have been be ter; I think it would have been more honorable and magnanimous, but we certainly ought to add 5 per cent. interest. This fund is so large, as I have stated, because of the appreciation of the securities, because of the compounding of interest, because of the profit we made on the exchange. Let us keep the benefit of those items; but inasmuch as we had this money and used it, and as we deduct from the principal sum $144,000, I offer the amendment I have suggested to insert at the end of the amendment which has just passed the words:

With interest at 5 per cent. per annum.

Mr. THURMAN. When I moved the other day to strike out the provision for interest, I gave the reason that operated upon my mind. If that reason has any force, it applies to the present amendment as much as to the original text. I objected to the payment of interest because it introduced a new principle in respect of the obligations of the Government. It has been a fixed rule ever since the Government existed, and I believe it is the rule of all governments, not to pay interest on claims. We do not pay interest, and I see no reason when we are doing an act that we are not bound to do except by a moral sense of duty to a foreign power, for the purpose of setting a good example to the nations of the earth, why we should be more just to a foreign power than we are to our own citizens. We do not pay to our own citizens, to the most meritorious soldier, sailor, or civilian who ever lived in the country, interest upon his claim. There may have been, there have been, I know, a few exceptional cases; but the general rule no one can deny. When we propose to do an act of great moral justice, to perform an obligation of this kind to a foreign power, I cannot feel that any moral responsibility rests upon me in respect to a foreign power any stronger than the moral responsibility that rests on me toward one of my own fellow-citizens. I shall, therefore, vote consistently with my former position against the amendment now proposed.

Mr. CAMERON, of Pennsylvania. I am surprised to find so good a lawyer as the honorable Senator from Ohio call this a claim. There is no claim on the part of the people of Japan or the government of Japan.

Mr. THURMAN. I stated distinctly that there was no claim, no legal claim.

Mr. CAMERON, of Pennsylvania. I understood the Senator to call it a claim. Of course we are not called upon to pay a claim, because a claim is always a doubtful question. There always is a doubt in the mind of the Government whether a claim is just, and until it is liquidated we do not know that the claim exists at all. Therefore we pay no interest upon claims. The principle is correct. But that is not the case in this instance. We took this money from that weak people. The strong power went there with a force superior to them and compelled them to give us this money. After it had been paid the United States found that we treated them unjustly, and therefore in the spirit of magnanimity we pay the money back, retaining however a sum of money sufficient to pay prize-money, which by the way is a doubtful right in itself. We retain a sufficient sum to pay prize-money to all the gallant men who risked their lives against a weaker power to be sure, but who went there in the performance of their duty. We give them as much prize-money as we would give to a man who was on board of a small vessel and risked the vessel and lives of everybody against a superior power. There was no difficulty about compelling the people of Japan at that time to pay anything which we required them to pay.

If we do this thing at all, let us do it in the spirit of magnanimity in which it originated. The money was here in our Treasury and we used it. It came in gold, and if we had not received it from Japan we should have paid interest for it to other people.

The truth is that these people, in their weakness, were compelled to borrow the money at 10 per cent. to pay us, with our strong arm and our great cannon in their faces. The amendment proposes to pay only 5 per cent., one-half of the interest which they paid then and have paid ever since for that fund. I trust we shall not cavil about the interest.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from New Jersey to insert the words:

With interest at 5 per cent. per annum.

The amendment was rejected; there being on a division—ayes 13, noes 26.

Mr. SHERMAN. I now offer an amendment to which I suppose every one will consent. I move to add to the end of the first section what I send to the desk, in order to dispose of the balance of this fund according to law.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be reported.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to insert at the end of the first section:

And the residue of said Japanese indemnity fund, so far as the same is in bonds, shall be delivered to the Secretary of the Treasury, to be retired and canceled as in the case of bonds paid by the United States, and so much as is in money shall be covered into the Treasury of the United States.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SARGENT. My amendment is now pending, I believe.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from California moves to strike out the first section of the bill, upon which the yeas and nays have been ordered.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. MAXEY, (when his name was called.) On this vote, as on all others connected with this question, I am paired with the Senator from New Jersey, [Mr. RANDOLPH.] If present he would vote "nay," and I should vote "yea."

Mr. WITHERS, (when his name was called.) On this question I am paired with the Senator from Indiana, [Mr. MORTON.] If present he would vote "nay," and I should vote "yea."

The Secretary resumed and concluded the call of the roll, which resulted—yeas 20, nays 22; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Bogy, Caperton, Cockrell, Cooper, Dawes, Goldthwaite, Hamilton, Harvey, Hitchcock, Howe, Ingalls, Johnston, Kelly, Key, McCreery, Mitchell, Sargent, Sherman, Wadleigh, and Wright—20.

NAYS—Messrs. Allison, Anthony, Bayard, Booth, Boutwell, Bruce, Cameron of Pennsylvania, Cameron of Wisconsin, Christiancy, Conkling, Cragin, Eaton, Frelinghuysen, Hamlin, Kernan, McMillan, Morrill of Vermont, Patterson, Ransom, Spencer, Thurman, and Windom—22.

ABSENT—Messrs. Alcorn, Barnum, Burnside, Clayton, Conover, Davis, Dennis, Dorsey, Edmunds, Ferry, Gordon, Jones of Florida, Jones of Nevada, Logan, McDonald, Maxey, Merrimon, Morrill of Maine, Morton, Norwood, Oglesby, Paddock, Randolph, Robertson, Saulsbury, Sharon, Stevenson, Wallace, West, Whyte, and Withers—31.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. HOWE. I move to amend the second section by striking out all after the semicolon, in the sixth line, down to and including the words "1864," in the tenth line.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The words to be stricken out will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

And also the claims of that portion of the officers and crew of the United States ship Jamestown who manned the Takiang in the bombardment of the hostile forts at the Straits of Simonoseki on the 5th, 6th, 7th, and 8th days of September, 1864.

Mr. HOWE. I said some time ago that I did not believe in paying prize-money to the officers and crews of our vessels out of moneys belonging to anybody else but the Government of the United States. On this point I am overruled by the Senate. The Senate concludes that this money belongs to Japan, and therefore we may just as well pay prize-money to one as another out of it. Perhaps to a certain extent we had better submit to that doctrine; but I do protest against paying prize-money to the vessel named in these lines out of any funds belonging to anybody in the world. I would not pay that in dry goods or groceries. That vessel was not a war-vessel; it was a merchant-vessel, hired by the month, crew and all, to go up there and hold up our flag while the fighting was going on. She had just so many dollars per month, and she went. There was a gun on board of her, and they say that gun was fired. The exact number of times the Secretary of the Navy tells you; I forget just now how many times it was. And I believe somebody said it was fired with great gallantry, which I do not dispute at all. I think it requires great gallantry to fire a gun at all on board a vessel. It did not hurt anybody. Nobody was hurt. The two offices that the boat performed were to bear the flag and to take care of the wounded when they were retired from the other vessels.

I do think we cannot with any propriety whatever vote to pay prize-money for such services as those. Actually the papers in the case show that at first the plan contemplated for having our flag represented during that fight was to tow up an old hull and fasten the flag to her, but it was finally concluded she might interfere with the operations of vessels that would have some fighting to do, and therefore they hired this vessel which could go alone, paid her by the month, and she went up there for these two offices. Now it is proposed to take money from Japan to pay prize to the officers and the crew of this boat.

Mr. CRAGIN. Mr. President, I hope this amendment will not prevail. The Senator from Wisconsin says that this steamer Takiang was hired to go up there to take part in this engagement for the purpose of showing the American flag. That is partly true. The Jamestown drew so much water that she could not be taken into those straits or it was feared she could not. Therefore the commander of the Jamestown hired this vessel, and Ensign Pearson was put in command of her, and seventeen men were taken from the Jamestown, each one given a Sharp's rifle, to go on board the Takiang; but Ensign Pearson was not satisfied with that, so he took from the Jamestown a Parrott gun and put it on board this vessel, the Takiang, and he and his seventeen men from the Jamestown went into this engagement; and they conducted themselves with such gallantry, performed such services, and handled that gun with such efficiency that the British admiral commended them in special orders.

As I have before me the diplomatic correspondence, I will read what Mr. Pruyn on that occasion said:

Ensign Pearson, of the Jamestown, who was placed in command of the United States chartered steamer Takiang, I am happy to say, conducted himself so as to receive the special written thanks of Admiral Kuper, commanding the combined fleet, and a large bronze thirty-two-pounder gun was assigned to said ship as a trophy. The thirty-pounder gun of the Jamestown was used by him with such precision and efficiency as to command universal admiration. The wounded of the British were placed on board that ship, in charge, in part, of Dr. Vedder, of the Jamestown,

That is Mr. Pruyn's dispatch to the Secretary of State, Mr. Seward.

Mr. HOWE. How many times was that gun fired?

Mr. CRAGIN. It does not say; but it was fired with great efficiency.

Mr. HOWE. It did hit the land, I suppose.

Mr. CRAGIN. I have no doubt that as this money is in the Treasury or somewhere else and apparently to be refunded to Japan, these men ought to be paid out of it. There will be but a little for them.

Only Commander Pearson and seventeen men can receive any benefit from this part of the second section. The main part of the $125,000 will go to the officers and crew of the Wyoming, for they had a large number of officers and a large number of men. Less than $25,000 will go to Commander Pearson and the men who are under him.

I hope this amendment will not prevail.

Mr. HOWE. I had seen this testimony of Mr. Pruyn and the British admiral before. I do not wish to make any point on the credibility of those witnesses, but upon their competence to testify I entertain serious doubts. I do not quite believe the men who were fighting that battle did take very accurate notice of the range of Ensign Pearson's gun. That they might have discovered some evidence that his shot struck land, I think is very possible; but that they could say that it struck anything else or any particular thing on land in the fort or the fort itself, I no more believe than I believe I could testify to it or any man in the Senate. Undoubtedly Mr. Pearson did all his duty. I am inclined to think he did more than his duty. He was told that he was in command of a vessel not built for fighting purposes and admonished to keep out of danger. I do not remember the language of his instructions, but that is about the effect of them as I remember. I guess he did keep pretty near out of danger, but he went so near that he did fire the gun and fired it several times. I think the amount of shell and ammunition he consumed the Secretary estimates at about $230 or $240 or $250. I make no doubt that he discharged his whole duty. I do not think he hurt anybody, and I know he was not hurt, and there was not anybody hurt on his vessel, and there was not a splinter so far as I have been able to ascertain taken from the vessel.

Mr. THURMAN. I do not wish to occupy any time on this matter except merely to correct a misapprehension, as I conceive it to be, of the Senator from Wisconsin. This action in which the Takiang was engaged took place about a year after the occasion in which McDougal was engaged with the Wyoming, and this is the account that is given of it in one of the reports made in the House of Representatives. After describing the action in which the Wyoming was engaged, the report goes on to say:

For a time the punishment inflicted on the Prince of Nagato seemed to be al that could have been desired, but he rebuilt his forts, and frosh insults were offered to the flags of several nations. This conduct was evidently inspired from higher authority, the edict of the Mikado against foreigners being its main instigation, and Great Britain, France, and the Netherlands sent fleets to the bay of Simonoseki to open the passage of the straits, inviting the United States to give the moral force of their presence and to participate in the action. We had at Yokohama at the time but one ship, the Jamestown, a sailing-vessel, and as the current in the straits was very rapid, it was deemed best to charter a small steamer called the Takiang, which, with the vessels of the powers named, participated in the naval engagement against the shore batteries of the daimio on September 4, 5, 6, 7, and 8, 1864.

Lieutenant Frederick Pearson, of the Jamestown, was placed in command of the chartered steamer Takiang by Captain Price, commanding the Jamestown, under the following orders.

My friend from Wisconsin will find that the Takiang was no merchant-ship with a merchant-crew. She was chartered to join in that expedition because she was a steamer and the Jamestown was a sailing-vessel, and the currents were such there that a sailing-vessel would not be under command as a steam-vessel would be, and she was manned entirely by the sailors of the Jamestown. This order was given to Lieutenant Pearson:

UNITED STATES STEAMER JAMESTOWN,
Yokohama, Japan, August 11, 1864.

SIR: You are hereby appointed to the command of the chartered steamer Takiang, and will proceed in her to the Straits of Simonoseki to act in concert with the treaty powers, who will appear in large force at that place.

The object of sending the Takiang is to show the American flag there, and to manifest to the Prince of Nagato that we are in accord with the other treaty powers, and equally demand with them the passage through the straits without let or hinderance.

As the steamer under your command is not a man-of-war or prepared to attack the forts, you will render any and every other aid in your power to promote the common object—such as towing boats, landing men, and receiving the wounded on board of you if required to do so. To this end you will consult the senior officer present, particularly the British admiral, who will be senior officer of the expedition, and who will have the largest force there. * * *

It is very true that a subordinate duty seemed to be imposed upon Pearson; but the Senator is entirely mistaken in construing this that he was to keep out of danger entirely; and it is a new idea to me that an officer whose duty, whether it be to fire a gun or whether it be, in the language of this instruction, "towing boats, landing men, and receiving the wounded on board of you if required to do so," is not just as much exposed and perhaps more exposed than if his vessel is a powerful war-vessel, and that his services are not equally meritorious with one who is in an iron-clad. I should say that his services were more meritorious, that he ran greater risk, and deserved therefore to be more highly esteemed.

But Pearson was not a man to be where fighting was going on without having a hand; and, by the way, to show that it was expected that he would get where he would be in trouble, he was given the Parrott gun of the Jamestown, and she was put on board the Takiang—a thirty-pound Parrott gun. As I said, he was not a man when fighting was going on to have a thirty-pound Parrott gun and not use it. And so what did he do?

Lieutenant Pearson, not satisfied with these orders, obtained permission to take the Takiang under fire. With three officers and fifteen men, armed with a Parrott gun, or howitzer, and Sharp's rifles for each man, the Takiang went into the battle.

The engagement continued five days and ended in victory to the fleets, the Japan prince making an unconditional surrender, and, according to Minister Pruyn, "agreed to pay such sum as the ministers of the treaty powers might demand for the expenses of the expedition." (Diplomatic Correspondence 1864-'65, part 3, page 553.)

Here follows what was read by the Senator from New Hampshire, the thanks of the British admiral. But it does not stop there:

"Ensign Pearson, of the Jamestown, who was placed in command of the United States chartered steamer Takiang, I am happy to say, conducted himself so as to receive the special written thanks of Admiral Kuper, commanding the combined fleet, and a large bronze thirty-two-pounder gun was assigned to said ship as a trophy. The thirty-pounder gun of the Jamestown was used by him with such precision and efficiency as to command universal admiration." And the diplomatic correspondence of J. Hume Brumley to Mr. Seward (Diplomatic Correspondence 1865-'66, part 2, page 17) shows the warm appreciation of the services of the Takiang by the lords commissioners for the ready co-operation which that gallant officer afforded to the British admiral during the whole of the operations in question.

The result was that the Tycoon, being forced to acknowledge and recognize the active hostilities of his subject prince as acts of piracy, was constrained to enter into a conventional treaty with the diplomatic authorities of the United States of America, Great Britain, France, and the Netherlands, which was concluded on the 22d day of October, A. D. 1864, and afterward accepted and ratified by all the aforementioned powers, the public proclamation of all which was formally made by the President of the United States on the 9th day of April, A. D. 1866.

Thus it will be seen that the lord commissioners of the admiralty of Great Britain caused their thanks to be communicated to Mr. Seward for the co-operation of that American ship in that engagement and the gallant conduct of Pearson, his officers, and men.

I hope the motion will not prevail.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question recurs on the motion of the Senator from Wisconsin to amend the second section.

Mr. HOWE. I think before the debate is closed I ought to make my acknowledgments to the Senator from Ohio, not for having corrected what I said, but for having corroborated what I said on a former occasion. I had not seen that report for some time, and was a little loose in my recollection about it. It seems to me, however, it confirms everything I said.

Mr. THURMAN. One thing it certainly does not confirm. The Senator said Pearson was directed not to go into danger. I say the report shows that he could not perform the duties he was ordered to perform without going into danger.

Mr. HOWE. Precisely where the boat stood when the boat fired does not appear from that report. Whether she stood within range of the Parrott guns or the Sharp's rifles is not made apparent. But the Senator is mistaken when he supposes that the boat was taken up there by the crew of the Jamestown.

Mr. THURMAN. Not in the least.

Mr. HOWE. It was the crew of the boat.

Mr. THURMAN. No, sir; not so. This very report shows that some seventeen men from the Jamestown, with Pearson and three officers, went on her.

Mr. HOWE. Seventeen men of the Jamestown went on board undoubtedly, but the crew of the boat was on board also.

Mr. THURMAN. If they did, how many did they amount to?

Mr. HOWE. I do not know, but the charter of the boat will show that.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I hope we shall have a vote.

The amendment was rejected.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, and was read the third time.

Mr. SARGENT. I call for the yeas and nays on the passage of the bill.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. COCKRELL, (when his name was called.) On this question I am paired with the Senator from Nevada, [Mr. JONES.] If present he would vote "yea," and I should vote with much pleasure "nay."

Mr. MAXEY, (when his name was called.) On the passage of the bill I am paired with the Senator from New Jersey, [Mr. RANDOLPH.] If he were here he would vote "yea," and I should vote "nay."

Mr. PADDOCK, (when his name was called.) On this question, as before stated, I am paired with the Senator from Florida, [Mr. CONOVER.] If he were here he would vote "yea," and I should vote "nay."

Mr. WITHERS, (when his name was called.) As already stated, I am paired with the Senator from Indiana, [Mr. MORTON.] If present he would vote "yea," and I should vote "nay."

The roll-call having been concluded, the result was announced—yeas 24, nays 20; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Allison, Anthony, Bayard, Booth, Boutwell, Bruce, Cameron of Pennsylvania, Cameron of Wisconsin, Christiancy, Conkling, Cragin, Eaton, Frelinghuysen, Hamlin, Jones of Florida, Kernan, Morrill of Vermont, Norwood, Ransom, Saulsbury, Spencer, Stevenson, Thurman, and Windom—24.

NAYS—Messrs. Bogy, Caperton, Cooper, Dawes, Goldthwaite, Hamilton, Harvey, Hitchcock, Howe, Ingalls, Johnston, Kelly, Key, McCreery, McMillan, Mitchell, Sargent, Sherman, Wadleigh, and Wright—20.

ABSENT—Messrs. Alcorn, Barnum, Burnside, Clayton, Cockrell, Conover, Davis, Dennis, Dorsey, Edmunds, Ferry, Gordon, Jones of Nevada, Logan, McDonald, Maxey, Merrimon, Morrill of Maine, Morton, Oglesby, Paddock, Patterson, Randolph, Robertson, Sharon, Wallace, West, Whyte, and Withers—29.

So the bill was passed.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. HAMLIN. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After ten minutes spent in executive session the doors were re-opened, and (at five o'clock and twenty minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

WEDNESDAY, May 31, 1876.

The House met at twelve o'clock m. Prayer by Rev. J. G. BUTLER, D. D.

The Journal of Monday last was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT.

A message, in writing, from the President of the United States was presented by U. S. GRANT, jr., one of his secretaries.

MEXICAN CLAIMS COMMISSION.

Mr. MONROE. I ask unanimous consent to make a report from the Committee on Foreign Affairs touching some points connected with the Mexican claims commission. This report does not ask any action at the present time; it is designed only to be printed and referred to the Committee on Appropriations for their action.

There being no objection, the report of the Committee on Foreign Affairs recommending the adoption of the following amendment to the sundry civil appropriation bill was presented, referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed:

That so much of the appropriation heretofore made for salaries of the United States and Mexican claims commission as may remain unexpended on the 30th day of June, 1876, as shall be necessary for the purpose may be used in payment of salaries of the agent, secretary, clerks, translators, and messengers at the rates now respectively allowed to them for a period not to exceed six months from the 1st day of July, 1876; and the unexpended balance for contingent expenses may be used for the contingent expenses of such commission for a like period; and that the amount which may remain unexpended on the 30th day of June, 1876, of the appropriation of the salary of the umpire, or so much thereof as may be necessary for the purpose, may be expended under the direction of the Secretary of State in acknowledgment of the service of the umpire.

REPEAL OF THE SPECIE-RESUMPTION ACT.

Mr. JONES, of Kentucky, by unanimous consent, submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency:

Resolved, That it is the sense of this House, as well we believe of the country at large, that the Congress of the United States should without delay pass a bill unconditionally repealing the act approved January 14, 1875, entitled "An act to provide for the resumption of specie payments," or so much of said act as requires resumption at any fixed time; that the bill should prohibit any further contraction of the existing currency, and, if necessary to meet the demands of the commercial and industrial interests of the people, it should provide for its increase; that it should provide for the gradual abolishment of the national-bank system and the displacement of its notes with United States notes which require no interest; that it should also provide for as speedy a return to gold and silver, the constitutional basis of our currency, as the circumstances and exigencies of the country will permit, to the end that the people may have hope and encouragement that so soon as practical and wise legislation can effect it they may be relieved from the distressed condition under which they now labor.

INTERNAL-REVENUE TAXES PAID BY RAILROADS.

Mr. BAKER, of Indiana. I ask unanimous consent to offer a resolution of inquiry, asking information from the Secretary of the Treasury. I trust there will be no objection to it.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury, if not incompatible with the public service, be, and he is hereby, requested to report to this House the amount of internal-revenue taxes paid by the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad Company and its branches and by the Central Pacific Railroad Company and its branches from the 1st day of July, A. D. 1864, to the 31st day of December, A. D. 1871, on undivided profits, on profits used for construction or improvements, or carried to the account of any fund.

Mr. O'BRIEN. I object to the resolution, and call for the regular order.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER. The regular order being called for, the first business in order is the continuance of the consideration of the contested-election case of Spencer vs. Morey.

Mr. BANNING. The regular business this morning is the Army bill, which was made a special order immediately after the reading of the Journal.

The SPEAKER. The other takes precedence, if insisted on, as a matter of higher privilege. If not, the Chair will then recognize the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BANNING] as entitled to the floor.

Mr. RANDALL. Both come over as unfinished business, one following the other.

The SPEAKER. As no one insists upon taking up the contested-election case, the Chair will now recognize the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. DURHAM. On the 9th of May this day was set apart especially by order of the House for the consideration of the bill reported from the Committee on the Revision of the Laws relating to corrections and omissions in the Revised Statutes. I desire to know from the Chair how that matter stands, which, as I have stated, was set specially for this day?

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands the order concerning the bill referred to by the gentleman from Kentucky is the ordinary one making it the special order for this day.

Mr. DURHAM. Yes, sir.

The SPEAKER. The House at its last session, and at the close thereof, made by special assignment another and inconsistent order. The House had a right to do that then because it would have a right to do it now if it had not done it then. The question, in other words, of consideration if not made then could be made now. Having been made then the Chair must hold it as well made, and needs not now to be repealed. The Chair must further hold that it is now competent for the House to disregard the order made on Monday and proceed to the consideration of the bill assigned as special order for this day.

Mr. DURHAM. I wish to make another inquiry. Will my bill take precedence after these other special orders are through?

The SPEAKER. Is the order making the gentleman's bill a special order one that runs from day to day?

Mr. DURHAM. Yes, sir.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk informs the Chair that it is a special order running from day to day, and therefore the gentleman's bill will not be injuriously affected by this proceeding.

Mr. DURHAM. I understand the Speaker to decide my bill comes in after these special orders.

The SPEAKER. Subject, of course, to the action of the House.

Mr. HOUSE. Has not the Louisiana election case precedence?

The SPEAKER. It would, but the Chair called it in proper time and order and no one responded.

Mr. HOUSE. I responded and was endeavoring to get the ear of the Chair to insist on it. I insist on it now.

The SPEAKER. The Chair must accept the gentleman's statement.

Mr. HOUSE. I was on my feet endeavoring to get the attention of the Chair.

The SPEAKER. The Chair must accept the statement of the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. RANDALL. The Louisiana contested-election case, as well as the bill reported from the Committee on Military Affairs by the gentleman from Ohio, come over as unfinished business.

The SPEAKER. So the Chair understands, but the election case is of higher privilege than the other. That is the only difference there is between them.

Mr. DURHAM. I rise to the question whether or not my bill shall not be considered; and I ask the Chair to put it to the House.

The SPEAKER. Under the circumstances the Chair must take the sense of the House, therefore, as to whether it will now proceed with the further consideration of the question of privilege.

Mr. DURHAM. I ask unanimous consent of the House to state why I now press my motion.

Mr. MOREY. Before that is done, I rise to a personal explanation.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman can do that after the House has ordered what business it shall proceed with.

Mr. MOREY. My remarks will have a bearing on the propriety of taking up the contested-election case now. I think if the gentleman will listen one or two moments, he will not press his case against this.

Mr. DURHAM. I have no objection to hearing the gentleman's explanation, but I wish to state to the House why I am pressing my business.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the gentleman from Louisiana making a personal explanation?

There was no objection.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION.

Mr. MOREY. Mr. Speaker, a week or two since, just after the organization of the committee to investigate the conduct of Louisiana officials, a witness was examined here by that committee, who, among other things, attacked my character very seriously. This man had been an agent of the Post-Office Department, on duty in the State of Louisiana, and also had been a deputy United States marshal, and had, in pursuance of his duty, served various processes during the fall of 1874. This witness charged various crimes in which he made an attempt to implicate me. I wish to say that so far as all his charges are concerned that in any way affect my honor and integrity they are both false and infamous. From the evidence that he gave he showed that he himself was infamous. And he made a very labored attempt to prove that I was equally guilty.

Now, Mr. Speaker, in the summer of 1875 this witness sent to me by mail an abstract of what he called a history of occurrences in the fall of 1874 in the State of Louisiana. I was West when that was mailed to me here, and it reached me in the city of Denver in August, 1875. To that I paid no attention. In October, when I returned to Washington, I heard that this man had gone to New York and proposed by the meeting of Congress to make a publication of this statement.

In December, 1875, I was aware that I was to be faced in this House with a double contest: a contest for my seat prima facie and a contest for my seat on its merits. This House included in its composition a large number of new members, with whom I had not the pleasure of acquaintance. I felt that a publication of this sort, from any man who had held an official position, in which there was just enough truth interwoven to carry probability with it, would prejudice me; and I felt that, if by paying this man a few hundred dollars I could stop that current of abuse and falsehood, I was justified in doing it. Whether I was justified or not in doing it, I did it. Twelve months ago if anybody had asked me if I would under any circumstances consent to be blackmailed, I should have said no. But we do not know what we will do until the circumstances arise. I felt that, if a publication of that sort were spread broadcast through the country, when I came to this House I would fail to have anything like an unprejudiced hearing.

The testimony of this witness in the aggregate went to show that I was the virtual commander of the Army in Louisiana as well as of all officials there, as he says, "Everybody seemed to obey his orders, from General Emory down."

Now what are the facts? I will ask the Clerk to read a brief extract from the testimony of General Henry A. Morrow, of the United States Army, who was sent in November, 1874, to North Louisiana by General Emory to make an investigation of the condition of things there, particularly in regard to the use of troops.

In his report he reflected very severely on this witness Selye for the unnecessary rigor and harshness exercised by him toward those whom he arrested. On his arrival at Monroe General Morrow came to see me, and we consulted freely in regard to the subject with the investigation of which he was charged. I saw his report, and talked with him afterward on the same subject. General Morrow received the highest indorsement from General Sherman as an officer of judgment and discretion.

The Clerk read as follows:

Question. One of your particular objects was to inquire into the use of the military force in Louisiana?

Answer. Yes, sir; that was my first object.

Q. What was the result of your inquiries?

A. With the permission of the committee I will hand in copies of my official reports, which cover that ground. I did not think there had been any necessity for the use of troops in the parish of Ouachita, Jackson, Lincoln, or Claiborne, and I so reported; and I believe that my report on that subject was considered very acceptable, for I know that it was shown to Mr. MOREY, the member of Congress from that district, who expressed himself, not only to the officer who showed the report to him, but to me subsequently, as entirely satisfied with it, and stated that it was a very fair, manly report.

Mr. MOREY. Now, Mr. Speaker, it is no secret that every two years for six years past I have fought the extreme element of my own party in my State, and have been renominated and re-elected against its opposition.

As to my course on this floor in that time it does not become me to speak, beyond stating the fact that upon every proposition looking toward the political equality of all of the people of this country, upon every proposition tending to enhance the material prosperity of the section which I have the honor in part to represent, my vote has always been recorded on the side of liberality.

For six years I have been the opponent of extremism in my own party, as well as in the democratic party in Louisiana, and during that time I have never failed to poll a large conservative vote outside of my own party vote. With the exception of perhaps a couple of hundred votes, there was no falling off in this character of support in 1874. My majority was cut down from about 4,000 to about 900 through the treachery and corruption of a few republican leaders in two strong republican parishes, who deceived their followers by spurious tickets with the name of my contestant thereon in place of my own. These parishes are not in contest, and I can therefore properly speak of the matter now.

Were it not that it is possible that I may not again after to-day have the opportunity to speak on this floor, I should have remained silent under the prejudice created by the testimony of this witness until I could call witnesses of the highest respectability to disprove every charge made by this black-mailer. This opportunity is given me through the courtesy of the Louisiana committee, and my witnesses are awaiting my arrival in New Orleans, for which place I depart as soon as my contested-election case is disposed of.

I wish now to distinctly deny any and all charges and statements made by this witness that in any manner impugn my honor or integrity, and to declare them to be absolutely untrue.

I wish to say to my friends on this floor on both sides of this House that for the many expressions of their confidence given to me since this slanderous testimony was first published they have my warmest gratitude. What has been most gratifying to me is that the strongest tokens of it have come from those with whom I have had the pleasure of serving the longest and who have had the opportunity of knowing me best. It would be a poor compliment to them, indeed, were I to suppose for a moment that they had any sympathy with wrong-doing. On the contrary, I take it as an evidence of their belief that I have done nothing unworthy or dishonorable.

I wish to say in conclusion why I desire that this contested-election case should be taken up now. The Louisiana Investigating Committee have gone to Louisiana. They are now in session. They have extended to me the courtesy of calling my witnesses for the purpose of disproving this slander. My witnesses are there now awaiting my arrival to be examined; and I think in justice to myself that the case should be now allowed to proceed. The gentleman from Iowa, [Mr. MCCRARY,] I understand, first has the floor. At the conclusion of his remarks he desires to submit a proposition to the House. If the House see fit to entertain it and vote on it, there may be no necessity for any further remarks in the case. If, however, the House decide to go on with the case to its conclusion, then I will take the floor, to be followed by the gentleman from New York [Mr. BEEBE] to close the case. That I understand is the arrangement.

I thank the House for its indulgence in permitting me to make this explanation.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. DURHAM. I desire to state why, under the privilege granted to me some time ago, I press the consideration of the bill which has been made a special order for to-day. I ask the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. HOUSE] who has charge of the election case to listen to me for a moment.

The committee of the Senate and the committee of the House acted upon separate and independent bills. We found after going through nearly two thousand proposed changes or corrections in the Revised Statutes we had nearly agreed upon the whole of them; after we had got through with the bill the two committees met together and we reconciled all the differences that existed between the bills prepared by the respective committees, and I was instructed by the committee to report this bill, and when I reported it only a few days ago the House assigned it as a special order for to-day. It is the joint work of the two committees, and I apprehend that it will not take ten minutes to pass it. Unless I am asked questions as to the specific amendments, I will call the previous question and put the bill on its passage.

I may state, also, that Senator BOUTWELL, the chairman of the committee of the Senate, is to leave for Mississippi in two or three days, and desires that the bill shall pass the House to-day, that he may report it to the Senate and have it passed there before he leaves for Mississippi.

These are the reasons why I press the consideration of the bill under the special order. I hope the House will grant me fifteen minutes. I think we can finish it in that time.

Mr. HOUSE. Is the gentleman willing to be limited to fifteen minutes?

Mr. DURHAM. I am willing to be limited to half an hour. If the bill is not disposed of in half an hour I will let it go over. I will move the previous question in twenty minutes.

Mr. HOUSE. And when that is disposed of the election case will come up?

The SPEAKER pro tempore, (Mr. SPRINGER.) There are several matters of business in order at this time. That which is of the highest privilege is the election case of Spencer rs. Morey, but when questions are raised as to the priority of business they must be determined by the House.

Mr. HOUSE. Then I must insist on going on with the election case now.

Mr. JONES, of Kentucky. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. HOUSE] certainly has the right to yield to the gentleman from Kentucky, [Mr. DURHAM.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. But the gentleman from Tennessee declines to yield, as the Chair understands.

Mr. HOUSE. Yes, sir; I decline to yield. I desire to go on.

Mr. SOUTHARD. The question of the privilege of the special order of the gentleman from Kentucky was decided by the Speaker before he left the chair. He decided that the gentleman from Kentucky has the right to make his motion and submit it to the House. That motion he has made, and I submit he is entitled to a vote upon it.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair desires to state to the gentleman from Ohio that in the matter of priority of business the Chair will put the question first on the question which is of the highest privilege. If the House declines to take up that, he will then put it on the next highest question of privilege.

Mr. GARFIELD. What is the second question of privilege anyhow?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The unfinished business, being the bill of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BANNING] in relation to the Army.

Mr. GARFIELD. Then there are three questions of privilege?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Yes; there are three questions of privilege pending.

Mr. MOREY. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. If the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. HOUSE] should now see fit to yield twenty minutes to the gentleman from Kentucky, [Mr. DURHAM,] cannot that be done by him without losing any of his rights?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. If the House, by unanimous consent, agrees that that order be taken, it can be done; but the Chair must first put the question on the consideration of the contested-election case.

Mr. DURHAM. I do not want to lose any rights I have, and I now raise the question of priority of consideration. I desire to save my rights all through this matter.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman raises a point of order?

Mr. DURHAM. No; I raise the question of consideration.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair deems that the contested-election case is of the highest privilege, and the question on its consideration must first be put to the House.

Mr. DURHAM. Very well, sir.

The question was put on the question of consideration of the contested-election case; and on a division there were ayes 97, noes not counted.

So the motion was agreed to.

CONTESTED ELECTION—SPENCER VS. MOREY.

The House resumed the consideration of the contested-election case of Spencer vs. Morey from the fifth district of Louisiana, upon which Mr. MCCRARY was entitled to the floor.

Mr. BANNING. If it is in order I would like to hear it indicated how long this case will take for consideration.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That will be for the House to determine.

Mr. MOREY. It will take until about four o'clock, or three hours longer.

Mr. McCRARY. Mr. Speaker, what I desire to submit to the House in reference to this case may be very briefly stated. I know how difficult it is for members of this House to give that attention to the details of these cases of contested elections which they ought to give to them, and yet I think every gentleman will agree with me that there is no subject upon which we are called upon here to vote which ought to receive at our hands more careful consideration; for in this matter, Mr. Speaker, we sit as judges of the law and as jurors to consider and pass upon the facts, and we are called upon to act with that care, deliberation, fairness, and impartiality which should characterize a court of justice.

I have no patience whatever with a practice which has been too common, of deciding these cases with reference to the political views of the parties to them. I do not say this, Mr. Speaker, for the first time standing here in the minority, for the record will show that when standing here with a large majority of my political friends I assumed and to the best of my ability maintained this position; the record will show that during the Forty-second Congress the Committee of Elections reported to this House seventeen contested-election cases, and that of that number eleven were decided in favor of gentlemen belonging to the minority in the House. There was one case in which both parties belonged to the majority, and in that case the seat was declared vacant. I think, therefore, Mr. Speaker, that I cannot be charged with any improper motive when I ask the House to consider this case without any reference to political or partisan considerations.

Now, sir, there are four things, either of which the House may do in this case: it may resolve that the contestant, Mr. Spencer, was duly elected; it may resolve that the sitting member, Mr. Morey, was duly elected; it may determine to declare the seat vacant, and refer the matter back to the people of the district for their decision; or it may decide to order that further testimony shall be taken in order to arrive at a just conclusion.

In my opinion, Mr. Speaker, the least that the House can do in fairness and in justice is to adopt the last of these propositions. I do not believe that under the testimony in this case the House ought to resolve that Mr. Spencer, the contestant, was duly elected to represent this district. The House must bear in mind that in order to reach this result it is necessary to exclude altogether from the count a very large number of votes, by throwing out the whole vote of several of the wards or voting precincts in the district. The majority of the committee have recommended to the House that precincts giving the sitting member a majority of 2,244 votes shall be rejected. They recommend that the vote of the fifth precinct of Concordia Parish shall be excluded altogether, and that the vote of the first, second, and third precincts of the parish of Carroll shall also be excluded. Those precincts on an aggregate gave to the sitting member a majority of 2,244 votes, and it is proposed that they shall be excluded altogether in order that the contestant shall be seated.

Now, Mr. Speaker, if this is a necessary conclusion, if there is no alternative but to exclude from the count altogether such a large proportion of the district, then of course the House will have to meet that alternative. But, sir, it is a well-settled rule, and one to which the House always adheres, that a whole precinct or a whole county, embracing a large number of votes, shall not be altogether excluded unless it is impossible to ascertain what was the result of the vote therein.

Now, sir, as to the first precinct that has been rejected by the majority of the committee, the fifth precinct of the parish of Concordia, the ground of rejection is this: that the votes, after being cast and deposited in the ballot-box, were not counted and canvassed at the place of voting, but that the box was taken to the county seat and the vote was there canvassed. The law required the ballots to be canvassed at the place of voting.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I think it may be fairly said that where a ballot-box is carried away from the place of election to some distant point before the votes are canvassed it raises a presumption against the fairness and validity of that canvass. I am willing to concede so much that it raises such a presumption as ought to be overcome by evidence sufficient to satisfy the House that there was no unfairness, no tampering, no fraud; that, although the vote was not canvassed at the place of voting, yet at the county seat the votes were fairly canvassed, honestly canvassed; that no wrong was done by the fact that they were not canvassed at the place of voting. I have read over all the evidence in relation to this precinct, and it is entirely clear to my mind that the votes were fairly, honestly, and correctly canvassed, and that no wrong was done to anybody by the fact that the count was not made at the place where the votes were cast. And there is a perfect and satisfactory explanation as to why the votes were not canvassed at the polls but were carried to the county seat. The law of Louisiana in force until a short period before this election required the ballot-box to be carried to the county seat and the canvass made there, and the officers of this election precinct were not aware that a change had been made in the statute, and believed it to be their duty to take the ballot-box and canvass the votes at the county seat, as they had been in the habit of doing in prior years.

Now, Mr. Speaker, this House had almost exactly this question before it in a case which arose in the Forty-second Congress where, in the State of Virginia, the officers of the election were not aware of a change which had been made in the law of that State regulating elections. In ignorance of a change of the law they numbered all ballots cast. Their action was clearly illegal and in violation of the rule which protects the secrecy of the ballot. Although the judges of election did in that case violate the law in that particular, the House declared that inasmuch as the officers who numbered the ballots acted honestly and no harm was done to any body the vote should not be excluded. This was decided by this House in favor of a democrat when we had a two-thirds majority on the republican side. I refer to Braxton vs. McKenize, Forty-second congress.

To show the grounds upon which the House proceeded in that case let me read a sentence or two from the report of that committee:

> We are further of the opinion that the numbering of the ballots cast at an election, in the absence of a statute expressly so declaring, does not of itself invalidate an election, unless some injury is shown to have resulted to the party complaining.

That is what I want to call to the attention of the House.

> In Virginia the law which was in force until near the time of this election in question this provision repealed. It seems that at a few precincts the officers of election were not advised of this repeal, and consequently numbered the ballots as they had been in the habit of doing before. Although it would be possible from the numbering of the ballots to ascertain how each person voted, it is not claimed in this case that this was done or that the tickets were numbered for any such purpose or for any improper or unlawful purpose whatever.

And so I say here that, although the law required the ballots to be canvassed at the place of voting, yet there is no pretense that they were carried to the county seat for the purpose of any wrong or with any intent to commit any fraud, but rather under the honest impression on the part of the election officers that the law still required the ballots to be canvassed at the county seat.

Now, sir, in such a case as that I submit to the House that where the evidence is clear that the ballot-box was carefully and scrupulously guarded, that every ballot was fairly and honestly counted, where there is no attack upon the fairness or honesty of the count, the House ought not upon a mere technical ground take it for granted that these officers of election, ignorant of the change made in the law, did not act in good faith in taking this ballot-box to the county seat in accordance with the law previously prevailing, and there making the canvass. I think, therefore, that this precinct should be counted. But I submit that, if the House is not of the opinion that it should be counted on this evidence, the least the House can do is to order further and more satisfactory testimony as to the real, honest vote of the electors in that precinct. Now, as to the votes in the first, second, and third wards of Carroll Parish; they are all thrown out upon the ground that the returns which the law required to be sent to the county seat and deposited with the clerk of the court are not to be found on file in the proper office. It seems, sir, that for some unexplained reason the returns were lost or stolen; at all events they are not to be found in the proper place, in the custody of the clerk of the court; but it is conceded on all hands that no blame attaches to the sitting member in regard to that matter; there is no pretense that he had any connection with any scheme for abstracting the returns from the proper office, and the only question before the House is (it being conceded that there was an election in Carroll Parish) whether we have sufficient evidence as to the result of that election in the precincts in question. It is simply a question as to the sufficiency of the proof. Now, upon that subject I admit that there is room for difference of opinion. Gentlemen may contend, and may contend, I admit, with a great deal of force, that as to some of these wards the best evidence would be the testimony of the voters themselves.

I apprehend, Mr. Speaker, that the rule is this: If a return was made, and if that return was not attacked for fraud, and it has been lost or stolen so that it cannot be produced in evidence, then it is entirely competent for either party to the contest to call any witnesses who can testify to the contents of the return and prove the contents just precisely as they could prove the contents of any lost or destroyed instrument in writing.

But if there was no return; if after the ballots were fairly cast, if after they were deposited in the ballot-box, the officers of election for any reason failed to make a return, then I apprehend that the best evidence as to the result of the election in such a precinct would be the evidence of the voters themselves, who should be called and sworn and allowed to testify as to how they voted. Of course the ballots themselves, if they could be found and clearly identified, might be better evidence; but I believe it appears here that the ballots and returns are both missing as to some of these precincts.

As to the first precinct I think the vote is sufficiently proven. The return which was made in duplicate is, it is true, not found on file in the clerk's office, where the law requires it to be deposited; but one of the original copies is identified and sworn to by one of the officers of the election, identified and sworn to as one of the original duplicate copies of the return. It appears entirely regular upon its face; it is sworn to by all the officers of the election as required by law; it is fully certified, and there is no objection to it except that it was not found on file in the clerk's office, and that no return was found on file in the clerk's office.

Now, because there was no return on file in the clerk's office, because after due search in the place where the return ought to be found no return was found, it became entirely proper to call a witness to prove the correctness and genuineness of the other copy of the original return which was kept and not deposited with the clerk.

So as to this first precinct, I think the proof is entirely sufficient, and the return ought to be counted. It is simply a case where the copy of the return which was left in the clerk's office was lost or mislaid or stolen, and cannot be found, and the other original duplicate return duly certified, duly sworn to by the officers of the election belonging to both parties, has been brought in to supply the loss of the copy which was left in the clerk's office. There can be no objection to such testimony as that. It is the very best evidence that could be produced. I apprehend that the very purpose of the law in requiring these returns to be made in duplicate was, that if one copy should be lost or destroyed the other could be proven and produced in evidence.

As to the other wards of Carroll Parish which were rejected, there might perhaps be more difficulty. I do not wish to go into the details. The question is made that, instead of calling the officers of the election to prove what the vote was, the sitting member should have called the voters themselves to testify. Now, if I grant that—and I do not think it is necessary to grant it—but, if I grant that, I submit to the House that it only follows that the committee should have further time in which to consider this case, in which to have the voters called and in which to get at the real, honest vote of these precincts.

The House has passed upon a question exactly like this in another case, to which I wish now to call attention. In the Forty-second Congress, in a contested-election case from the State of Florida, a precisely similar question was raised; that was the case of Niblack vs. Walls. One of the returns in that case was impeached by the evidence, on the ground that it had not been transmitted through the regular and legal channel to the secretary of state, but had been delivered to an unauthorized person, who had broken the seal, who had carried the return and delivered it to the contestant, one of the parties then before the House asking for the seat. This return was delivered by the contestant in that case to the secretary of state. The Committee of Elections decided, and the House decided, that a return that came before it in this irregular way, having been in the hands of unauthorized persons, having been delivered by one of the parties to the contest, having been in a position to be tampered with and changed, was so far impeached that it was necessary to corroborate it, that it was necessary to prove by some evidence aliunde that it had not been tampered with, that it was the genuine return. But the contestant in that case, a democrat, had failed to support the return by any evidence aliunde.

If that return had been rejected the republican claimant of that seat would have retained it, and the democratic contestant, who received in that county a majority of something like 160 votes, would have been excluded from the seat. But the House, although holding that the return was impeached so that it did not prove itself to be genuine, was not willing to say that therefore the vote of that entire precinct should be rejected. And it made an order that the hearing of that case should be continued, that the time for taking testimony should be extended, and that the parties to the contest should be allowed to take proof and show whether that was a genuine return, and as to what was the honest and true vote of that precinct.

Now I think that is precisely what the House ought to do in this case. I submit that no man can read the evidence in this case and have any moral doubt that Mr. Morey was elected by a large majority. Although the proof may in some respects be thought by some to be irregular and not of the very best that can be produced, yet I apprehend there is no man on this floor who will rise in his place and say to the House that he has any doubt that Mr. Morey received a large majority in the fifth ward of Concordia Parish, that he has any doubt that Mr. Morey received a large majority in each of the three wards of Carroll Parish which have been rejected by the majority of the committee in their report.

Now the precedent to which I have called the attention of the House, made by the republicans of this House in favor of one of their political opponents, is that in such a case the opportunity for further proof should be given, if the House is not satisfied with the proof that we have.

Without debating the case further, I desire, if the gentleman having charge of the case will permit, to have the House vote upon a resolution which I propose to offer as a substitute for both the majority and the minority report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the report of the Committee of Elections in the case of Spencer vs. Morey, fifth district of Louisiana, be recommitted to said committee; that the poll of Concordia Parish be counted; that the time for taking testimony in said case be extended sixty days from the 10th day of June, 1876; and that within said extended time additional testimony may be taken upon the question, What was the true vote of the first, second, and third polls of Carroll Parish? said testimony to be taken in accordance with the statutes regulating the taking of testimony in contested-election cases, except that the contestant shall take testimony during the first twenty days; the contestee during the next twenty-five days, and the contestant during the last five days in rebuttal only; this arrangement of time to be subject to such changes as may be mutually agreed on by the parties to the contest.

Mr. BEEBE. Is it the purpose of the gentleman to press this substitute at the present time?

Mr. McCRARY. No, sir; I do not desire to do so until gentlemen are ready to have a vote. I would like to have the proposition pending to be voted on when we reach the final question.

The SPEAKER pro tempore, (Mr. SPRINGER.) It will be considered as pending.

Mr. MOREY. I ask the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. McCRARY] to yield to me the balance of his time.

Mr. McCRARY. I will do so.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Iowa has thirty minutes remaining.

Mr. MOREY. Then I shall be entitled to one hour and a half.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Yes, sir.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. SYMPSON, one of their clerks, announced that the Senate had passed a bill of the following title; in which the concurrence of the House was requested:

A bill (S. No. 728) for the relief of Martha J. Coston.

The message further announced that on Thursday the 1st day of June, 1876, at one o'clock p. m., the Senate will deliver its judgment in open Senate on the question of jurisdiction raised by the pleadings in the trial of William W. Belknap, upon articles of impeachment exhibited against him by the House of Representatives, at which time the managers of the House are notified to attend.

ELECTION CONTEST—SPENCER vs. MOREY.

The House resumed the consideration of the contested-election case of Spencer vs. Morey.

Mr. MOREY. Mr. Speaker, in discussing this case I shall do what other gentlemen promised to do and did not, that is, to confine myself to the record and endeavor to deal with the facts and with the legal and equitable features of the case.

It will be remembered that there was what has gone into history as the "Wheeler adjustment" of the questions growing out of the election in 1874 in Louisiana, in which the action of the State returning board was to some extent revised. In no case was any change made or asked for in either of the fourteen parishes in my district, so that this case comes before this House entitled to a fair consideration on its merits as developed in the record.

The vote of each party in the district is admitted by both parties to this contest, except at one poll in one parish and the entire vote of another parish. We will first consider the one poll, namely, the fifth poll of Concordia Parish.

Contestant charges as follows:

I claim that the said returning board unlawfully canvassed and counted the returns from the fifth poll or ward of Concordia Parish, and that the supervisor unlawfully returned the votes of said poll, thereby giving you wrongfully a majority of 450 more in said parish than you were legally entitled to, for the following reasons, to wit: The election laws of Louisiana require that the ballot-boxes shall be opened at the polling-place as soon as the voting is over, in presence of the public, and the votes counted publicly, and returns made within twenty-four hours after the closing of the polls. At said fifth poll the commissioners of election refused to open and count the votes at the poll; but, on the contrary, they took the ballot-box late at night and carried it away to Vidalia, a distance of fifteen miles, and went into a private apartment and counted the votes out of the presence of the public, and made no returns thereof for two days after the election; all of which constitutes presumptive evidence of fraud and wrong.

Mark you, there is no charge of fraud!

Now, there are two points in this specification:

First, that the votes were counted elsewhere than at the polls; and

Second, (which was a necessary result of the first,) that the returns were not made within the time prescribed by law.

The testimony is so brief that I will ask the Clerk to read all of the testimony taken in regard to this poll by both parties.

The Clerk read as follows:

JOHN F. DAMERON, sworn for both parties, says:

At the general election held on 2d November, 1874, I was at the Vanclusc poll, fifth ward, Concordia Parish, and acting at said poll as a commissioner of election. Robert H. Columbus and Thomas E. D. Jefferson were the other two commissioners at said poll, and William C. Yeager United States supervisor at that poll. When the polls were closed on that day, between six and seven o'clock p. m., the box was locked, I took the key in my possession, giving the box to Robert H. Columbus. We started for Vidalia, the parish seat of Concordia, distant about sixteen miles. Upon reaching the store of T. C. Witherspoon, on the road to Vidalia, the suggestion was made that I should take the box and ride in a buggy from there to Vidalia, which suggestion I acceded to, and came on to Vidalia in company with Irvine in his buggy, one of the other commissioners riding in front and one in rear of the buggy on horseback. Coming on without any interruption, we reached Vidalia between eleven and twelve o'clock that night, and proceeded to the office of Barnett Hitchcock, tax-collector, up-stairs in the court-house at Vidalia. We then and there opened the box and proceeded to the counting of the votes up to half past two o'clock a. m. of the 3d November. When we closed the box, I locked it and gave the key to Robert H. Columbus, taking the box with me in company with William C. Yeager, United States supervisor, to the hotel in Vidalia. Putting the box under my bed in the room of the hotel, we went to sleep and slept till about seven and a half or eight o'clock in the morning. We then got up to breakfast, I taking the box with me to the table. After finishing breakfast, we went to the court house, to Mr. Hitchcock's room again. Opening the box, we proceeded again to count the votes. After thus counting some time in Mr. Hitchcock's room, we closed the box and moved down-stairs into the court-room, where we proceeded until the count was completed. The reason we did not go to the court-room at first was that on arriving at Vidalia we found the court-room occupied by the commissioners of the Vidalia ward or precinct. We completed our returns on the night of the 3d November, between ten and eleven o'clock, and made our returns to the supervisor of the parish on the next day, 4th November, between twelve m. and one o'clock p. m. In counting the votes the tally-lists were kept by different persons, part of the time by Mr. Connell, part of the time by Mr. Joyce, and part of the time by Mr. Nutt. The tally-sheets were kept under the direction and supervision of the commissioners. There were in said box and returned by said commissioners 441 votes for Frank Morey for member of Congress for fifth district and 37 votes for William B. Spencer for member of Congress for fifth district of Louisiana.

During the night of 2d November, when we were counting the votes in Mr. Hitchcock's room, there were present, besides the commissioners, several persons, among whom was a candidate for police juror and a candidate for magistrate of the fifth ward. Mr. Hitchcock's office was considered to be a public office, and any person during the time we were counting was privileged to come in. It was not a public office except for purposes of tax-collecting; and Mr. Ault, the deputy collector, gave us permission to use it. When I went to my meals during the time of counting, I left the box in the court-room in charge of Mr. Columbus, one of the commissioners, and took the key myself; and when he went to his meals, he took the key and left me in charge of the box. The other commissioners did not take their meals at the same house with me, they being colored men. I am neither a democrat nor a republican, but am an old-line whig. The other two commissioners were republicans. I was not considered to be a republican. The labor of counting the votes was very considerable, as it was a general election and quite a number of candidates voted for. I only heard two candidates make objections to our mode and manner of counting. No objection by anybody else was made to me. The votes cast at this fifth-ward box were counted and returned by the supervisor, as between all the candidates at said election. I don't think the tally-lists were very regularly kept, as we had no regular tally-keepers and had to pick them up as we could get them. I believe the tally-lists were kept as correctly as they could have been kept under the circumstances.

I omitted in commencing my statement to mention the circumstances under which the box was removed from the polling-place and the vote not there counted. When the polls closed, the other two commissioners refused to open and count the votes at the polls, they saying that the box ought to be taken to Vidalia and the votes counted there. Not having the book of instructions for holding the elections, I acquiesced in their wishes. I will further state that the reason why we suspended the counting of the votes on the night of 2d November was that the commissioners were tired and very much exhausted by the labors of the day and the long ride that night. I voted at said election for Moncure for treasurer, Spencer for Congress, and some republicans for other offices. Said election was free and fair.

JNO. F. DAMERON.

WILLIAM C. YEAGER, sworn for plaintiff, says:

I was United States supervisor on 2d November, 1874, at fifth-ward box in Concordia Parish. I have carefully read the testimony of John F. Dameron, this day taken and hereinbefore written, and I fully confirm the same, as containing a true and correct statement of the facts relative to the matters stated therein. As United States supervisor aforesaid I made a report setting forth in substance the same facts to F. A. Woolfley, United States supervisor for the State of Louisiana, immediately after said election.

W. C. YEAGER.

THOMAS E. D. JEFFERSON, sworn for defendant, says:

I have carefully examined the testimony of John F. Dameron, taken this day in this cause, and hereinbefore written, and I fully confirm his statement of the facts relative to the election at fifth ward poll, Concordia Parish, on 2d November, 1874, with the following qualification and exception, to wit: I made no objection to opening and counting the votes at the polls, but stated I had served as a commissioner of election before, and always took the boxes to Vidalia to count them; and we had no instruction book to guide us, and I did not know what else to do, believing that to be the law. I had left the instruction book at home, having forgotten to take it with me. The election on that day was free and fair.

THOS. E. D. JEFFERSON.

ROBERT H. COLUMBUS, sworn for defendant, says:

I have carefully examined the testimony of John F. Dameron, taken this day in this cause, and hereinbefore written, and I fully confirm his statement of the facts relative to the election at fifth ward poll of Concordia on 2d November, 1874, with the following exception: I made no objection to the opening and counting of the votes at the polls. Said election was free and fair.

R. H. COLUMBUS.

Mr. MOREY. Now, what was the law in force at the prior election, which is referred to by the witness Jefferson? I quote:

At the conclusion of the election, at each poll, the boxes containing the ballots shall be securely locked and sealed, and taken immediately by the commissioners of election to the parish seat, where they shall be counted out by the said commissioners, in the presence of the supervisors of registration and election of the parish.

Now, this is what was done at this poll, under the idea that the old law was in force. Now, here is a violation of a provision of law through a mistake honestly made. There is no charge of fraud and no evidence of it, and the rule is that the contestant shall be confined to the specific charge that he makes.

Now, there is every word of evidence that is in this record touching this poll, and I would ask what warrant my colleague has for saying that the poll-lists were kept by "any lounging loafer that came along?" It is by this kind of loose statement and by going outside of the record entirely that the attempt is being made to prejudice my claim in this contest. Now, my colleague used this language referring to the commissioners at this poll:

They distinctly state that the returns were calculated from these tally-sheets kept by Tom, Dick, and Harry, or any idler or loafer who came into the room during the count. This was the basis on which they made their returns; and when put to the test they declare that "they do not know whether these tally-lists were correctly kept or not; that they were kept as well as they could be under the circumstances."

Now, these words are put in quotation marks by my colleague, who held his speech three days for revision, and I submit that an argument containing errors of this kind in a case of this kind is worthy of no consideration. This is only a sample; I will have occasion to refer more than once to this "revised" speech, as well as to another of the same sort. Now, my colleague says again:

When votes are called off at the polls, somebody keeps the tally. But the tally-sheets are no evidence of the election whatever, and no part of the returns. They are a mere series of straight marks and names, which may be multiplied and prolonged indefinitely.

In this my colleague states the law correctly; but the gentleman from Missouri, [Mr. DE BOLT,] who also printed a revised speech, says:

The returns are made from the tally-sheets; in fact the tally-sheets are the returns themselves, with the affidavits of the commissioners attached.

Now, where did the gentleman get that law? Not from the laws of Louisiana nor from this record; and this gentleman is a member of the committee and signed the majority report. He said in debate that I had been in this case from the beginning and did not know anything about it. We shall see about that. I propose to show the House that he knows so little about it that his name to that report is not worth the weight of a feather. In this revised speech of his there are twenty statements made by him that are not borne out by the record.

Now we will consider the law.

Was this a violation of a mandatory or a directory provision of the law? Let us see.

Much stress has been laid on the first section of the election law, which is as follows:

SECTION 1. Be it enacted by the senate and house of representatives of the State of Louisiana in General Assembly convened, That all elections for State, parish, and judicial officers, members of the General Assembly, and for members of Congress, shall be held on the first Monday in November; and said election shall be styled the general elections. They shall be held in the manner and form and subject to the regulations hereinafter prescribed, and no other.

These concluding words "and no other" have been treated by the majority as having the same significance as "negative words" referred to by Cooley, the presence of which is conclusive of the mandatory character of the provision. But do they mean the same thing? Not at all.

Cushing on Legislative Assemblies says, referring to the inspectors or commissioners of election:

Where the law is merely directory, no neglect or mistake, or even improper conduct or irregularity on their part, will be fatal, though frequently made punishable by law, if in other respects there has been a substantial and good election.

Provisions of law, which are introduced only as affirmative propositions, are commonly, unless essential in their character, merely directory; but if accompanied also by negative words, or their equivalent, they are, of course, without regard to their character, always peremptory.

202. In the application of this principle much embarrassment will be prevented by keeping in view these two considerations: 1. That it is the language, rather than the nature of a statutory provision, which makes it imperative or directory. 2. That whether a neglect of the requisitions of a directory statute will be fatal or not to the proceedings does not depend so much upon the nature of the neglect as upon its influence in producing the result of the election. Irregularities in the proceedings of returning officers, though not sufficient of themselves to authorize a presumption of fraud or corruption, are nevertheless always looked upon as strong corroborative circumstances.

203. The following cases are selected from a much greater number as examples of irregularities in the conduct of returning officers, in the observance of the requisitions of statutes, and which have been held to be merely directory statutes, and which have been considered as insufficient to invalidate elections, namely: Where the ballot-box was not locked as required by law, but was only tied with tape, and was also placed in the custody of a person not authorized to have charge of it; where instead of 'a box locked or otherwise secured,' a gourd 'carefully stopped and tied up in a handkerchief' was used; where there was an omission to give the notices required by law to two inconsiderable places within an election district; where the returning officers did not meet for the purpose of making their return until after the time appointed by law; where the poll clerks appointed by the sheriff were not sworn until after the election, or were not sworn at all; where the number of votes being required by law to be set down in writing was set down in figures; where the return of votes was unsealed instead of being sealed up as required by law; where the votes were returned after the time prescribed by law; where the opening of the meeting was delayed for two hours beyond the time fixed; where the officers presiding at an election, in the belief that illegal votes had been received, stopped the balloting and commenced anew; where the warrant calling the meeting for an election did not specify the time when the poll would be opened; where the poll was not kept open each day the number of hours required by law. In all these cases, there being a substantial and good election, notwithstanding the irregularities complained of, the proceedings were not invalidated.

Now, the provision of law for counting the votes at the place where cast is not accompanied by negative words, and therefore is not mandatory or essential. It may be a sufficiently positive provision to subject the commissioners to punishment, but is not essential to the validity of the election. The authorities are very full on this point. Now, if this generic provision is held to be mandatory, it proves too much. For instance, the law says that no person shall carry fire-arms within one mile of the polls. Suppose they do. Do you mean to tell me that that would avoid the election? The law says that no whisky shall be sold about the polls nor given away. Suppose each man is offered a drink by his neighbor. The law provides that the commissioners shall count the ballots and declare the result. Suppose at the conclusion of the voting that they are struck by lightning and killed. Do you mean to tell me that the voters at that poll are to be deprived of their right to have their votes counted? No, sir; these are mere directory provisions. But we are not left in the fog at all in this matter. The rule is that the decisions of the State courts on State laws shall govern. The supreme court has decided definitely that these provisions are directory merely.

My colleague from the second district [Mr. ELLIS] has seen fit to indulge in some reflections on the personnel of the supreme court; but as that is not in the record of this case I do not propose to follow him. But I desire to say this: that the opinion of the supreme court merely re-affirms the well-settled jurisprudence of our State on this question, and refers to the decisions on the same points reported in the ninth, tenth, and thirteenth annuals. The court was democratic in those days.

In the ninth annual the decision was rendered by Judge Voorhies. In the tenth annual the decision was rendered by Judge Merrick. In the thirteenth annual the decision was rendered by Judge Spofford. What has the gentleman to say of the personnel of those courts? Are they not Chevalier Bayards? The gentleman should scorn to descend to a partisan appeal like the one he made in his speech in the discussion of a case of this kind.

The gentleman quoted from Cooley. Let me give him a little of Cooley's authority on this point:

Errors of judgment are inevitable, but fraud, intimidation, and violence the law can and should protect against. (Cooley's Limitations, page 621.) The same author says: "When an election is thus rendered irregular, whether the irregularity shall avoid it or not must depend generally upon the effect the irregularity may have had in obstructing the complete expression of the popular will, or the production of satisfactory evidence thereof. Election statutes are to be tested like other statutes, but with a leaning to liberality, in view of the great public purposes which they accomplish, and, except where they specifically provide that a thing shall be done in the manner indicated, and not otherwise, their provisions, designed merely for the information and guidance of the officers, must be regarded as directory only, and the election will not be defeated by a failure to comply with them, provided the irregularity has not hindered any who were entitled from exercising the right of suffrage, or rendered doubtful the evidences, from which the result was to be declared," (618,) and it was said in People vs. Cook, 14 Barbour, 257, and 8 New York, 67, "that any irregularity in conducting an election, which does not deprive a legal voter of his vote, or admit a disqualified voter to vote, or cast uncertainty on the result, and has not been occasioned by the agency of a party seeking to derive a benefit from it, should be overlooked in a proceeding to try the right to an office depending on such election. This rule is an eminently proper one, and it furnishes a very satisfactory test as to what is essential and what is not in election laws. And when a party contests an election on the ground of these or any similar irregularities, he ought to aver and be able to show that the result was affected by them." (Cooley's Constitutional Limitations, page 619; 13 Annual, 175.)

The same principle is mentioned in the Ohio State report for 1866, a report made by a committee of which the distinguished member from Ohio [Mr. WALLING] was a member.

McCrary, in his Election Law, says:

If the statute expressly declares any particular act to be essential to the validity of the election, or that its omission should render the election void, all the courts whose duty it is to enforce said statutes must so hold, whether the particular act in question goes to the merits or affects the result of the election or not. But if, as in most cases, the statute simply provides that acts or things shall be done within a particular time, or in a particular way, and does not declare that their performance is essential to the validity of the election, then they will be regarded as mandatory if they do, and directory if they do not affect the actual results of the election. * * * Those provisions which affect the time and place of holding elections and the legal qualifications of the electors are generally of the substance of the election, while those touching the record and the returns of the votes received are directory. The principle is that irregularities which do not tend to affect the results are not to defeat the will of the majority. The will of the majority is to be recognized even when irregularly expressed. (McCrary, 126-127.)

The same author says:

It is mainly with reference to these two results that the rules for conducting elections are prescribed by legislative power. To hold that these rules are mandatory is to subordinate the substance to the form, the end to the means. (Page 200.)

Further on the same author says:

Bear in mind that irregularities are generally to be disregarded, unless the statute expressly declares that they shall be fatal to the election, or unless they are such in themselves as to change or render doubtful the result. (Page 200.)

In the case of David Bard, Hall and Clark, 116, the committee held—

That even where the law required that the returns should be made on the 15th day of November, and the commissioners of election did not make the return until the 1st of May, then this irregularity would not defeat the election.

In the case of Biddle and Richard vs. Wing, C. & H., 506, the committee said:

The governing principle in all cases is to clearly ascertain the will of the voters. (State vs. Sleirs, Brightly's Contested Cases, page 393.)

When the people, in the exercise of their constitutional rights, have gone through the process of an election according to the prescribed rules of law, they ought not to be deprived of the advantage accruing therefrom but for the most substantial reasons. Indeed, nothing short of the impossibility of ascertaining for whom the majority of votes have been cast ought to vacate the election.

Votes fairly and honestly given ought not to be set aside for any mistake or omission of the returning officers. (Colden vs. Sharpe, Clerk & H., page 369.)

Again, this House, in the case of Draper vs. Johnson, C. & H., 703, decided that—

The law requiring votes to be returned within a limited time is directory only, and if they are not returned by that time the election is not vitiated. They may be received afterward.

Again, in the case of Mallory vs. Menall, C. & H., 328, where the presiding officer of the election, whose duty it was by law to return the votes sealed up, returned them unsealed, they were, in the absence of any evidence of fraud, allowed to be received. Also, that "votes fairly given to a party may be counted in his favor, though they have never been returned to the proper authorities." To the same effect, see Brightly's Election Cases, page 571.

McCrary, section 305, says:

If the voice of the electors can be made to appear from the returns with reasonable clearness and certainty, then the election shall stand.

The burden of proof is upon the contestant that non-compliance in the particular above mentioned affected the actual merits of the election. This he has failed to do, and, guided by the principles of law governing election cases, the official returns on page 130, record, exhibit 25, must be presumed to be honest and correct until the contrary is made to appear.

The burden of proof is always upon the contestant or the party attacking the official return or certificate. The presumption is that the officers of the law having charge have discharged their duty faithfully. (McCrary, 306.)

What does this Committee of Elections say in the case of Cox vs. Strait, recently decided in favor of the sitting member?

Your committee regard the conduct of the judges of election in this place in leaving the ballot-box for the space of an hour unsealed and unguarded as highly reprehensible. It is of the highest importance that the ballot-box should be guarded and protected in the most careful manner; that all the provisions of law made for the security of the ballot should be strictly obeyed. There should not be the least opportunity for tampering with the ballots. It is certainly a serious question whether such an irregularity as this ought not to vitiate the election; but your committee under all the circumstances have not felt compelled to reject this entire poll, there being no evidence that the ballot-box was actually tampered with, but, on the contrary, there is some negative testimony showing that it was not tampered with. Your committee would, were there any facts tending to show that the ballot-box had been tampered with, have decided to reject the returns from this poll. The adjournment for dinner has frequently been decided not to be sufficient to vitiate an election. The law of the State of Minnesota provides that no election returns shall be refused where there has been a substantial compliance with the law.

And in regard to the returns from another town in the same district the committee say:

The returns should have been conveyed to the county auditor by one of the judges of the election, sealed, but were conveyed by the witness, an unauthorized person, and were unsealed. This is a grave irregularity, but the evidence is that he delivered the returns to the county auditor just as he received them from the town canvassers, and this testimony is not impeached. The committee do not, therefore, reject the returns from this town.

Unless this rule is followed my colleagues, Mr. GIBSON and Mr. ELLIS, have no right to seats on this floor.

The democratic counsel before the returning board in New Orleans filed a brief claiming that no poll should be rejected on account of any informality unless accompanied with charges and proof of fraud. This city voted a democratic majority of 15,000. Two of the three commissioners of election at each poll were democrats, appointed by the city council, who were all democrats. What was the reply of the returning board, and what was their action in the premises?

It is a part of this record, and I will ask the Clerk to read it.

The Clerk read as follows:

When the returning officers entered on the discharge of their duties they first took up the parish of Orleans, in which there were one hundred and eighteen polling-places. There being the returns for candidates for a municipal government, two sheriffs, and a great number of minor offices to be canvassed, it was deemed important that the elected candidates should be inducted into office as soon as possible. Immediately on entering into the canvass of the votes in the parish of Orleans it was discovered that the election had been exceedingly loosely conducted. In not probably a dozen polling-places in the city had all the formalities required by law been complied with. In but a very few cases had the list of voters been kept, or, if kept, returned to the board, and many of those returned had not been signed or sworn to. In many cases the statement of votes showing who had been voted for were not kept, or, if kept, not returned to the board, and in many cases the tally-sheets were not kept, and, if kept, not returned to the board, and in some cases nothing but the unsigned and unsworn to tally-sheets were all that had been returned to the board. Under such circumstances, if the board should decide that a compliance with all the forms of law would be required to enable them to canvass and compile the votes, it was evident there had been no legal election in the parish of Orleans. The board then decided that if any of the formalities required by law had been complied with, even only a tally-sheet unsigned or sworn to was returned to it by the supervisors of registration, they would, in the absence of any proof of fraud, intimidation, or other illegal practice, canvass and compile the vote of such polling-place. Under this ruling of the board the canvass and compilation of the vote of the entire State proceeded.

It was found on examining the returns made to the board by the supervisors of registration from the different parishes, that the same omission to comply with the forms of law existed that had been found in the parish of Orleans, and the board applied the same rule.

Mr. MOREY. Now, Mr. Speaker, if the board had decided in the case of New Orleans as my colleague and the committee would have us decide in this case, then neither he nor our colleague, General GIBSON, would have been entitled to seats here, nor would there be held to have been a legal election in the State of Louisiana.

Now some stress has been laid on the fact that the tally-sheets, although kept under the direction and supervision of the commissioners, were kept by unauthorized persons.

The law makes no provisions for clerks. It does not prohibit their employment by the commissioners, and it is the universal practice from one end of the State to the other to employ the expert penmen at each poll to assist in keeping tally. Four or five tallies are kept, and in case of a disagreement the votes are recounted.

But in this case we are not left in doubt, for contestant makes no charge of fraud, and the committee must confine themselves to his specifications. There is no doubt, however, for all three commissioners, as well as contestant's witness, swear as follows:

There were in said box and returned by said commissioners 441 votes for Frank Morey for member of Congress for fifth district and 37 votes for William B. Spencer for member of Congress for fifth district of Louisiana.

Now, by what right, law, or precedent does this committee go outside of the specifications of the contestant to find reasons to reject this poll? There may be some excuse from the fact that they are all new members of that committee and are not familiar with the practice; but the practice is and all the precedents are as I have stated.

The votes in this box were taken without question, and decided the election for the sheriff and other officers in this parish.

We therefore conclude that the return, which is as follows, should be counted:

EXHIBIT 25.—Statement of votes at poll No. 5, parish of Concordia.

Statement of votes cast at poll No. 5, of election precinct No. 5, of the parish of Concordia, for members of Congress, State and parish officers, at the general election November 2, 1874, in accordance with law.

STATE OF LOUISIANA, Parish of Concordia:

Personally appeared before me, the undersigned authority, John F. Dameron, R. H. Columbus, and T. E. D. Jefferson, duly appointed and qualified commissioners of election of poll No. 5, election precinct of the parish of Concordia, for the general election held November 2, 1874, who, being duly sworn, depose and say that they received the ballots cast at the said poll on the day above mentioned; that they have made a true and lawful count of said ballots, and that the foregoing is a true and correct statement of the votes cast at said poll on said day.

Sworn and subscribed to before me this 4th day of November, A. D. 1874.

JNO. A. WASHINGTON,
Supervisor of Registration.

JNO. F. DAMERON,
THOS. E. D. JEFFERSON,
R. H. COLUMBUS,
Commissioners of Election, Poll No. 5, Parish of ——.

An examination of the oath of the commissioners will, in the absence of any charge or proof of fraud, remove all doubt. Spencer arrived at this ward with a majority of 1,396 votes; deduct my majority of 404 votes at this poll, and it leaves Spencer a majority of 992 votes with which he enters Carroll Parish.

CARROLL PARISH.

We next consider the election held in the parish of Carroll. What is the charge of contestant as to this parish? That his vote in this parish, added to his majority in the other thirteen parishes, would give him a majority of the votes in the district? No; not at all. He claims that there was no valid election in this parish. In a case taken up from this parish the supreme court decided that there had been a valid election in this parish. If you take the view which my colleague urges and decide that there was no election, then, inasmuch as there were 2,263 votes cast in this parish and twenty-five hundred and thirty registered voters, enough to decide the election in the district, there is but one alternative under the law and the practice, and that is to send the election back to the people. If, however, we take the other view, which is what the majority report really amounts to at last, that there is not sufficient testimony to clearly determine exactly how many votes each party received, and that the testimony develops the fact that positive evidence on this point can be had by calling the voters themselves, which neither party has done, then the only alternative is to remand the parties back for this evidence.

In Biddle and Richard vs. Wing, Clark & Hall, page 504, the rule is stated as follows:

Indeed, nothing short of the impossibility of ascertaining for whom the majority of votes were given ought to vacate an election, especially if by such decision the people must, on account of their distant and dispersed situation, necessarily go unrepresented for a long period of time.

My colleague, [Mr. ELLIS,] in answer to my question, took the ground that the evidence of the parties who made a return proved to have been lost as to the contents of the paper was tertiary in its character, and that the evidence of the voters themselves would have been primary. I do not subscribe to that view of the law, and I know that his view does not prevail in the decisions made by the various committees on contested elections in Congress.

The testimony of all the witnesses shows that an election was held, and that a count of the votes cast was made; the evidence is conclusive that returns were made up at the polls and signed by the commissioners at every poll except one, where one commissioner did not sign them. The evidence of several of the commissioners is that one copy of these returns was made to the clerk of the court.

E. M. Spann, the democratic commissioner at poll 1, who is not only not impeached, but is one of the leading democrats in that part of the parish, and whose affidavit was taken by the counsel for the democratic party to lay before the returning board to impeach the altered returns, and whose affidavit was unimpeached, testified as follows:

Question. State your name, residence, occupation, and where you were on the day of the election held in Carroll Parish, on the 2d day of November, 1874.

Answer. My name is E. M. Spann; reside in the first ward, Carroll Parish; am a planter; and was a democratic commissioner of election at poll No. 1 in Carroll Parish.

Q. Were you there all day?

A. I was.

Q. Did you assist in making up the returns at the close of said election?

A. I assisted in calling off the votes. T. B. Rhodes, another commissioner, kept one of the tallies, and some other parties present kept other tallies; finding upon footing them up the tallies did not all agree, we counted the votes all over again, and the tallies then kept did agree. The returns were then written up; there were either two or three copies; and the other commissioners and myself then signed them in the presence of each other.

Q. (The document A produced by R. K. Anderson being produced and exhibited to the witness.) Is this document one of the original returns made out at poll No. 1 and signed by you and the other commissioners, and does it give the true result of the election held at poll No. 1?

(This question is objected to by contestant.)

A. It is one of the original returns that was made up and signed by the commissioners, and it gives the true result of the election at said poll.

Q. After the returns were made out what was done with them and the other papers pertaining to the election at that poll, and with the ballot-box containing the ballots cast at that poll?

A. David Jackson, another commissioner, and myself took them to Providence, the parish site, and deposited them in the office of the clerk of the court, all except the returns, one copy of which was left with the clerk of the court and another given to the supervisor of registration of the parish.

One of the witnesses of contestant, it is true, states that there had been no returns, except one, on file in the clerk's office since November, but he is contradicted on this point by the commissioners from poll 3 and poll 4. But as the minority report shows another of contestant's witnesses (Mr. Lackey) contradicts his witness, Galbraith, the minority report says:

By an examination of Mr. Lackey's evidence, (contestant's witness,) it will be observed that he testifies as follows:

"Question. Were the returns which you signed correctly made up from the returns of commissioners of election?

"Answer. Yes.

"Q. Did you discharge the duties of your office honestly and fairly according to the best of your ability?

"A. I did."

Showing conclusively that the commissioners from the various polls must have filed with supervisors and the clerk of the court their returns, for it will be observed that Mr. Lackey swears that he discharged his duties "honestly and fairly," showing inferentially that the clerk of the district court must have certified to the return made up by him, as he says, "correctly from the returns of the commissioners of election for Carroll Parish." The law above quoted distinctly defines the duty of the clerk to be to certify to the correctness of the returns, which are to be consolidated by the supervisors of registration. The legal presumption is that the clerk did his duty. Lackey could not have discharged his duty properly in this connection unless the clerk certified to the correctness of the returns, and the clerk could not have certified to the returns unless he had said returns on deposit in his office. In the same section of the law is found the following:

"He shall forward a copy of any statement as to violence or disturbance, bribery or corruption, or other offenses specified in section 26 of this act, if any there be, together with all memoranda and tally-lists used in making the count and statement of the votes."

There is no evidence produced by contestant that any statement of fraud or irregularity of any kind was made by any commissioner of election in his returns to the supervisor of registration, or that said supervisor of registration made any such return of fraud or irregularity to the said returning board. It will be observed that the last clause of said section 26 reads as follows:

"His copy of said statement shall be so annexed to his returns of election by paste, wax, or some adhesive substance that the same can be kept together, and the other copy the supervisor of registration shall deliver to the clerk of the court of his parish for the use of the district attorney."

This, be it remembered, is the witness of contestant, and there can be no doubt that the returns were made to the clerk's office according to law.

Another witness swears:

Question. Has or not a term of the district court been held in this parish since the election in November last?

Answer. There was a session commencing on the first Monday in December last, I think.

Now under the laws of Louisiana the ballots and returns are not required to be kept longer than the next term of court after the election. An investigation had been had in regard to this election by the grand jury of Carroll Parish during the session of the district court in December, 1874, and this is their finding. (See exhibit D, record:)

ROOMS OF GRAND JURY,
Thursday, December 10, A. D. 1874.

To Hon. Wade H. Hough, judge of the thirteenth district court of Louisiana, holding sessions in and for the parish of Carroll:

Your grand jurors, impaneled for the present term of your honorable court, beg leave to submit the following report:

* * * * * * *

Quite a number of irregularities are reported in the conduct of the recent election in this parish, but upon investigations we do not find them to be of such a character as require the action of the grand jury.

A. C. RHOTEN, Foreman.

It is shown by the evidence of contestant's witness Montgomery that at least four of this grand jury were among the leading citizens of the parish, three of them were democrats, and the foreman a leading citizen and large planter. Now, what crimes against the election laws had this grand jury cognizance of? I will read two sections of the law:

SEC. 45. Be it further enacted, &c., That any civil officer or other person who shall assume or pretend to act in any capacity as a commissioner or other officer of election to receive or count votes, to receive returns or ballot-boxes, or to do any other act toward the holding or conducting elections or the making returns thereof in violation of or contrary to the provisions of this act, shall be deemed guilty of a felony, and upon conviction thereof shall be punished by imprisonment in the penitentiary for a term not to exceed three years nor less than one year, and by a fine not exceeding $300 nor less than $100.

SEC. 57. Be it further enacted, &c., That any person, not authorized by this law to receive or count the ballots at any election, who shall, during or after any election, and before the votes have been counted, disturb, displace, conceal, destroy, handle, or touch any ballot after the same has been received from the voter by a commissioner of election, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and shall, upon conviction thereof, be punished by a fine of not less than $100, or by imprisonment for not less than six months, or both, at the discretion of the court.

No violation of these provisions of the law were reported from any quarter.

It is perfectly clear that the election itself and everything connected with it, including the making of the returns to the county clerk and to the county supervisor, was done as the law required, and the taking of the ballot-boxes and returns from the clerk's office, if it was done, was done after they had been deposited there. This I believe was done, though the evidence is silent as to who did it and when it was done.

This proceeding, however, did not destroy the election. It had no connection with the election, and destroyed nothing but some of the evidences of the election. This proceeding was not in my interest, but to the contrary the contestant and the committee concede that I had no knowledge of nor connection with it, and by the well-established rule such wrong-doing, by whomsoever done, must not work to my injury nor in any manner prejudice me. Now, stress is laid on the statement that this wrong-doing was committed by my partisans. In the first place there is no evidence to show who did it. To quote from the majority report, "the proof is silent on that point." Now, is it proposed to go outside of the record, that even the majority report says is silent on this point, and assume that somebody did it, because the contestant charged it? Why did he not prove it? Why did he not attempt to prove it? Neither of the factions in that parish were my partisans in the ordinary application of the term. The all-absorbing fight was for the State senatorship, and there were democrats and republicans on both sides of the contest. There were 2,365 votes polled, of which about 1,900 were colored and 400 white, and the whole current of testimony is that I received the votes of all the republicans on both sides, besides a large number of the democratic votes.

Now, in order that there may be no confusion in the minds of members, it must be kept in mind that the law provides that there shall be three commissioners of election, who shall be taken from different political parties, and who shall be of good standing in their respective parties. These three commissioners hold the election, count the votes, and make two sets or copies of the returns. One set, with the ballots in the boxes and tally-sheets, is to be taken to the county clerk's office, and the other set is returned to a county officer termed the supervisor of registration and election, whose duty it is to make a consolidated return from the returns received by him from the different polls, and to send this consolidated return, together with the returns from the different polls, to the State board of returning officers. Now, this county supervisor was a colored man, named Lackey. He had by law two clerks. One was J. S. Milliken, the other was W. W. Benham. Now, who was Lackey? The contestant charged in his notice that he was "the mere tool of George C. Benham," the white candidate for the State senate who ran against Gla, the colored candidate. I admit the charge; I agree that he was the tool of George C. Benham, just as the contestant charged, and I think I will show it by the contestant's own witnesses as well as by mine, and make the presumption that he was the man that altered these returns reasonably clear. The contestant, for reasons best known to himself, made this man his witness afterward and relies largely on his testimony. The contestant in his brief charges the forgery on W. W. Benham, the clerk of the supervisor, and the committee in their report adopt this view, notwithstanding there is not one word of evidence of that fact in the record. The contestant did not attempt to show it nor did he attempt to impeach the evidence or the character of W. W. Benham. His evidence is unimpeached and uncontradicted save in one particular, where he swears that all of the commissioners signed the returns from poll 2, while Montgomery, the democratic commissioner, swears that he did not sign the returns, though he swears "he signed all the papers that he thought the law required." That was a matter in regard to which either party might have been mistaken, and Montgomery does not contradict another word of Benham's testimony, nor does anybody else.

I was, I confess, astonished to read in the speech of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. HOUSE] this statement:

> It is clearly shown, as I think, by the proof that he was the man who committed the forgery.

This statement also appears in the remarks of my colleague [Mr. ELLIS] and of the gentleman from Missouri, [Mr. DE BOLT.] Where, I ask, is the evidence on which this statement is based?

Mr. HOUSE. I will tell the gentleman, if he will allow me.

Mr. MOREY. Certainly.

Mr. HOUSE. The evidence in the case is that the supervisor of the county says that the returns which were found in the hands of the State board were not put there by his authority or with his consent. A receipt was produced from W. W. Benham, and he admits that he carried the returns to the State board. He does not deny nor is he asked to deny that he altered those returns, although the circumstances cast upon him the strongest suspicion of having done so.

Mr. MOREY. Now, if the House will give me its attention for two or three minutes I will dispose of that part of the case, or I am willing to relinquish my seat as a member of this House. The gentleman admits that there is no evidence but what he has just stated, that W. W. Benham was a mere messenger of Supervisor Lackey. Is that correct?

Mr. HOUSE. I did not distinctly hear the gentleman. I would be glad to have him repeat his proposition.

Mr. MOREY. Do you not admit that there is no evidence of record except that Benham was the messenger between the county supervisor and the returning board, and that he put the returns before that board?

Mr. HOUSE. No, sir; I do not admit that he was the messenger of the supervisor at all. It is shown that he carried some returns; and the forgery rests between him and the State attorney, it being conceded that the papers were forgeries.

Mr. MOREY. Now, if you will listen, I will show you that you do not know anything about this record. I say this with due respect to the gentleman and without intending of course to impugn his motives. I intend, however, to show that this committee do not know anything about this record.

Now, in your report you say that the evidence is clear and conclusive that W. W. Benham was the author of this forgery. That is the statement of your report.

It is not in this record. It was not charged in the contestant's notice. It is charged, however, in the contestant's brief, because it was important to break the witness down, as he was a commissioner of election and my witness. W. W. Benham was the clerk of the supervisor and acted as his messenger in taking the returns to New Orleans; and not only was there no charge that he forged the returns, but affidavits were introduced by contestant to prove that the brother of this witness, George C. Benham, the candidate for State senator, altered the returns, and that matter was alluded to by my colleague [Mr. ELLIS] in these words:

> The brother of Benham was detected some time after the election in a house on Jackson street, three miles from the State-house, with the lists and returns before him, which he was manipulating.
> But I will say in justice to myself that, whether in or out of the record, what I stated was true, because I was one among those who heard of G. C. Benham's operations and was consulted as to the best means of detecting and punishing him for his fraud upon the returns.

Mr. HOUSE. The gentleman alludes to George C. Benham being seen at a house in New Orleans figuring on those returns or figuring on some papers.

Mr. MOREY. Yes, sir.

Mr. HOUSE. Was that before or after W. W. Benham made this return to the State board? If it was before, then he carried to the State board returns which his brother had forged; and, if it was after W. W. Benham carried the returns to the State board, how did George C. Benham get hold of them? Will the gentleman explain that?

Mr. MOREY. I will. As I said before, there is no word of evidence on the subject as to who committed this forgery.

Mr. HOUSE. Will the gentleman allow me a moment? He has accused the committee of knowing nothing about the record. Now I have put a question to him which he fails to answer. The report states that the proof shows that W. W. Benham altered these returns. Now the gentleman undertakes to throw the responsibility on the brother of W. W. Benham, who, he says, was figuring on some returns in New Orleans. He figured on those returns before W. W. Benham took them to the State board. That fact is not disputed, that W. W. Benham put them before the State board—some returns. Then it necessarily follows that he either put the returns before the State board that his brother had figured on or that his brother got the returns from the State board after he had forged them. How did he get them? That is the point. Answer that.

Mr. MOREY. In answer to that I will simply say this: It has been well said that you can assume anything; you can assume a man into the penitentiary; but I wish to say my view of the manner in which a contested-election case is to be investigated is that it is to be investigated upon what is in the record. There is not a line or word to show who committed that forgery. It was the business of my contestant to show, not for me, who committed any forgery. Why did he not do it?

Now, if the gentleman from Tennessee will listen to me a few minutes perhaps I can throw a little light on that matter. He says I shifted it to George Benham. I do not shift it to anybody. I simply say there is no evidence that Benham did it. The contestant in his notice says this about the supervisor: that the supervisor himself was the mere tool of George C. Benham, not W. W. Benham. George C. Benham was a candidate for the State senate. Another of the contestant's witnesses swears that he asked for the removal of Mr. Lackey, the county supervisor, because he thought he was controlled by George C. Benham.

Now, sir, there is not a line nor a word beyond that to show who altered the returns, and I do not propose to have it saddled on W. W. Benham by a mere statement of any gentleman or any number of gentlemen unsupported by a line of testimony. Now, if the committee please, perhaps I can throw a little light on this matter. Let us see.

Contestant in his notice says:

> The supervisor of registration and election in said parish was the mere tool of George C. Benham, * * * the said Benham being himself a republican candidate for State senator in the district of which Carroll is part.

J. E. Burton, who was a witness for contestant, swears (page 69, record) as follows in answer to my question:

> Question. Did you or not recommend the removal of R. M. Lackey as supervisor of registration of this parish on account of unfitness?
> Answer. I recommended his removal because I thought he was controlled by George C. Benham.

Now what does this fellow, this "tool of George C. Benham," testify when contestant makes him his witness and puts him on the stand?

> Q. Were or not the election returns of the election held 2d November, 1874, for Carroll Parish, which were put before and promulgated by the State returning board made out and signed by you?
> A. They were not made out and signed by me, or by my authority.
> Cross-examined by contestee, FRANK MOREY:
> Q. When did you first inform anybody of this fact?
> A. This is the first time that I have spoken about it.
> Q. Did you not tell any one that you could swear to this before this morning?
> A. No.
> Q. Then you have kept this fact to yourself until this morning?
> A. Yes.
> Q. How do you know that the returns put before the returning board were not signed by you?
> A. Because there were more votes on the returns before the returning board as promulgated than there were on the returns I signed.
> Q. Did you ever see the signatures to the returns before the returning board?
> A. No.

Now, is not this a fine witness? He, a county officer, knew of this fraud and kept his lips closed for just six months, till the contestant found means to unlock them. Now what credit can be given to such a witness as that? A term of court was held in December. He did not report it to the grand jury nor to the district attorney.

But his perjury is not left to presumption merely. His testimony is directly contradicted by Colonel Leonard, (page 55, record,) the district attorney of that judicial district.

J. EDWARDS LEONARD, sworn for contestee, Frank Morey, testifies as follows:

Question. What is your name, residence, and occupation, and where were you on the 2d day of November last, the day of the election?

Answer. J. Edwards Leonard; Carroll Parish; lawyer, and district attorney for thirteenth judicial district of Louisiana. I was in Providence, Louisiana, on the day of the election.

Q. Has Mr. Lackey, the supervisor of registration of this parish, and yourself ever had any conversation in regard to the vote cast in this parish at the last election or in regard to the returns made thereof? And, if so, please state what it was.

(Contestant objects to this question.)

A. Shortly after the official returns for Carroll Parish were published in the New Orleans papers, Mr. R. M. Lackey was in my office, and I inquired of him whether the returns as published were correct and such as he made. I inquired particularly in regard to the vote for State senator. Mr. Lackey told me that the returns, as he made them, gave Benham twenty-two hundred and odd votes and Gla two hundred and odd; that Benham's majority in the parish was about two thousand; that he so returned.

Q. Did you vote at the election 2d of November last; and, if so, where, and about what hour of the day did you vote?

A. I voted at poll No. 2, parish of Carroll, late in the afternoon.

Q. Do you know of or did you hear of any complaints made on that day against the fairness of the election held at that poll?

A. I heard no complaints until a number of days after the election, when Nicholas Burton came to me to bring a suit for him, the record of which was offered by contestant.

Now, as this contest is on its merits, and as we do not rely on the returns at all, all this evidence is of no special importance, except to show the error which the majority have fallen into, of ascribing the forgery to W. W. Benham.

Now, this consolidated return was opened by the State board in New Orleans and was found to be altered and the accompanying poll or precinct returns were found to be forgeries.

The democratic counsel asked for the rejection of the vote of the entire parish. The board denied this, but called on the democratic counsel for affidavits showing the alterations and showing the true vote. Affidavits were produced from the democratic commissioners of the parish, and the returns, corrected by their evidence, so far as any candidate who was affected by the alterations was concerned, were canvassed by the board, the corrected returns electing Gla as senator instead of George C. Benham, who was declared elected by the altered returns. No other candidate was materially affected by the alterations. Whether they should have canvassed these returns at all or not is of no consequence in this proceeding, as this case is on its merits and does not depend on the action of this board.

But I will here remark that the election law, full as it is of provisions, has not provided for such a case as that of the alteration of the returns after they have left the polls. Section 3 of the election law says:

Be it further enacted, &c., That in such canvass and compilation the returning officers shall observe the following order: They shall compile first the statements from all polls or voting-places at which there shall have been a fair, free, and peaceable registration and election. Whenever from any poll or voting place there shall be received the statement of any supervisor of registration or commissioner of election, in form as required by section 26 of this act, on affidavit of three or more citizens, of any riot, tumult, acts of violence, intimidation, armed disturbance, bribery, or corrupt influences, which prevented or tended to prevent a fair, free, and peaceable vote of all qualified electors entitled to vote at such poll or voting-place, such returning officers shall not canvass, count, or compile the statement of votes from such poll or voting place until the statements from all other polls or voting-places shall have been canvassed and compiled. The returning officers shall then proceed to investigate the statements of riot, tumult, acts of violence, intimidation, armed disturbance, bribery, or corrupt influences at any such poll or voting-place; and if from the evidence of such statement they shall be convinced that such riot, tumult, acts of violence, intimidation, armed disturbance, bribery, or corrupt influences did not materially interfere with the purity and freedom of the election at such poll or voting-place, or did not prevent a sufficient number of qualified voters thereat from registering or voting to materially change the result of the election, then, and not otherwise, said returning officers shall canvass and compile the vote of such poll or voting-place with those previously canvassed and compiled; but if said returning officers shall not be fully satisfied thereof, it shall be their duty to examine further testimony in regard thereto, and to this end they shall have power to send for persons and papers. If after such examination the said returning officers shall be convinced that said riot, tumult, acts of violence, intimidation, armed disturbance, bribery, or corrupt influences did materially interfere with the purity and freedom of the election at such poll or voting-place, or did prevent a sufficient number of the qualified electors thereat from registering and voting to materially change the result of the election, then the said returning officers shall not canvass or compile the statement of the votes of such poll or voting-place, but shall exclude it from their returns: Provided, That any person interested in said election by reason of being a candidate for office shall be allowed a hearing before said returning officers upon making application within the time allowed for the forwarding of the returns of said election.

Now, by analogy, the board inferred it to be their duty to send for persons and ascertain the true vote. This they did, and so far as the vote for member of Congress was concerned, in the language of the law, "it did not materially change the result of the election." There was no allegation of fraud at the polls before the board, hence the case did not come within the provisions of section 3 of the election law. I repeat, there is no provision of the law to meet the case, and if the board had by their action allowed Lackey, the supervisor, or whoever it may be that committed these forgeries, to disfranchise twenty-three hundred voters, their action would be indefensible. It is said they did so in another case; but I ask, were they not denounced from one end of the State to the other for so doing? So far as this case is concerned, if they acted properly, it matters not what they did in another parish which is not in this congressional district.

This was the decision of the returning board in the Carroll Parish case.

Much evidence, in the shape of affidavits, was filed in the case by the parties in interest.

A careful examination of the evidence on both sides satisfied us that the election was fair, free, and peaceable, and that on the day of election there was nothing unusual that affected the voters at any of the polls.

It is true there was some such evidence as that alluded to by Mr. Arroyo at poll No. 2, where it is charged that Benham, one of the candidates for the senate, intimidated voters, and caused them thereby to vote for him. It is proved that Benham did procure colored voters to change their ballots, but there is no such evidence as will justify the conclusion that he exercised any violence or threats to induce them to do so.

At poll No. 1 it is charged that the ballot-box was made so inaccessible that ballots had to be put on the ends of canes to hand them up to the commissioners. This evidence is not sustained by the commissioners; even Mr. Spann, the democratic commissioner at this box, does not corroborate this statement; but even if it were so, as commissioners of both political parties presided at this poll, and there is no proof that the ballots actually voted were not put in the box, it cannot invalidate the election.

The whole evidence satisfies us that up to and on the day of election there was no intimidation or other unlawful act that should invalidate the election at any poll in this parish, but that the election was as fair, free, and peaceable as usual, and that the voters very generally exercised their right to vote. There were 2,539 votes registered, and 2,263 voted. In fact, it is not attempted to be proved that any one was prevented from voting from any unlawful cause.

It is clear that all was fair, free, and peaceable up to the close of the election in this parish. If anything transpired to deprive the voters of this parish from having their votes properly returned and compiled, it was after the election; and under the law it is the duty of this board, and it has the power, to inquire into any such fraud, and, if found to exist, to ascertain the facts and make the proper correction and compilation. This the board proceeded to do. In the absence of intimidation or other acts that would improperly influence the election on or before the day of election, the law authorizes us to take evidence and even send for persons and papers where corrupt influences have been used to offset the election. Fraudulent changing the commissioners' returns comes under this head. Now, in canvassing the returns under this authority, it is the duty of the board to ascertain the true state of the vote, and to so compile it; not to reject it altogether, as Mr. Arroyo contends in his protest. If the returns should be found to have been changed, they are to be corrected so as to show the true state of the case, and not to be altogether rejected.

The main contest in this case was between Mr. Benham and Mr. Gla, both republican candidates for the senate, and both claiming to be regularly nominated. There was also a democratic candidate for the senate, Mr. Brigham.

There is no evidence that the return from poll 5 had been, in any particular, changed.

There is no evidence there was any changing of the returns of the commissioners from poll 2, except as to Benham and Gla.

The evidence shows that the returns of the commissioners of election from polls 1, 3, and 4, had been changed as to the candidates for treasurer, Congress, and senate, and the real number of votes received by each candidate are detailed in the evidence; but the change in the number of votes for treasurer and Congress is too small to offset the result of the election for either of these offices.

* * * * * * *

We predicate this altogether on the testimony from democratic sources.

The evidence does not satisfy us that the commissioners' returns are forgeries, but that they have been changed in the above particulars.

It has been our purpose in this investigation to give the voters in Carroll Parish the real benefit of their votes, honestly, and without fraud or intimidation cast at the election.

Our colleague, Mr. Arroyo, has, in his protest in this case, departed from the equitable and just rule that ought to govern on such cases, in insisting on throwing out the entire vote of this parish, thereby depriving the voters of their inestimable privilege when they are in no manner at fault, the effect of which would be the counting in a number of his party friends, and deprives him of that high position he has assumed throughout of being altogether impartial.

J. MADISON WELLS,
President Returning Board.

Now, this decision was in reply to the protest of Mr. Arroyo, a democratic member of the returning board, who took the ground that the whole vote of Carroll Parish should be rejected. This protest was introduced by both parties as evidence. It is a copy of an official record, and sworn to as such by Mr. Arroyo. (See page 14 of record.)

I will read so much of it as relates to the alteration of the returns from Carroll Parish:

The undersigned, a member of the returning board, protests against the decision of the board in canvassing and compiling the returns of the parish of Carroll, for the following reasons, to wit: Because, according to said report and tally-sheets made by the commissioners of election at the different polls of said parish, the following parties appear to have received the following vote, namely: At poll 1, Antoine Dubuclet, candidate for State treasurer, received 647 votes; J. C. Moncure 21; Frank Morey, for Congress, received 645 votes, and W. B. Spencer 28; for State senator, George C. Benham received 638 votes, and J. A. Gla 196, J. H. Brigham 7; while E. M. Spann, democratic commissioner of election at said poll, swears that A. Dubuclet received 580 votes, J. C. Moncure 21, F. Morey 569, W. B. Spencer 33, George C. Benham 394, J. A. Gla 196, J. H. Brigham 7; and that any other return purporting to have been made by him (Spann) is false, and his signature thereto is a forgery. At poll 2, for State treasurer, A. Dubuclet received 717 votes, J. C. Moncure 53; for Congress, F. Morey received 719 votes, W. B. Spencer 49; for State senator, George C. Benham received 702 votes, J. A. Gla 65, and J. H. Brigham 3; while T. T. Montgomery, the democratic commissioner of election at said poll, swears that George C. Benham received 427, J. A. Gla 262, and J. H. Brigham 3; and that any other return purporting to be made by him (Montgomery) is false, and the signature thereof is a forgery.

At poll 3, for State treasurer, A. Dubuclet received 558 votes, J. C. Moncure 3; for Congress, F. Morey received 554 votes, and W. B. Spencer 7; for senator, George C. Benham received 501, J. A. Gla 60, and J. H. Brigham 1; while R. M. Bagley, democratic commissioner of election at said poll, swears that Antoine Dubuclet received 514 votes, J. C. Moncure 3 votes; Frank Morey for Congress received 510 votes, W. B. Spencer 7 votes, George C. Benham 350 votes, J. A. Gla 164, and J. H. Brigham 1 vote. Being present in the returning board when the returns were canvassed, he, the said Bagley, pronounced the return false, his signature thereto a forgery, and the tally sheets accompanying the same as spurious and false; for the tally-sheet that was kept by the commissioners and adopted by them was the one which he, the said Bagley, wrote, and that was in red ink, whereas the one before the returning board is in black ink.

At poll 4, Antoine Dubuclet received 189 votes, J. C. Moncure 52; for Congress, Frank Morey 167 votes, W. B. Spencer 74; for senator, George C. Benham 156 votes, J. A. Gla 23, J. H. Brigham 60; while J. S. Milliken, the democratic commissioner of election at that poll, swears that at that poll A. Dubuclet received 155 votes, J. C. Moncure 65, F. Morey 156, W. B. Spencer 64, George C. Benham 111, J. A. Gla 56, and J. H. Brigham 60; and that any other return purporting to have been signed by him (Milliken) is false and his signature a forgery.

At poll 5, for State treasurer, A. Dubuclet received 91 votes, J. C. Moncure 106; for Congress, F. Morey received 96 votes, W. B. Spencer 108; for State senate, George C. Benham 72, J. A. Gla 121, and J. H. Brigham 23; while by the testimony of T. P. McCandles, democratic commissioner at said poll, A. Dubuclet received 91 votes, J. C. Moncure 106, F. Morey 96, W. B. Spencer 108, G. C. Benham 41, J. A. Gla 129, and J. H. Brigham 33; and said McCandles swears that any returns purporting to be signed by him, showing a different result, is false and his signature is a forgery.

Now, Mr. Speaker, every one of the affidavits upon which that protest is based is in evidence except one of the two affidavits made by Bagley, to wit, the one in which he states the vote. I applied for a copy to the secretary of state, who informed me that he could not find it among the papers; that several papers had been lost or stolen, and I was fortunate in finding as many as I had.

We will examine the testimony, however, to determine whether or not this affidavit was made.

Mr. Bagley, the democratic commissioner at poll 3, was sent for by contestant, who informed me that he was going to call him to testify. Bagley came to Providence, and after consultation with contestant left town. I then subpœnaed him, and, as the record shows, he was an unwilling witnes. He testifies as follows, however, (page 40 of record:)

Question. On the return which you swore to as being the correct statement of the votes cast at poll No. 3, how many votes were cast for William B. Spencer for Congress and Frank Morey for Congress?

(This question is objected on grounds previously stated to other questions by contestant.)

Answer. I do not remember either now well enough to swear to them.

Q. Did you or not make affidavit, which affidavit was before the returning board, in which you stated the exact number of votes cast for W. B. Spencer and for Frank Morey for Congress, and which affidavit stated that this was the vote stated in the returns which you signed and swore to as being the correct statement of the votes cast for Morey and for Spencer, respectively, at poll No. 3?

(This question objected to by contestant.)

A. I know I made an affidavit before the returning board, and think, though I am not positive, that I stated therein the vote for Morey and Spencer. My statement in that affidavit, whatever it was, was correct.

Q. If in that affidavit you swore that William B. Spencer received 7 votes and Frank Morey 510, was or not that the correct statement of the votes cast for those persons?

(Contestant objects to this question.)

A. It was.

Mr. Zacharie, the chairman of the democratic counsel before the returning board, and a witness for the contestant, testifies as follows concerning these affidavits. (See page 16 of record:)

The affidavits from the three polls were signed by Mr. Montgomery at one poll, Mr. Bagley at another, and the third party's name I have forgotten—Spann, I think it was—who assisted at the election either as commissioners of election or as clerks, and who swore that such and such results had been the issue of the election held at their polls, and that the returns were turned in showing a different result. Mr. Bagley made a subsequent affidavit, in which he alleged that the tally-sheet purporting to exhibit the correct return from that poll was a forgery in two respects: First, that the signature which purported to be his signature was not his signature; and, secondly, that the true, original tally-sheet had been made out in red ink, whereas the one exhibited before the board was made out in black ink.

In the examination of Arroyo, the democratic member of the returning board and witness for contestant, counsel for contestant asked him, (page 13 of record:)

Question. Well now, Mr. Arroyo, I will ask you whether or not, in making the canvass of that parish, the returning board did not recognize it as a fact that the returns of the first, second, and third wards were forgeries? (Here in this address by Mr. Wells, president of the board, in the Republican of the 25th December, 1874, he says that the returns from that parish were shown to have been changed in the cases of Carroll, Saint Helena, and Saint James, where it was charged and proved that they had been changed after they came into the hands of the supervisors.) They admit that it was proved that these returns were changed; for instance, Spann, Montgomery, and Bagley proved that they were forgeries of the official returns?

Answer. Yes, sir.

Q. The board did so recognize these returns as forgeries?

A. That is, there were affidavits read before the board by these three gentlemen stating the actual number of votes cast in their respective polls, and if there was any other statement it was false, and their signatures to such statement forgeries.

And on cross-examination by me Arroyo testifies:

Cross-examination by Mr. MOREY:

Question. Mr. Arroyo, did you make an official protest to the action of the board in regard to the Carroll Parish contest?

Answer. I did, sir.

Q. Will you be kind enough to look at the Picayune of the 19th December, 1874, and read what is published there in its columns as the protest of Mr. Arroyo; will you be kind enough to look at that and let me know whether that is a copy of your protest?

A. Though it is not signed by me, it is evidently my protest, for I recognize all the points that I made in that. I have kept a copy of it. (After further inspection.) It is my protest, sir.

Q. The various affidavits referred to in that were before the board?

A. Yes, sir; I took the data from them. The Picayune hereto annexed, and marked exhibit J, contains a copy of my protest. (See appendix.)

Q. Mr. Arroyo, did not Governor Wells, on behalf of the other members of the board, submit a reply to your protest?

A. Yes, sir.

Now take that testimony of those three witnesses together, and they are not impeached—two of them are contestant's witnesses and the other his partisan friend—and does it now show clearly that Bagley made the affidavit and stated my vote to be 510 and Spencer's 7 at poll 3. Now I contend that the corrected returns should be counted; and if so counted, my case is made out. A case precisely in point decided by this House (see 20 Bartlett, page 172) is the case of Delano vs. Morgan, where the committee say:

But in proving the frauds, the parties have proved the number of votes and for whom they were cast. * * * The committee have accepted the corrected tally.

Now, if you take these returns as corrected by the testimony of these democratic commissioners of election who were called by the democratic counsel to impeach the correctness of the returns, and what do we find as the result?

Spencer enters the contested territory with a majority of	1,396
From this deduct Morey's majority in poll 5, Concordia Parish	404
It leaves Spencer's majority when he enters Carroll Parish	992
Corrected returns of Carroll Parish, as sworn to by the democratic commissioners, give Morey a majority at poll 1 of	536
And at poll 3 of	503
And at poll 4 of	93
Morey's majority at poll 2, as corrected by the evidence of W. W. Benham, Dickey, and Lanier, is	611
Total	1,743
From this deduct Spencer's majority at poll 5 of	12
Leaves Morey's majority in the parish of Carroll	1,731
From this deduct Spencer's majority when he entered Carroll Parish	992
Leaves Morey a majority in the district of	739

Now, if we should reject the total vote of poll No. 1, in which Morey's majority was 536, and which is the only poll seriously attacked by contestant for irregularity and fraud, and it leaves Morey a majority of 203 votes in the district. There is no attempt to establish fraud at the other polls in the parish. Now, in the face of all this testimony of the result, as well as of the testimony of various witnesses, it is seriously claimed that the vote of this parish should be rejected because I failed, in addition to the testimony I took, to take the testimony of about 2,000 voters as to whom they voted for for Congress.

Admit that the consolidated returns were forgeries, that the ballots are not to be found, what then does that destroy; the election, or only some of the evidences of it? It is in evidence that the election was held, votes counted, and returns thereof made out. It is in evidence that diligent search has been made and the returns and ballots cannot be found. Is not the next best evidence the evidence of those who made those returns? Certainly it is; but my colleague says this is not testimony aliunde. He is mistaken on that point. The fact that these parties made the returns does not prevent them from establishing their contents. On the contrary, their evidence is the next best to the returns themselves. If the House thinks the evidence is not sufficient to clearly establish the vote, and the evidence having disclosed the fact that the voters were not called, it may remand the case for the evidence of the voters themselves; but there is no precedent for the rejection of this vote and the disfranchisement of a whole parish of 2,300 voters in the absence of any proof of fraud. In view of the testimony in this record such a proceeding would be totally unjustifiable.

Before taking up each poll in detail, I wish to say that the whole current of testimony is that Morey was voted for by both factions in Carroll Parish. This is the evidence of the witnesses called by both parties. For instance, J. E. Barton, (page 31, record,) witness for Spencer, says:

Cross-examined by contestee:

Question. Please state whether or not there were two factions of the republican party in Carroll Parish.

Answer. There were.

Q. Did or did not both factions generally support and vote for the constitutional amendments, for Dubuchet for treasurer, and for Frank Morey for Congress, from this district?

(Objected to by contestant.)

A. They did.

Q. Were you well acquainted with the sentiment politically of the republicans throughout the parish, and were you or not one of the leaders of one wing of the republican party in this parish?

A. I was well acquainted and was one of the leaders, as stated.

Q. Did you, either before or since the election, hear or know of any republicans who supported or voted for William B. Spencer for member of Congress at the election in November last?

(Objected to by contestant.)

A. I know of but two; have heard of no others.

Q. Was not the suit of Burton et al. vs. Charles Hicks et al. a suit between republicans growing out of a split in the party in Carroll Parish?

(Objected to by contestant.)

A. According to my belief there were democrats on both sides of this suit; but the majority of the litigants were republicans. All the parties to the suit were nominees of one or the other wing of the republican party; but both of these wings supported Morey.

Judge C. E. Moss, (page 35 of record,) witness for Morey, says:

Question. Can you tell about how many votes had been cast at poll No. 1 for Morey and Spencer, candidates for Congress, up to the time when you left?

(Contestant objects, on same grounds as last above stated, to this question.)

Answer. Nearly all the votes were for Morey. Mr. Morey was supported by both factions of the republican party at that box, and there were but four democrats in that part of the parish and voting at that box. I did not know of or hear of any republicans voting for Spencer or against Morey at that box. Morey's name was on tickets of both wings of the republican party.

F. R. Barthelemy, (page 36, record,) witness for contestee, says as to the vote at poll 1:

I was sworn in by the commissioners as clerk, and I assisted them in tallying the votes cast at said poll.

Question. Did you keep any memoranda of the votes cast at said poll for member of Congress and other officers? And, if so, state what it was.

(Objected to by contestant on grounds as heretofore stated.)

Answer. I did. Mr. Spencer received 33 votes; Mr. Morey, 569. I made this memoranda from the result of the tally-sheets, and it corresponded with that made by the commissioners of election.

Q. Did you see the commissioners sign the returns of said election at that poll?

A. I did. They were signed by E. W. Spann, T. B. Rhodes, David Jackson, who were the commissioners of election, E. M. Spann being the democratic commissioner. They were also signed by Emanuel Moyer, who claimed to be deputy United States supervisor.

Nicholas Burton, (page 56, record,) witness for contestant, Spencer, says on cross-examination:

Question. Whose name for member of Congress was on the regular tickets of both wings of the republican party at that poll?

Answer. The name of Frank Morey was printed on the regular ticket of both wings; but on a good many of these tickets William B. Spencer's name in print on a slip was pasted over the name of Frank Morey.

Q. Do you know, of your own knowledge, that any of these tickets with Spencer's name pasted on them were voted at poll No. 1? And, if so, state how many and by whom they were cast.

(Question objected to by contestant.)

A. I know that some of them were voted; I do not know the number, but can state some of the names who voted them, to wit: J. G. Lynch, who says he was never a democrat, but was an old-line whig before the war, and who now calls himself a conservative; three of the Bernds, who are conservative; the two Meyers, Jacob Stein, all of whom are classed as conservative. These were all I can name, but I know of some others whose names I do not recollect. The conservatives voted the "pasted ticket."

Colonel P. Jones Yorke, (page 48, record,) witness for contestant, says of poll 3:

Question. State what you know of the manner in which the election at said poll was held and conducted.

Answer. Was at said poll nearly all day. The election was quiet and orderly, and the people voted promptly. It was as quiet and as fair an election as I ever saw. It was generally conceded that the election was free and fair by members of both parties. I remained all night and till the counting of the votes was finished next day, and until the tallies were made up and the ballot-box sealed.

Q. Do you recollect what vote was cast at that box for the candidates for Congress? If so, state what it was.

(Contestant objects to this question, as heretofore.)

A. I do not recollect the exact number, but there was between five and six hundred cast at that poll. They were nearly all cast for Morey, both factions of the republican party voting for Morey. Spencer received only the votes of a part of the democrats who voted at that box.

Now in that election there were several constitutional amendments voted for or against by the voters. Their adoption was made a part of the republican platform, (they were "limiting the debt of the State" and "limiting the rate of taxation.") The democratic platform declared against these amendments, and outside of the city of New Orleans the republicans generally voted for and the democrats against these amendments. Now in Carroll Parish the vote on these several amendments was 2,228 for and 194 against them. The registration of Carroll Parish shows that there are 2,086 colored and 444 white voters. The vote for State treasurer shows that the republican candidate received 1,955 votes and the democratic candidate 248. By the returns as corrected by the evidence, as well as by the affidavits of the democratic commissioners before the returning board, Morey received 1,942 and Spencer 261 votes. In 1872, two years previous, the vote was in the same proportion. This is all in the record, and it is also in the record that "Morey received about the same vote as Dubuclet, (republican candidate for State treasurer,) and that Spencer received about the same vote as Moncure, (democratic candidate for State treasurer.) These facts raise a very strong presumption in favor of my claim that I received the very large majority of the votes cast in Carroll Parish.

We will now pass on to the positive testimony as to the election at the three principal polls in this parish.

POLL NO. 1.

The irregularity that maintained at poll No. 1 consisted in allowing some of the voters to vote on sticks, and the fact that the box was in a window 5 feet 10 inches high, not 7 or 8 as my colleague [Mr. ELLIS] says, without any warrant for the assertion in the record, and which is clearly explained in the minority report, and which only constitute violations of directory provisions of the law.

We give the testimony of T. B. Rhodes, one of the commissioners so far as it relates to these points, which is corroborated by the other two commissioners of election at that poll:

Question. Were you a commissioner of election at poll No. 1, Carroll Parish, at the election 2d November, 1874?

Answer. I was.

Q. Were you present at said poll during the entire day of the election?

A. I was.

Q. Did you see any fraud or ill-practices at the election held at that poll?

A. I did not.

Q. Did you hear of any at the time?

A. I did not.

* * * * * * *

Q. Was any one compelled at that poll to pass his ballot up to the commissioner on a stick?

A. No one was.

Q. Could not every elector have voted with his hand from the ground?

A. All could have done so.

* * * * * * *

Q. Was there any democrat present during the election at that poll?

A. There was; Mr. Spann, a commissioner, was present.

Q. Did he take exception to anything that was done in the conduct of the election?

A. He did not.

Q. Please state how the ballot-box at that poll happened to be placed at a window.

A. We commenced voting at the door of the building in the morning, and nailed strips across the door to keep the crowd out. The crowd became so noisy and so eager to vote that in pressing against the strips they broke them off. Some one then proposed that the box be removed to the window. It was then placed on a table by the window, so that the top of the box was above the window-sill.

Q. Was there any objection on the part of the democratic commissioner or any party present to placing the box at the window?

A. There was no objection, but it was suggested by some one that each voter had a right to place his ballot in the box with his own hand. So we caused it to be proclaimed that any one who wished to place his ballot in the ballot-box himself could come in the room and do so; and accordingly many did do so.

Q. Could the ballot-box at the window be seen by the voters outside?

A. It could be seen by the voters all the time from the outside.

Q. How high was the window from the ground?

A. I measured it, and my recollection is that it was between 5 feet 8 inches and 5 feet 10 inches from the ground.

As to the result, he swears:

Q. Do you remember how many votes were cast at that poll for W. B. Spencer for Congress and how many for Frank Morey? If so, state the number.

(Contestant objects to this question.)

A. Thirty-three votes for Spencer and 569 for Morey.

Q. The document produced by R. K. Anderson, and purporting to be one of the original returns from poll No. 1, is here produced. Is your signature to this document genuine?

A. It is. I made out the returns and signed them in the presence of the other commissioners, and they signed it in my presence, and the statement of the votes therein given is a correct statement of the cast at that poll.

Dr. D. S. Vinson, witness for the contestant, testifies:

Question. Did you vote on that occasion, and why not?

Answer. I did not vote, though I could have done so; there was nothing preventing me, except I did not want to wait. There was no trouble that I saw about the poll. Everything was peaceable and quiet.

* * * * * * *

Q. How long were you present at the poll?

A. Between half an hour and one hour.

Cross-examined by contestee:

Q. How do you rank yourself politically?

A. I am a democrat, dyed in the wool.

Q. How long have you resided in this parish?

A. Twenty-five years.

Q. Are you not generally recognized in the community as a good, substantial citizen?

A. So far as I know. I have heard nothing to the contrary.

Q. How many voters did you see voting on sticks?

A. While I was there I did not see more than two or three. If I had been going to vote, I think I would have voted that way myself, as I could have done so more quickly than to have waited to have got closer to the window.

* * * * * * *

Q. Are you acquainted with E. M. Spann and T. B. Rhodes, who were commissioners of election on that day? And, if so, state what their standing is in the community.

A. They are looked upon as good citizens.

Q. Are they or not men who would be believed to be truthful in making any statement which they might make under oath?

A. I should think they were. They are very correct men. I have never heard anything to the contrary.

Now, besides these mere irregularities which do not vitiate the election, the evidence of Nicholas Burton is introduced to show that one of the commissioners changed the ballot of a voter and put in a different one. How and when does that testimony get into the record?

Right here I wish to call the attention of this House to the manner of procedure of contestant in taking his testimony.

It will be recollected that contestant charged in reference to poll No. 1 that "many of the ballots so handed up were torn up or defaced or not deposited in the ballot-box."

Now, in his evidence-in-chief he made no attempt to prove this, and he examined but three witnesses. And who were they?

First. F. J. Galbraith the deputy clerk, who swore that there were no returns, ballots, or ballot-boxes, &c., in his office.

Second. J. Ed. Burton, who swore that he had asked for the removal of R. M. Lackey "because he (Lackey) was controlled by George C. Benham." The contestant in his notice charged that "Lackey was the mere tool of George C. Benham."

Third. Now who do you suppose? This very man R. M. Lackey himself!

Now, while Galbraith swears that no returns have been on file in his office, Lackey swears that he made a consolidated return of the votes cast; and by law this has to be certified to by the clerk as being correct, and this duty would have to be performed by Galbraith, "who was in entire control of the office," as he swears, and who must have verified the consolidated return by the returns on file in his office.

Now, not an iota of evidence-in-chief was produced showing any irregularity at poll No. 1; but when I had called twenty witnesses, including the commissioners of election and others of both parties and exhausted my right to examine further, then, under cover of rebuttal, the contestant introduced this defeated and sore candidate, Nicholas Burton, to tell about this change of a ballot. I objected to his testimony on the ground that it was not rebuttal evidence; and not content to overrule my objection, for which action there is not a precedent under similar circumstances in the history of contested-election cases in Congress, this majority report says:

Jackson is not recalled, nor did contestee offer to recall him to deny this statement.

That is to say, I did not attempt to violate the statutes. How under the law could I take a word of testimony after the contestant had taken his testimony in rebuttal? And yet the majority report leaves the impression that I had the power to do this and failed to exercise it. There is fairness for you!

Mr. Speaker, in allowing the evidence of contestant taken in this way to come into the record at all, this committee have attempted to overturn the well-settled theory of the law as well as the practice thereunder. The statute gives the contestant forty days to take testimony to sustain his charges. It gives me forty to establish my denial and prove any counter-charges. Contestant then has ten days to rebut my testimony. Now, do you mean to tell me that the contestant can decline to examine all witnesses on the subject of the charges that he has made till I have examined all my witnesses and exhausted my right of examination, and then under the color of rebuttal introduce what was really his evidence-in-chief? And this is the way this testimony of the contestant gets into this record. Does this House propose to indorse such an outrage as that?

Now, passing from that to consider the testimony itself, what do we find? In the language of the minority report:

Contestee had no opportunity to disprove the statements Burton makes. He (Burton) was the candidate for sheriff, and was defeated; and he had contested this same election and had been defeated after the same had been carried to the supreme court of the State. His evidence shows him to be a strong partisan. Taylor, in his excellent work on evidence, in regard to partisan witnesses, says: "They being zealous partisans, their belief becomes synonymous with faith as defined by the apostle, and it too often is but the substance of things hoped for, the evidence of things not seen;" and, to adopt the language of Lord Campbell, "partisan witnesses come with such bias in their minds to support the cause in which they are embarked, that hardly any weight should be given to their evidence."

Now I propose to state frankly to the House the course that I pursued when I found that contestant did not intend to introduce his testimony till my time was exhausted, and then bring it in under the color of rebuttal. I knew that my contestant sat in this investigation with a spurious certificate of election in his pocket on which he confidently expected to be seated by this House in December last. I was aware of the fact that this House was democratic with a large majority of new members, many of whom no doubt would be put on the Committee of Elections, with the practice and precedents of which they would be unfamiliar. I felt that it behooved me not to stand on technicalities and not attempt to show merely that the votes cast and counted proved my election, but to also prove affirmatively that the election was fair and that any irregularities that occurred were not vital.

The constitution of this Committee of Elections, which has not on it a single member that has seen previous service thereon, as well as this extraordinary report, show that I was not too cautious in my methods. I felt that I had nothing to fear from the facts, and I therefore took full testimony as to the manner of holding the election, and fortunately for me the evidence of Burton is shown to be false as clearly as it was possible to show it under the novel circumstance of being compelled to anticipate his evidence. The report of the committee would carry the impression that the evidence of Burton is uncontradicted. On the contrary, it is most positively disproved. Now, here is the testimony of this witness Burton:

Question. Did you see any one of the commissioners change ballots handed to him to be put in the box and put in a different ticket, and who was that commissioner?

(Objected to by contestee on the ground, first, that contestant made no attempt or failed to produce any evidence-in-chief on this point; and, second, that this question or the answer thereto is not and cannot be in rebuttal of any evidence produced for contestee.)

Answer. I did see a commissioner at said poll do so, and that commissioner was David Jackson.

On the cross-examination, reserving all of my objections, I asked him:

Q. Were you not inside of the room a greater part of the day?

A. I was.

Q. How many ballots do you know were exchanged by David Jackson for others?

A. I could swear to only one which I saw him change, but there was another lying on the floor in the same position, but I do not know that this one was changed.

There is all the evidence in this record touching the change of ballots. Now, what do the majority in their report say of this evidence?

Burton, the ex-sheriff of Carroll Parish, swears that he detected David Jackson, the commissioner who received the ballots from the voters on the day of election, changing the votes handed him by the electors for others which he put into the box instead of the ballots of the voters. He says he charged him with it and complained to him of its unfairness. * * * On cross-examination, Burton says he could not swear to more than one ticket which he saw Jackson change, but there was another on the floor in the same position, but he does not know that this one was changed. Jackson is not recalled, nor did contestee offer to recall him to deny this statement.

The report of the committee carries the impression that the evidence of Burton is uncontradicted, while the fact is that it is most positively contradicted.

Galbraith, the contestant's witness, swears, when cross-examined by me:

Question. Were you present during the entire day at the election held at ward No 1, held on 2d November?

Answer. I was.

Q. Did you pay strict attention to the manner in which the election was conducted as to its fairness or unfairness?

A. I did, and thought it a fair election.

Q. Did you hear any charges of unfairness made by either party during the day?

A. I did not.

Re-examined by contestant:

Q. Were you or were you not inside of the room most of the day where the commissioners were, and therefore not in a position to know what was going on outside?

A. I think I was in and out of the room about equally during the day.

E. M. Spann, the democratic commissioner at this poll, swears:

Question. Do you know Nicholas Burton?

Answer. I do.

Q. State whether or not he was present in the room with the commissioners frequently during the day of election, watching how it was conducted, and whether or not he made any complaint of unfairness to the commissioners or other persons, so far as you know or heard.

A. He was present the greater part of the day in the commissioners' room, and seemed to be watching the voting very closely. I do not recollect of hearing him make any complaints while the voting was going on. He complained of being defrauded of a few votes between the first and second counts.

E. Meyer was the United States supervisor for that poll under the congressional election law, appointed on the part of the democrats. He swears:

I assisted in making out a list of the votes cast. The tally-list was closed and signed about seven o'clock Tuesday evening. * * * I left two of the tally-sheets with the commissoners, and I kept one. * * * I was present from the time of my arrival until closing of the polls; was at the box all the time, except about half an hour at two different times. I watched the progress of the election closely.

Had there been any fraud or malpractice in depositing the ballots in the box, I would have seen it. There was no fraud nor malpractice in the voting, so far as I know of. I did not see Mr. Jackson put in any wrong ballot, except that one voter handed up on a stick two tickets with his registration paper, which dropped on the floor, and Jackson put in only one of the two; one of the tickets was a red and one was a white one; and he put in the red ticket.

There is where the ticket came from that Burton saw on the floor, no doubt. Under our law the commissioners are to be selected from the different political parties, and they are to be of good standing in their respective parties. At this poll one was a republican, one a democrat, and one a liberal. Rhodes, the liberal, testifies:

Question. Have you had any conversation since the election of 2d November, 1874, with Nicholas Burton, regarding the fairness of the election held on that day at poll No. 1? If so, please state it.

Answer. The first conversation I had with him was the day after the election—the day we signed the returns. Burton was claiming to be United States commissioner at the poll. He said he thought we, the commissioners, acted fair in the matter. I wrote or dictated a certificate on the tally-roll that Mr. Meyer, the other United States commissioner, kept. The certificate stated, in substance, that the election was perfectly fair, and that the tally-sheet exhibited the true result of the election at that poll. Mr. Meyer and Mr. Burton both signed the certificate. I had a conversation with Nicholas Burton again about a week after the election. He had just received the news of the election of Gla as State senator. Gla was a candidate on the same ticket as Burton. They were both colored men and nominees of the same wing of the republican party. He said that he was satisfied that his wing of the party was overwhelmingly defeated in the parish, but was satisfied, as Gla was elected senator from this district. He further said that the commissioners at poll No. 1 should have given him thirteen more ballots than they did, for the last count gave him that many less than the first count did. He expressed his dissatisfaction in no other respect.

While David Jackson, the republican commissioner of election at that poll, who is sought to be impeached by Burton, swears:

Question. Did you have a good opportunity to see and to know how the election was conducted at that poll? And if so, state what you know of it.

Answer. I had a good opportunity. The election was conducted peaceably and as fairly as an election could be; I heard no charges of unfairness made by anybody; every voter had a chance to vote as he saw fit. Mr. Spann, the democratic commissioner, kept the list of votes; Mr. Rhodes, the republican commissioner, kept the tally-list; and I took the votes as they were handed in by the voters and put them in the ballot-box. The various candidates and others had access to our room in which we received the votes, so that they could see that the election was conducted fairly. There was no dissatisfaction expressed by any one as to the manner in which the election was conducted.

Q. Did the voters generally hand you their ballots?

A. They did

Q. Was or not there a large crowd about the voting-place at certain portions of the day, who were anxious to vote without much delay?

A. There was.

Q. Did or not a portion of this crowd try to vote ahead of others, out of their "turn," as it was called? And, if so, state how it was done.

A. A good many would crowd up to the window where the box was, and try to vote one before the other. Some of them had short sticks with the ends split, to which they stuck their ballots and handed them up to the commissioner ahead of others who were nearer the ballot-box.

Q. Did not you take all the votes that were so handed by the voters and put them in the ballot-box?

A. The voters handed up the registration papers with their votes. I handed the registration paper to Mr. Rhodes, the other commissioner, who indorsed it. I then put the ballot in the box.

And again:

The election was carried on fairer than I ever saw it before. Mr. Burton, the candidate for sheriff, was present during the entire day; he was in the room all the time. I heard no complaint made by him whatever. He was there when we commenced counting the votes until we closed, and signed one of the tally-lists and afterward erased his name.

Now, what becomes of the majority report on that subject? The minority report, referring to this testimony, very properly says:

Is it not strange that, with a democratic supervisor in the room, observing all that was done at that poll, and with a democratic commissioner, Mr. Spann, assisting in receiving the votes, with candidates on different political tickets in the room, this man Burton is the only person in that room who observed any misconduct on the part of Jackson, and that no one but Burton should have known of or heard the altercation which Burton says took place between him and Commissioner Jackson? If this evidence were true, certainly such a conversation as Burton speaks of could not have taken place without having been overheard by the other commissioners or by some one who was in the room. Very little weight will be given to the evidence of Burton when it is understood that the evidence of Rhodes and Spann shows that the charges made by Burton were an afterthought, not occurring to him until some days after the election had been holden.

The majority report further on says:

It is true the other two commissioners and some of the by-standers swear that the election was fair and free from fraud; but none of them are asked and none of them speak of or deny the specific facts testified to by * * * Burton, except Spann says he does not recollect hearing Burton make any charge of unfairness while the voting was in progress, but that Burton complained of being defrauded of a few votes while the counting was going on.

Now, in view of the evidence I have read, does it now show gross carelessness in the investigation of this case by the committee?

Now I will take up another portion of this very interesting report. The majority say:

Furthermore, in reference to this man Jackson, it is incredible that all the returns and ballot-boxes from the entire parish of Carroll could have disappeared without his knowledge or connivance. We cannot suppose that all the commissioners in the entire parish failed, in total disregard of the law, to carry the twenty-five ballot-boxes and returns to the office of the clerk. He was the clerk. He fails to state in his testimony anything whatever about the ballot-boxes or returns from the different wards which the law required to be deposited in his office.

Now, if the writer of that report were the attorney of Spencer instead of a judge, he could not have made a more ingenious argument in behalf of his client. Where he says twenty-five ballot-boxes, I presume he meant to say five, for there were but five, one for each poll.

Mr. HOUSE. That mistake occurred in this way, and I have corrected it in the proof. It was page 25 of the report. The paging was close to the writing.

Mr. MOREY. That is what I supposed, and for that reason I have called attention to it. There were only five ballot-boxes there.

The report says:

He was the clerk. He fails to state in his testimony anything whatever about the ballot-boxes or returns from the different wards, which the law required to be deposited in his office.

If the majority knew what was in the record, I venture to say they never would have written that report. Why did not the contestant ask Jackson something about these boxes? If you will turn to the testimony of Galbraith, the first witness called by the contestant, you will find an answer to that question:

T. J. GALBRAITH, sworn on behalf of the contestant, William B. Spencer, testified as follows:

Question. Where do you reside; what is your occupation; and how long have you been so occupied?

Answer. I reside in Lake Providence, Carroll Parish, Louisiana. I am deputy clerk of the district court, and have been since May, 1873.

Q. Have you not been the principal deputy, and as such had entire control of the office during your said occupancy?

A. I have, since the 26th day of July, 1873.

This election, bear in mind, took place in November, 1874, and this testimony was given in April, 1875. Jackson, the clerk, had but little more to do with his office than I had, except to divide the fees of his office with his deputy at the end of every month. Galbraith, as he states, "had entire control of the office."

GREENBACKS.

Two ignorant colored men are brought in to testify in the same way that Nicholas Burton was produced, not to prove the charges of the contestant, giving me the opportunity that the law intends that I should have had to rebut the charge, but they are brought in as witnesses in rebuttal—of what, I pray you? They tell a story about seeing David Jackson passing greenbacks out of the window; they did not get any; they do not know a man who did. One of these intelligent specimens says:

The bills I saw were large enough to be one-dollar bills, or five-dollar bills.

Not large enough to be a ten-dollar bill, I suppose? Is it not a little singular that nobody could be found that received any of this money? That out of the five hundred and sixty-nine voters at that poll nobody else could be found that saw or even heard of this thing? Where was Nicholas Burton, the defeated candidate, who was watching Jackson so closely, as he testifies? He saw no greenbacks. I will adopt the charitable supposition that these men mistook the tickets of one of the factions, which, it is in testimony, was "a kind of a curtain-colored ticket," for greenbacks.

The majority report is again in error in stating that this evidence is not contradicted except by David Jackson himself. I will again refresh their memories. T. B. Rhodes, one of the commissioners at this poll, testifies as follows, (page 46, record:)

Question. Do you know a colored voter named Cæsar Johnson, and did you hear that he reported that greenbacks were handed out at the window at poll No. 1? And if so, state what you know of him and of the story, and of the facts in the case.

Answer. I know him and heard him give his evidence to the effect stated before the district court. I know nothing of him personally, but I do know that his statement that David Jackson, one of the commissioners, rolled up greenbacks in the registration papers and handed them back to the voters is untrue; because the tickets or ballots, together with the registration papers, were handed up to David Jackson, who took the ballot and handed the registration papers to me, which I indorsed "voted." Jackson then put the ballot in the box and I handed the registration paper to Mr. Mayer, who was acting as democratic United States supervisor, and who handed it out to the voter. I never heard this report from any other source, and I don't believe it was possible to be true without my having some knowledge of it—while David Jackson (page 39) denies emphatically the statement of Johnson and Lane. His evidence upon the subject is as follows:

Question. Was there or not any money handed back by yourself or any other person with the registration papers?

Answer. There was not.

Q. Did or not you hear of any such report or charge being made during the day of election by any member of either political party?

A. I did not. I would most likely have heard any such report had it been made.

The minority report very properly says:

We cannot believe that this evidence needs any serious consideration, as it will be regarded as not only extraordinary, but remarkable, that, at a public election, with crowds surrounding the place, and in full view of the voters, greenbacks should be handed out by the commissioner with the registration papers, after the voters had deposited their ballots, and that no person at that election should have been able to have detected the fact or observed this conduct except these two colored witnesses. To our mind it is extraordinary that, out of all that crowd of five hundred odd persons, with the candidates at the polls, watching the commissioners, not a single person other than Cæsar Johnson and Noah Lane could be found to testify to such misconduct. The evidence of Johnson and Lane is of such a character, taken as a whole, that, in our opinion, it would be discredited in any court of justice; and, taken in connection with the circumstances surrounding the case, I cannot believe this committee is willing to say that it is worthy of serious consideration. It will be observed these men do not testify that they received any greenbacks themselves, but that they saw them given to others; but what is most remarkable, they cannot designate any person who received them, and no person is produced who did receive any greenbacks.

Is it not remarkable that, out of eleven witnesses called in reference to this poll, comprising the United States supervisor of election, the commissioners of the polls, and candidates upon the opposition ticket, only two witnesses could be found who knew anything in regard to this extraordinary conduct of Jackson? We dismiss this subject from further discussion, believing it too preposterous for further comment.

In regard to the position of the box and the voting on sticks, I will merely quote the decision of the supreme court of our State on that subject, in which they refer to former opinions, which theirs is merely confirmatory of, and pass on, incorporating, however, into my remarks the testimony on this subject, which is conclusive of the position that I take, that contestant lost nothing by these irregularities. The supreme court said:

The voting on sticks, and at a high window where the voter had to reach up to hand his ballot to the commissioner, was certainly novel; but the excuse for this is given in the evidence cited, and the evidence leaves no doubt that the ballots were fairly deposited in the ballot-box; that no fraud was perpetrated at the election. The fact that the ballot-box could not be seen by those voters who stood near the window cannot be a cause to annul the election. In the case of Augustin vs. Eggleston, 12 Annual, 356, the court held that "the mere position of the ballot-box, without any resultant injury, does not void an election, and, as it has been often decided in this State, that the failure to comply with the directory clauses of the election law will not annul the election. The courts cannot affix to the omission a consequence which the Legislature has not affixed." (9 Annual, page 537; 10 Annual, page 732; Act of 1873, page 18.)

I think it is clear that this poll must be counted. The vote was, for Morey 569, Spencer 33; Morey's majority 536; which, taken from Spencer's majority of 992, would leave Spencer a majority of 456.

POSITION OF THE BALLOT-BOX.

All the evidence regarding the removal of the box from the door to the window is given by T. B. Rhodes, and is as follows:

Question. Please state how the ballot-box at that poll happened to be placed at a window.

Answer. We commenced voting at the door of the building in the morning, and nailed strips across the door to keep the crowd out. The crowd became so noisy and so eager to vote that in pressing against the strips they broke them off. Some one then proposed that the box be removed to the window. It was then placed on a table by the window, so that the top of the box was above the window-sill.

Q. Was there any objection on the part of the democratic commissioner or any party present to placing the box at the window?

A. There was no objection, but it was suggested by some one that each voter had a right to place his ballot in the box with his own hand. So we caused it to be proclaimed that any one who wished to place his ballot in the ballot-box himself could come in the room and do so; and accordingly many did do so.

Q. Could the ballot-box at the window be seen by the voters outside?

A. It could be seen by the voters all the time from the outside.

The height of this window from the ground, as testified to by various witnesses, is as follows:

Nicholas Burton, contestant's witness, page 57 of record, swears:

Question. You said the window was about six feet from the ground. Are you positive that it was more than five feet ten inches?

Answer. I measured it, and made it a little over six feet; about one inch and a half over it.

D. S. Vinson, contestant's witness, page 65:

The voting while I was at the poll was done by handing the tickets or the ballots through the window. From my observation, without having measured it, the window was between six and seven feet from the ground where the voters stood. The window had slats across it, up and down, about three inches apart.

A. Cunningham, contestant's witness, page 63:

The votes were received by the commissioners at a window about six or seven feet from the ground.

Noah Lane, contestant's witness, page 65:

Question. Did you vote and see others at said poll; and, if so, where and how did they vote?

Answer. I voted there and saw others vote. The door of the house was closed against us, and we voted at a window which was so high that I had to lift another man up to vote.

Cæsar Johnson, contestant's witness, page 67:

Q. State where and how the voters voted at said poll while you were there, and how it was managed.

A. I voted at the window, and all others who voted with me at the same time did the same. I voted by the assistance of Noah Lane, who caught me under my arm, and assisted me up so I could reach the window.

This same witness, on cross-examination, testifies:

Q. Are you a short man?

A. I am about 5 feet 2½ inches.

Q. When Lane helped you to put up your ballot, did he lift you off the ground, or did he stretch you up by assisting you by one arm?

A. He assisted me by lifting one arm, I at the same time helping myself up against the side of the House.

While T. B. Rhodes, witness of contestee, page 43, testifies:

Q. How high was the window from the ground?
A. I measured it, and my recollection is that it was between 5 feet 8 inches and 5 feet 10 inches from the ground.

The minority report very correctly states:

This is all the evidence adduced in regard to height of the window. It was urged by contestant in his argument and brief that this window was so high that it was impossible for the voters to hand in their votes. Taking the evidence altogether, it shows that the window was not so high but that all persons desirous of handing in their votes could have done so, and did so hand them in. Certainly the fact of the ballot-box being placed at the window rather than at the door, after the guards had been broken down, goes to show that it was placed there in the interest of fairness and good order, and in order that the commissioners would not be interrupted while the voting was going on. This evidence does not tend to prove that any voter was deprived of his right to vote by the box being taken from the door and placed at the window, or that the actual result of the election at this poll was affected by such change. The evidence both of contestant and contestee establishes the fact beyond contradiction that during the whole election the candidates upon the different political tickets, as well as the sworn United States supervisors of both political parties, were admitted to the room where the ballot-boxes were kept, and were where they could observe and scrutinize the acts of the commissioners. T. B. Rhodes, one of the commissioners at the said poll, testifies that no objection was made by the democratic commissioner or any party present to the placing of the box at the window. If the facts were such as to have caused any suspicion that the moving of the box from the door to the window would have worked injustice, the democratic commissioner or some of the candidates would have objected. We are satisfied that the objection made against the box for this reason is an afterthought of a defeated candidate, and is technical. Some one suggested that each voter had a right to place his ballot in the box with his own hand, and thereupon the commissioners caused it to be proclaimed that any one who wished to place his ballot in the ballot-box himself could come into the room and do so, and accordingly many did so. This witness also says that the ballot-box at the window could be seen by voters outside all the time the voting was going on. There is no contradiction of Rhodes in the particular that this proclamation was made except by Burton, who says many did come into the room and vote, thereby confirming Rhodes's testimony that this announcement was made; but one party came in to vote, and it was objected to, but they allowed him to vote. He does not swear that any other person attempted or requested to enter the room to deposit his own vote, nor is there any testimony to prove this fact. Burton says, however, that he did not hear any such proclamation. Certainly this is no evidence to contradict the positive statement of Rhodes that said proclamation was made. It is merely negative evidence.

TESTIMONY RELATING TO VOTING ON STICKS.

The evidence produced by contestant on this subject in regard to this method of voting is as follows:

Nicholas Burton, page 56 of record, testifies:

Question. State what you know as to the manner in which said election was held at that poll; how the voting was done, and where.

Answer. In the morning of the election day the ballot-box was at the door of the house. It was kept there about two or three hours; then they took it and carried it to a window about six feet above the ground, and closed the door of the house. The window had wooden bars across it up and down. After the box was moved to the window, about three-fourths of the votes polled were handed up on sticks from the ground. The others voted by reaching up with their hands. Those voting at the window could not, a man of them, see what was done with their tickets. At first the box was placed about two feet from the window-sill on a table, but the voters on the outside ran their sticks so far as to annoy the commissioners, and they then moved the box about four feet from the window. This moving of the box back rendered it still more difficult for the voter to see what became of the ballot.

Upon cross-examination, page 57, he testifies:

Cross-examined by contestee:

Q. You stated that those who did not vote on sticks reached up their own ballots. Could not all of the voters have done the same had they chosen to do so, and waited for their opportunity?
A. I think they could if they had waited and taken their turn, provided they were men of ordinary height.

D. S. Vinson, contestant's witness, testifies, page 63:

Question. Did you vote on that occasion, and why not?
Answer. I did not vote, though I could have done so; there was nothing preventing me, except I did not want to wait. There was no trouble that I saw about the poll; everything was peaceable and quiet.
Q. How long were you present at the poll?
A. Between half an hour and one hour.

Upon cross-examination, page 63, he says:

Question. How many voters did you see voting on sticks?
Answer. While I was there I did not see more than two or three. If I had been going to vote, I think I would have voted that way myself, as I could have done so more quickly than to have waited to have got closer to the window.

Noah Lane, another of contestant's witnesses, page 65, testifies:

Question. What time of day was it when you went to the polls?
Answer. I went to the polls about twelve o'clock and staid until night.
Q. Were you near where the voting was going on while you were there?
A. Yes; I was out in front of the window most of the time.
Q. Did you see any voting on sticks?
A. I did not see or notice any.
Q. How far were you standing from the window?
A. Probably ten or twenty yards, as near as I can come at it.
Q. Then all the voters that you noticed voted with their hands, did they?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. Who took their tickets?
A. David Jackson took their tickets in.
Q. How many people do you think voted while you were there?
A. I can't tell; there were a good many of them; they kept voting until night.

The witnesses called by contestee, in regard to this matter, testify as follows: Charles E. Moss, pages 43–44, record, says:

Judge CHARLES E. MOSS recalled for contestee, Frank Morey:

Question. State what you know of the matter of voting on sticks at poll No. 1.
Answer. This voting was done at a negro cabin. There was a large crowd around the window, and some voters who could not approach the window, in order that they might vote earlier, placed their ballots on sticks and passed them up to the commissioner. There were perhaps 60 or 70 votes cast in this way.

David Jackson, page 39, testifies:

Question. Did the voters generally hand you their ballots?
Answer. They did.
Q. Was or not there a large crowd about the voting-place at certain portions of the day, who were anxious to vote without much delay?
A. There was.
Q. Did or not a portion of this crowd try to vote ahead of others, out of their "turn," as it is called? And, if so, state how it was done.
A. A good many would crowd up to the window, where the box was, and try to vote one before the other. Some of them had short sticks, with the ends split, to which they stuck their ballots and handed up to the commissioners, ahead of others who were nearer to the ballot-box.

T. B. Rhodes, one of the election commissioners, page 43, testifies:

Question. Was any one compelled at that poll to pass his ballot up to the commissioner on a stick?
Answer. No one was.
Q. Could not every elector have voted with his hand from the ground?
A. All could have done so.
Q. Was any one permitted to vote at that poll who did not present the proper registration papers?
A. Not that I know of.
Q. Was there any democrat present during the election at that poll?
A. There was; Mr. Spann, a commissioner, was present.
Q. Did he take exception to anything that was done in the conduct of the election?
A. He did not.

This concludes all the evidence that has been introduced on this subject. This does not establish the fact that any of the mandatory provisions of the law were violated.

The minority report again says:

Taking all the evidence introduced by contestant, and even excluding all the evidence offered by contestee upon this subject, it disproves the assertion made by contestant in his argument, that "only the tall ones, by getting close up, could reach their tickets up into the window;" but establishes the fact, beyond controversy, that all of the electors who desired could, and nearly all did, vote by handing their votes to the commissioners, out of their own hands, and that the voting by placing their votes upon sticks did not arise from any necessity owing to the position of the ballot-box, but because some few voters were unwilling to wait their turn in line. Nor is there any evidence tending to show that the placing the bars upon the window had a tendency in any manner to obstruct the voting, or that the contestant was injured by any of the irregularities, or that any of the irregularities affected the result, or prevented the free and full expression of the electors at this poll; "but, on the contrary, taking all the evidence together, it proves positively and distinctly that not a single voter was prevented from voting. And the voting on sticks certainly, as shown from the evidence, did not tend to render the poll fraudulent or uncertain. In regard to this matter we cannot express ourselves better than by adopting the language of the supreme court of Louisiana in reference to this identical election, as to these identical irregularities at this poll, which is as follows: "That it is evident from the foregoing evidence the irregularities shown did not in any manner affect the result of the election."

We now pass to the consideration of poll No. 2.

At poll 2 contestant made a charge of intimidation of voters, but took no evidence in support of it; the evidence of the commissioners of both parties and five other witnesses was that the election was conducted perfectly fair at this poll. W. W. Benham, who was one of the commissioners, produced the poll-list, which was undisputed and which showed that there were 713 votes cast, of which 49 or 50 were for Spencer, 4 were blank, and the balance (663) were for Morey. Captain Dickey, who kept one of the tally-sheets, swears that Spencer's vote was 49 and Morey's 664 or 665; that he had taken a memorandum of it but had lost it. Lamer, who also kept tally part of the time and who was present at the time the count was completed, swears that according to his best recollection Spencer's vote was 48, 49, or 50, and Morey the balance, and that something over 700 votes were polled. Montgomery, the democratic commissioner, swore that he did not sign the returns but he did sign the poll-list, and that he signed all the papers that he thought the law required him to sign. Benham swears that all three commissioners signed the returns. One or the other was mistaken, but there is no other discrepancy. Montgomery swore that he could not remember the result of the vote as to the Member of Congress. Now, there was not a particle of evidence taken to impeach either of the three witnesses who testified to the vote at this poll, and it must therefore be counted.

The committee's report says that "the evidence shows that the returns from this poll were not signed at all." The evidence shows that all of the commissioners signed the returns; but this is contrad cted, though only so far as one of the commissioners is concerned.

Montgomery, the democratic commissioner, swears:

Question. Did you sign the returns from that poll?
Answer. I signed only the list of names of persons who voted; did not sign the tally-sheets or returns.
Q. Did you sign all the papers that you considered necessary in connection with the election.
A. I did not think at the time it was necessary to sign other papers, and the other commissioners said they thought so too.

I will incorporate the testimony bearing upon the character of the election at this poll and pass on to

POLL NO. 3.

W. W. Benham, sworn for contestee, Frank Morey, testifies as follows:

Question. State your name, residence, and occupation, and where you were on the 2d day of November last, the day of the last election.
Answer. W. W. Benham; Carroll Parish; planter; was at poll No. 2 in said parish on the day of the last election.
Q. Were you one of the commissioners of election at poll No. 2?
A. I was.
Q. Were you present as commissioner of election at said poll all day, and did you assist in tallying the votes cast at that poll, and in making up the returns thereof?
A. I was present during the entire day; never left the poll from morning until night. I assisted in counting the vote by examining and calling off every ticket the ballot-box contained. The ballots, as I called them off, were tallied by several persons under the supervision of the commissioners, who relieved each other from time to time. There were three tally-sheets kept. The returns were made up from the result of the tally-sheets.

Q. During the day of the election what was your own particular duty?

A. My duty was to receive the registration papers from the voters, compare them with the poll-book, and indorse "voted" on the registration papers, and sign my name as commissioner of election to the registration papers.

Q. Do you recollect how many votes were cast at that poll; and have you any memoranda, such as tally-lists, or lists of voters, or anything of that kind pertaining to the election at said poll?

(Contestant objects to this question.)

A. Seven hundred and thirteen, as is shown by the list of votes kept by one of the commissioners of election. I have a list of the names of those who voted at that poll on that day.

Q. By whom was that list kept or made?

(Contestant objects to this question.)

A. Mr. Joseph Leddy kept the list until about three or four o'clock in the afternoon, and was then relieved by Thomas F. Montgomery, the democratic commissioner. When the polls opened in the morning there were but two of the commissioners present. In that case the law made it the duty of the two commissioners to appoint a third, which we did, appointing Mr. Joseph Leddy, at the suggestion of the by-standers, in the place of Mr. Thomas F. Montgomery, who was absent. Mr. Leddy served as commissioner until the arrival of Mr. T. F. Montgomery, in the afternoon, by whom he was relieved.

Q. Will you please produce the list of voters of which you speak?

(Document produced, certified copy of which is marked "Exhibit C," and attached hereto. See appendix, testimony in Carroll.)

(Contestant objects to the introduction of this document in evidence.)

A. This is the document.

Q. Who wrote and who signed the jurat attached to this document?

A. I wrote the jurat myself, following the form prescribed by law. It was signed by myself, T. F. Montgomery, and S. S. Murray, and the oath administered by F. T. Austin, justice of the peace, second ward. It was done at the polls immediately after closing the ballot-box, and before proceeding to count the votes.

Q. Did the number of tickets counted out of the ballot-box at the conclusion of the election correspond with the number of persons voted, as shown by this list?

A. It did, exactly.

Q. Were or not the ballots counted out of the ballot boxes at the polls where they were cast, and the tally-sheets made up therefrom in the presence of such voters as chose to attend, and did not several voters so attend?

A. They were counted at the polls where they were cast without removing the ballot-box. The tally-sheets were made up in the presence of ten or fifteen voters, representing the democratic party and both wings of the republican party. Mr. Blount, the democratic United States supervisor of election, stood over the ballot-box with me, and saw by the tickets as I held them in my hand that they were called just as they were printed or written.

Q. Of the votes cast at poll No. 2, state, if you know, how many were cast for W. B. Spencer and how many for Frank Morey, respectively, for Congress.

(Contestant objects to this question on the grounds heretofore stated.)

A. Upon summing up the tally-sheets on congressional vote, there was found to be 3 or 4 votes less on the congressional vote than the number of votes shown by the list. The vote for Spencer was either 49 or 50, and the balance of the vote, less the 3 or 4 who did not vote for Congress, was the vote received by Frank Morey—661 or 661.

Q. In voting at that election, were or not all the candidates voted for on one ticket or ballot?

A. The names were all on one ticket.

Q. Then when you state that there were three or four less votes for candidates for Congress than for other candidates, do you mean that the names of the candidates for Congress were erased from the three or four tickets?

A. I do.

Q. Was or not the result of the vote given to the United States supervisor, or other person present, or publicly announced, as soon as the result was ascertained?

A. A memorandum of the vote was taken from the tally-sheets by Mr. Lanier and Captain W. B. Dickey. The congressional vote for the entire parish was given by me to Mr. Blount, United States supervisor of election, from the tally-sheets, after they were received from different polls.

Q. Do you mean after they were received by the supervisor of registration of the parish?

A. I do. They were in my possession as clerk of the said supervisor of registration.

Q. Do you recollect the number of votes that were cast in the parish for members of Congress, as shown by the returns from the different polls, as made to the supervisor of registration for the parish, and which were in his possession or in yours as clerk of the supervisor of registration? And, if so, state what the vote was.

(Contestant objects to this question on the ground as heretofore stated.)

A. I have forgotten the exact number of votes cast in the parish as shown by the returns in the possession of the supervisor of registration, but am of the impression that the entire vote was something over two thousand. And of that vote Mr. Spencer received something over two hundred, and Mr. Morey the balance.

Q. Are you not certain that the total vote cast for members of Congress was over two thousand?

(Objected to by contestant.)

A. I know that it was more than two thousand, but cannot recollect the exact figure.

Q. Who was the supervisor of registration for this parish?

A. Robert L. Lackey.

Q. Is or not he rather an illiterate colored man?

A. He is a colored man who reads and writes.

Q. Was the business of his office transacted by himself or his clerks?

A. Mr. Lackey was present to oversee the business of his office, which was done mainly by his clerks.

Q. Was there or not a consolidated return or statement of votes cast in the entire parish made up and signed by the said supervisor?

A. There was a statement made up and signed by him in my presence.

Q. From what data was this statement made up?

A. It was made up from the several reports of commissioners of election at the different polls.

Q. State, if you know, what was done with this consolidated statement.

A. It was delivered to the clerk of the returning board in New Orleans and his receipt taken for the same. This is the receipt.

This is a copy:

NEW ORLEANS, November 17, 1874.

Received of supervisor one package, said to contain tally-sheets, statements, and votes, according to law, for the parish of Carroll.

CHAS. S. ABELL,
Assistant Secretary.

Q. What was the character of the election held at poll No. 2 so far as peace, order, and fairness was concerned?

A. Everything was quiet the entire day. The democratic commissioners expressed themselves as being perfectly satisfied with the fairness of the count and the election generally. Heard no complaints as to the fairness of the election from anybody.

* * * * * * *

Re-examined by contestee:

Q. In stating that the returns from poll No. 2 were signed by the three commissioners, do you or not mean the returns proper or the statement of votes, or the list of voters who voted?

A. I meant the returns. The list of the persons voting would hardly be considered a part of the returns necessary to be put before the returning board.

Q. Was not T. B. Rhodes, who was a commissioner at poll No. 1, considered a democrat?

A. Two years ago he was connected with the democratic party; don't know whether he held out faithful or not; am of the impression that he was more of a democrat than a republican.

Testimony of W. B. Dickey.

W. B. DICKEY, sworn for contestee, Frank Morey, testifies as follows:

Question. State your name, residence, and occupation, and where you were on the day of the election on 2d of November last.

Answer. William B. Dickey, Carroll Parish; my last occupation was deputy collector of United States internal revenue; was at poll No. 2, Carroll Parish, on 2d day of November last, the day of election.

Q. How long were you at that poll on that day and immediately afterward?

A. Was there all day until the poll closed. At the closing of the poll I retired, and returned to the poll between twelve and one o'clock that night, when they were still engaged in counting the votes, where I remained until the counting was completed. When I came in between twelve and one o'clock that night, I took the place of Thomas F. Montgomery, democratic commissioner at that poll, in keeping one of the tally-sheets, and remained until the count was finished.

Q. Was or not the election held at the poll peaceable, quiet, and fair?

A. It was, and was so generally admitted by all parties.

Q. Did you or not learn the result of the vote cast at that poll when the count was completed? And, if so, state what it was, if you recollect.

(Contestant objects to the question.)

A. I think the entire number of votes cast at said poll was 719. The vote for senator was 282 for Gla and 427 for Benham. There were 49 for Spencer for member of Congress and for Morey six hundred and sixty-four or five for Congress. I do not recollect the vote cast for State treasurer, but that Moncure got about the same vote as Spencer did and Dubuclet about the same vote as Morey did.

Cross-examined by contestant:

Q. You state that you were not present during all the time that the votes were being counted and tallied; do you know of your own knowledge the truth of the statement of the votes given by you?

A. I only know that the three tally-sheets kept agreed at the end of the counting. I do not know of my own knowledge that these tally-sheets were correctly kept during the whole time of counting, and I was not present all the while. I know that mine was correctly kept from the time that I commenced keeping it.

Q. Are you positive about the congressional vote, and have you never stated it differently?

A. I am positive about the congressional vote, and do not recollect of ever having stated it differently.

Re-examined by contestee:

Q. Did you take any memoranda of any part of the result of the election at poll No. 2; and if so, does the statement that you have made with regard to the vote for member of Congress agree with the memorandum that you took at the closing of the count?

(This question objected to by contestant.)

A. I did take a memorandum of the votes so far as the candidates for senator, members of Congress, and House of Representatives, and the memoranda so far as Congress is concerned agreed with my testimony on that point. I have lost all my memoranda except that of senator, or misplaced them.

Testimony of M. A. Sweet.

MARION A. SWEET, sworn for contestee, Frank Morey, testifies as follows:

Question. State your name, residence, and occupation, and where you were during the election held in this parish on the 2d of November, 1874.

Answer. My name is Marion A. Sweet; residence at Providence, ward No. 2, Carroll Parish; recorder for said parish; at poll No. 2 the greater portion of the day.

Q. Was the election at said poll fairly conducted?

A. It was.

Q. Did you hear any complaints made by any party on the day of the election at said poll?

A. I did not.

Q. Did general good feeling seem to prevail at the poll?

A. It did; everything seemed to be harmonious.

Q. Were you present at the tallying of the votes at that poll?

A. Only part of the time.

Q. Was the tally fairly kept while you were there?

A. It was.

Q. Did several parties keep tally?

A. They did.

Q. Were these tallies compared?

A. They were while I was tallying.

Q. Are you quite sure that, by means of this comparison, the tallies were correctly kept while you were present?

A. I am.

Testimony of B. H. Lanier.

B. H. LANIER, sworn for contestee, Frank Morey, testifies as follows:

Question. State your name, residence, and occupation, and where you were at the election in Carroll Parish on the 2d of November last.

Answer. Benjamin H. Lanier; residence, Carroll Parish, Louisiana; was until March last editor of the Lake Republican, a newspaper published in Providence, Carroll Parish; am now tax-collector of said parish; was at poll No. 2, Carroll Parish.

Q. State what you know of the character of the election held on that day at that poll.

A. I was at and around the polls the entire day. The election was peaceable, quiet, and generally regarded as very fair. I remained at the polls until after the votes were counted, and assisted in keeping the tally-sheet.

Q. State, if you know, what the total vote was that was cast at that poll, and state the vote that was cast for the candidates for Congress, if you know.

(Contestant objects to this question, as heretofore.)

A. According to the best of my recollection, the entire vote for congressional candidates was something over 700. I think Spencer received 48, 49, or 50 votes, and Morey the balance of the total vote.

Q. Do you recollect whether or not the actual vote for the different candidates for State treasurer, Congress, and State senate was or not published in one of the newspapers published at Providence, or an extra of the same; and, if so, in what paper, and was or not that publication a correct statement of the vote cast at poll No. 2 for the different candidates mentioned therein?

(Contestant objects to this question, as heretofore.)

A. True Republican, newspaper published at Providence, published a statement of the votes cast for the senatorial candidates, which I regarded as correct. This was published in an "extra."

Q. State whether or not this vote so published did not correspond with the vote announced at conclusion of the counting at poll No. 2.

(Contestant objects to this question, as heretofore.)

A. The statement published in the True Republican did correspond with the actual count made by the commissioners at poll No. 2.

Cross-examined:

Q. Did you keep a tally during the whole time and continuously while that vote was being counted?

A. I did not. I think it took about twenty-four hours to count the vote, and it would have been impossible almost for a man to have tallied continuously for that time.

Q. Do you know of your own knowledge what the vote and result at that poll was?

A. In my direct examination I gave the result of that vote to the best of my knowledge and belief.

Re-examined by contestee:

Q. Were or not several tallies kept by different parties present, and, if so, were or not they kept under the direction or supervision of commissioners at that poll?

A. There were three tally-sheets kept under the direct supervision of the commissioners at poll No. 2. One of these tallies I assisted in keeping. Those who kept each tally relieved each other from time to time in the labor.

Testimony of J. E. Leonard.

J. Edwards Leonard, sworn for contestee, Frank Morey, testifies as follows:

Question. What is your name, residence, and occupation, and where were you on the 2d day of November last, the day of the election?

Answer. J. Edwards Leonard; Carroll Parish; lawyer, and district attorney for thirteenth judicial district of Louisiana. I was in Providence, Louisiana, on the day of the election.

* * * * * * *

Q. Did you vote at the election 2d of November last; and, if so, where and about what hour of the day did you vote?

A. I voted at poll No. 2, parish of Carroll, late in the afternoon.

Q. Do you know of or did you hear of any complaints made on that day against the fairness of the election held at that poll?

A. I heard no complaints until a number of days after the election, when Nicholas Burton came to me to bring a suit for him, the record of which was offered by contestant.

At this poll No. 2 Morey received 660 and Spencer 49, making Morey's majority 611.

From this deduct Spencer's majority, with which he left poll 1, of 456, and it gives Morey a majority of 155.

POLL 3.

We have referred to the evidence of Bagley, given in this case, and also to that given by him before the returning board. In addition to that Colonel P. Jones Yorke swears:

Question. State your name, residence, and occupation, and where you were on the 2d of November last at the election.

Answer. P. Jones Yorke; third ward, Carroll Parish; poll No. 3.

Q. State what you know of the manner in which the election at said poll was held and conducted.

A. Was at said poll nearly all day. The election was quiet and orderly, and the people voted promptly. It was as quiet and as fair an election as I ever saw. It was generally conceded that the election was free and fair by members of both parties. I remained all night and till the counting of the votes was finished next day, and until the tallies were made up and the ballot-box sealed.

Q. Do you recollect what vote was cast at that box for the candidates for Congress? If so, state what it was.

(Contestant objects to this question, as heretofore.)

A. I do not recollect the exact number, but there was between five and six hundred cast at that poll. They were nearly all cast for Morey, both factions of the republican party voting for Morey. Spencer received only the votes of a part of the democrats who voted at that box.

R. K. Anderson, one of the commissioners, swears that his recollection is that there were 550 votes cast and was positive that Spencer got but 7 and Morey the balance. We, however, accept the lowest number that is given me in the testimony, and that is what Bagley made affidavit to, to wit: For Morey 510, for Spencer 7; leaving a majority for Morey of 503; to which add Morey's majority on leaving poll 2, 155, and it gives me a majority of 658.

POLL 4.

Now this poll the majority agree may be counted, though there are no returns nor ballots to show what the vote was. I have, however, conclusively proved that an election was held and returns made, and I prove by the commissioners what that vote was. At this poll it is admitted that Morey received 167, Spencer received 74; majority for Morey 93; which, added to Morey's majority on leaving poll 3, 658, gives me a majority of 751.

POLL 5.

It is admitted that Spencer received 108 votes, Morey received 96; Spencer's majority, 12. Deducting this from Morey's majority on leaving poll 4, 751; Spencer's majority at poll 5, 12; leaves Morey's majority in the district, 739, on the strength of which I ask this House to adjudge that I be entitled to my seat on this floor as the duly-elected Representative from the fifth congressional district of Louisiana.

When Mr. MOREY had spoken an hour and a half the Speaker pro tempore notified him that his time had expired.

Mr. MOREY. I should like to go on for half an hour further.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman has already spoken an hour and a half.

Mr. MOREY. If I cannot get half an hour I will take fifteen minutes.

Mr. BEEBE. How long does the gentleman desire?

Mr. MOREY. I should like to have half an hour.

Mr. McCRARY. I move that the gentleman have his time extended for half an hour.

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

Mr. MOREY then concluded his speech.

Mr. HOUSE. I now demand the previous question.

Mr. NASH. I hope the gentleman will withdraw the demand for the previous question and allow me to occupy the floor for ten minutes.

Mr. BEEBE. I understand the arrangement with the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. HOUSE] to be that after he calls the previous question I shall then have the time to which he is entitled to close the discussion, inasmuch as I participated in the report of the Subcommittee on Elections.

Mr. MOREY. I wish to make a remark. I had intended to yield to my colleague [Mr. NASH] to make a few remarks. I now ask that his remarks may be printed in the RECORD.

Mr. HOUSE. There is no objection to that.

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

Mr. NASH. I do not desire leave to print.

Mr. HOUSE. I now demand the previous question.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered.

Mr. HOUSE. I now yield the hour to which I am entitled under the rules to close the debate to the gentleman from New York, [Mr. BEEBE.]

Mr. BEEBE. Mr. Speaker, in view of the manner in which the Committee of Elections has been criticised for its course in the investigation and determination of this case, I earnestly hope, for the brief period of one hour, there may be at least partial attention given while I attempt to defend the action of the committee.

While the committee did not desire to have the interest of the gentleman from Louisiana, the sitting member, prejudiced in the least particle by anything outside of this record, it does desire that the whole matter may receive the candid attention of the House. We do not complain that the gentleman who is the contestee in this case saw fit on this occasion to rise in his place to a question of privilege. If he felt that anything transpiring outside of the case prejudiced him, it was a privilege which no one would more cheerfully accord to him than would the members of the majority of the committee, who have united in the report, with reference to which we ask your action. The report of the committee, the gentleman himself will concede, was made—at least the conclusion was reached—long before anything had transpired which he could regard as in the leastwise prejudicing him before the committee or the House. If, by the matter he alluded to, he has been injured, I commend to him the couplet of Cowper:

> Assailed by slander or the tongue of strife,
> Your amplest answer is a blameless life.

If he has that defense, let no one seek to deprive him of it. If he has it not, let him settle it with his own constituents.

Now, Mr. Speaker, this case comes to us in just this shape: The election district is composed of fourteen parishes. There is no question, there is none raised by the gentlemen themselves, as to the result in any other than the fifth precinct of Concordia Parish, and the first, second, and third of Carroll Parish. There was a question originally, perhaps, as to the fourth and fifth precincts of Carroll Parish. Very little evidence seems to have been taken with reference to them, and no stress was laid by either party before the committee upon questions arising with reference to those precincts—the fourth and fifth of the parish of Carroll.

The fifth precinct, then, of Concordia Parish being first in order, let us briefly give it our attention. There is no question raised as to the fairness of the election in that precinct. There is no question raised which in anywise assails the position which the sitting member may well assume, that the election was fair, honest, impartial, and legal in all respects in that precinct. But there is a question as to what the result of that election was.

The very able gentleman from Iowa, [Mr. McCRARY,] whose work upon the American law of elections has been taken as the guide for this committee in most if not all of the questions arising before it, entertained the House this morning with an argument which was addressed to the proposition that this election should be sent back to the congressional district with instructions to take more testimony. This case as presented to the committee, and as presented in its report, shows beyond all question that it is impossible to reach more fully than has been done the true result of the election in that district. I have said, sir, that with reference to this precinct in Concordia Parish there is no impeachment of the conduct of the election. But, sir, the men who were vested by the statutes of Louisiana with the authority to canvass and declare the result in that precinct failed most signally to comply with the requirements of the law. Gentlemen plead ignorance in defense of the commissioners, or at least in mitigation of their conduct. I desire this House to bear in mind that this law under which this election was held was passed two years before the election. It was approved November 29, 1872. The election was held November 2, 1874. And yet these men knew nothing of their duty. The proof as to this precinct is agreed upon by the parties to this contest. Dameron was called, and his testimony is accepted for both the contestant and the contestee; and Dameron is not materially controverted except in a single respect. He says that "objection was raised by the other commissioners to canvassing the vote at the precinct" where it was polled. The other commissioners say they made no objection. One of them in explanation says that when he was a commissioner two years before the law required that the canvass should be made at the parish site. Conceding this, conceding that there was this amazing ignorance on the part of the commissioners, the only excuse offered is that one of them forgot to bring the statute and the book of instructions with him. May we not pause here and ask why he did not send for it? Or, after having ridden sixteen miles at night, may we not ask why, when they reached the parish site and found no other commissioners were there from other precincts of the parish except the commissioners who took the votes, at the parish site precinct—why did they not return to the precinct where the vote was polled, and there, as the law required, canvass it in the presence of those who were most interested in it and best advised as to its result?

But, sir, this is not all. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. MCCRARY] seems to regard the only point of attack on this precinct to be that the commissioners carried the election returns or the ballots sixteen miles. This is not all. There is great care taken to show that the key was in the possession of one commissioner while the box was in the possession of the other during the greater portion of the time. But it does transpire that at one time the key and the box were both in the possession of the same party. Well, sir, this throws suspicion upon the canvass. But this is not all. Four hundred and ninety-eight votes were polled at that precinct. It took these eminently honest but most astoundingly ignorant commissioners over twenty-four hours to count 498 votes! Who believes this?

Mr. MOREY. Will the gentleman allow me a moment?

Mr. BEEBE. Certainly, but I desire the gentleman will not take up too much time, because I have got to hurry through what I have to say in the limited time at my disposal.

Mr. MOREY. There were twenty or thirty candidates voted for and the commissioners had to tally votes for every one of them. And that is true not only of that poll, but at every poll in my district it took twenty-four, thirty-six, or forty-eight hours to canvass the votes.

Mr. BEEBE. I do not desire to argue that point with the gentleman. The law of Louisiana provides that every candidate shall be voted for upon a single ticket, and the canvass finished and the returns made in twenty-four hours after the close of the polls. The gentleman says it took from twenty-four to forty-eight hours to count the votes. At Vidalia, the parish site, the commissioners had concluded their count, and these commissioners from the fifth precinct moved from the tax-collector's office down into the main room of the court-house "because the Vidalia commissioners had concluded" The Vidalia commissioners did their work in the day-time. These gentlemen did not conclude until between ten and eleven o'clock at night on the day after the election.

Mr. MOREY. They did not commence until after they had ridden sixteen miles.

Mr. BEEBE. I can have a great deal of patience; indeed, I have a great deal of sympathy for the gentleman. But, sir, the law of Louisiana is one of the most stringent in its provisions of any law enacted by any State in this Union. It requires not only that the commissioners shall keep the tally-list, shall do all acts in and about and concerning the holding and making returns of election, but it says they shall be punished with fine and imprisonment if they do not. It says that any man who fails to discharge this duty shall be punished by fine and imprisonment. There has been a grand jury held, it is said, and no one has been indicted. Take the record and compare the transaction of that grand jury with the requirements of the law, and then see if there is any other or more charitable pretext or plea upon which these grand jurors could themselves escape than that which is fashionable in that vicinity—gross ignorance.

But a majority of the committee excluded this poll for the reason that the commissioners of election rode sixteen miles and went into a distant precinct and canvassed the votes. True, it was in presence of two of the candidates; but both of them objected to the unlawful action taken. The evidence shows that the tally-list had been made out by parties who were not sworn, and the returns had been made up from these unsworn tally-lists. For these reasons, and because the votes were manipulated for over twenty four hours under pretense of canvassing them, the committee say that this return is unworthy of credence at the hands of any intelligent body or tribunal, and they cast it out. They did not disfranchise a voter in that precinct. The contestee, who will hardly plead ignorance, had the same line of evidence which every gentleman has in all similar cases; he had the registration-list and the poll-list, and could have called the electors of the precinct, and they could have stated how they voted. The committee have not asked the House to disfranchise a single elector of the gentleman's district or of the State of Louisiana.

Passing now to the parish of Carroll, perhaps I ought to say something in advance concerning the condition of things in reference to the entire parish. The contestee has quoted largely from the evidence in relation to the parish presented to the State returning board. If we believe that the testimony of the parties who testified before that board was credible, still it was ex parte and could not be entertained by the committee. The House cannot investigate an election case or any other question involving the rights of members upon evidence of that character. Passing now to the evidence produced in the parish of Carroll, what was the course pursued by the contestant? He went to the clerk's office where the law required that the evidence of the election should be deposited and made every attempt which the law required and which the rules of evidence allowed to ascertain if any election had been held, and, if so, what the result was. He could not find a particle of evidence that any election had been held in the parish of Carroll. He then turned the case over to the contestee. He said: "I rest my case." What then devolved on the contestee? It was his duty, it was the privilege of any of the electors of the State who desired to produce whatever evidence there was to show that an election had really been held and what the result thereof had been. To do this the voters themselves were competent witnesses.

Spencer having shown that there was no legal record evidence of any votes having been cast in Carroll Parish either for himself or the contestee, rested. The sitting member then went into evidence to show that there had been an election, and he undertook to show that the election was fair, impartial, and in all respects in conformity with the provisions of law governing elections in that State. But he did more; he introduced testimony to prove that no money had been paid to voters. I ask the House to bear this in mind; for Morey first went into this matter himself, and even tried to impeach Cæsar Johnson, and for what? For a statement which had not been introduced by Spencer, and never could have been introduced by him, and which never would have been considered by the committee but for contestee's own course. He asked the election commissioner, the witness Jackson, whether he had paid money to voters, and whether Cæsar Johnson was a credible witness, and Jackson said he was not. And then when Spencer came in in rebuttal he met that proposition, and showed that Cæsar Johnson was known to two of the first citizens of the parish, Mr. Cunningham and Mr. Purdy, who had been a merchant there for many years, whether Cæsar Johnson was credible or not, and they both said that he was a man who had a good reputation for truth and veracity, and yet contestee characterizes him as an "ignorant darkey."

Sir, in this matter I am struck by the ingratitude of Mr. Spencer, and perhaps if his qualification to sit in this House had been under discussion I might have been disposed to pause long before I admitted him to a seat. I know of but one instance in all the range of my reading of history of similar ingratitude, and I send it to the Clerk's desk, with the request that he will read it to show the extent to which ingratitude may sometimes go.

The Clerk read as follows:

After J. T. had concluded his opening speech Washington rose to open for the defense. The speech was a remarkable specimen of forensic eloquence. It had all the charms of Counselor Phillips's most ornate efforts, lacking only the ideas. Great was the sensation when Washington turned upon the prosecutor. "Gentlemen of the jury," said the orator, "this prosecutor is one of the vilest ingrates that ever lived since the time of Judas Iscariot; for, gentlemen, did you not hear from the witnesses that when this prosecutor was in the very extremity of his peril my client, moved by the tenderest emotions of pity and compassion, shouted out, 'Run! run! you d——d rascal, run!' It is true, (lowering his voice and smiling,) gentlemen, he said you d——d rascal, but the honorable court will instruct you that that was merely descriptio personæ." The effect was prodigious.

Now, sir, that is the only parallel I know to the ingratitude of Mr. Spencer, who, after the minority have admitted his rebutting testimony, has the hardihood to want it considered. The majority of the committee laid great stress on the proposition that Spencer produced this evidence in rebuttal. It is shown to be proper rebutting testimony; but it is said that it ought not to have much weight because it was not introduced in the first instance as testimony-in-chief.

Mr. MOREY. The gentleman does not mean to say that I admit that testimony?

Mr. BEEBE. I say the minority of the committee admit the testimony. I am aware that while the gentleman does not stand with the majority of the committee, he does not stand with the minority either. I am aware that while his counsel do not stand with the returning board, they do not stand with the gentleman himself or with the minority of the committee as to either reasons or results. His vote is, as Dundreary would say, one of "those things that no fellah can find out." The gentleman claims 713 majority; his counsel carry it up to 725; the minority of the committee give him some 600 and odd, showing how clear his case is, and how definitely established his majority must be.

Now as to the first poll in the parish of Carroll. After it had been shown that the grossest frauds had been perpetrated by men who had possession of the returns, the admitted returns which one Anderson had carried in his pocket for six months, and which he swears he received from Jackson, were certified to after they were received in evidence—I ask the minority of the committee to remember this point—after they were received in evidence they were attested by the deputy clerk, but he himself swears that they never were in his possession up to the time of his giving his testimony.

Mr. MOREY. The gentleman is mistaken; the original was certified by Galbraith, and he certifies to the correctness of the copy.

Mr. BEEBE. There is no certificate by Galbraith in evidence except the certificate given in the record in this case, which is the certificate to the returns introduced by Anderson. Anderson carried these returns in his pocket for six months; but that matters not, because this agreeable majority admitted the return. There is no parallel in any election record connected with the history of this House where a committee has exercised as great liberality as has the majority in this very instance, where returns carried for six months in the pocket of a person not entitled to their possession are nevertheless accepted as prima facie proof of the result at poll 1.

Having admitted the returns, the contestant attacks them; and how? He shows that in the first instance they opened the election at that precinct at a door with a bar nailed across, and that the crowd became so unruly and disorderly that they broke down the door. Then the commissioners moved the box into the house and placed it at a window over six feet from the ground.

Now the election law of Louisiana requires that the ballot-box should be in the plain and open view of the electors; that every elector shall have the privilege of seeing his ballot deposited in the box. Nay, more, it goes further; it says that every elector shall have the privilege of placing his ballot in the box with his own hand. These commissioners, disregarding these provisions of the law, placed the box at the window six feet and over from the ground, where it could not be seen by voters, as the witnesses swear. It is true some of them say that it could be seen; the testimony I concede is conflicting; but the weight of the testimony is that the ballot-box could not be seen.

After a while these eminently intelligent electors, so overwhelmingly impressed with the dignity of the sovereignty of American citizenship, resorted to the novel expedient of spliting sticks and placing their ballots in the sticks and poking them at the commissioners at a venture through slats three inches apart, nailed up and down the window. Under such a novel system of voting how could the commissioners distinguish who was at the other end of the sticks? How could they meet their oaths, which required that they should take the ballot from the hand of the elector and let him see it deposited in the box, or else give the elector the privilege of depositing the ballot in the box with his own hand?

One of these commissioners who is most inculpated swears that they caused proclamation to be made that everybody who desired to do so could come into the room and deposit his ballot in the box. This statement is contradicted by the sheriff of the county and other persons. The sheriff of the county swears that the door was shut and barred, and that an officer was stationed at the door. He swears that he got three friends into the room by the grace of the officer at the door; that Jackson, who is a clerk, who had these returns in his care, was also a commissioner of election; and that Jackson said that no more voters should be admitted into the room. The sheriff said to Jackson, "Let these men vote and I will bring no more in." Cunningham went in and they made objection to his voting, and he said that if he did not vote there he would have to go away without voting, for he could not vote in the rabble outside. Jackson said, and some of the testimony goes to show that he said it with an oath, that that was the last man who should vote in the house, and the other commissioners assented by their silence.

This is the manner of the election held at this precinct: this is the character of the election which these gentlemen of the minority and the sitting member ask shall offset the election in your district, Mr. Speaker, and in mine. What avails it that we obey the solemn requirements of the law? What avails it that our constituents, conscious of the great dignity wherewith they are invested, strictly comply with the provisions of the law when they seek to express their will through the silent but potent medium of the ballot, if these men in Louisiana and elsewhere can hold a riot of this kind and christen it an election?

The committee disregarded this farce; they would have been unworthy of seats in this body, they would have been unmindful of their obligation to this Government as officers of it, and utterly unfit to exercise the franchise itself, if they had admitted any returns or result made up from any such miserable farce as this. But this is not all.

Mr. WELLS, of Mississippi. Will the gentleman allow me to interrupt him?

Mr. BEEBE. I have but an hour's time altogether.

Mr. WELLS, of Mississippi. My point is this: Is it not true that the democratic United States supervisor and all the candidates for office——

Mr. BEEBE. I have no patience with this puddling about a democrat or a republican. I have lived long enough to know that there are vile and corrupt men in every party. I ask no questions as to their political associations or professions. Among the twelve apostles one proved base and corrupt. Can it be presumed then that the democratic party does not embrace within its numbers men who are corrupt, men who are as vile as were those who served as commissioners of election in this parish?

But sir, to proceed. It is in evidence that this man Jackson was caught by the sheriff of the county taking a ballot from an elector and substituting another for it and placing it in the box. Will the gentleman from Iowa, [Mr. MCCRARY,] with his historic reputation, undertake to defend such proceedings as these? Will he send us back, after the sitting member has had the notice which the statutes of the Federal Government give him—will he send us back to verify an election presided over by such corrupt miscreants as the record shows these commissioners to have been? It was a farce; nay, it was a crime against the elective franchise. There is but one resort of safety, and that lies in the stern rebuke of this House at this time and at all times when any such proceeding is presented and the solemnity of its sanction asked.

But this is not all. It is charged that one of the commissioners who manipulated these returns, at least who had them in his control, was caught passing money out from the room in which the ballot-box was stationed. Ah, says the sitting member, could you attach any credence to this statement? Why not? It is solemn testimony before the committee. The merchant Purdy and Andrew Cunningham swear that the man who swears to this is as truthful and credible a man as lives in that parish. Why not believe the statement? Noah Lane, who is not assailed or impeached, also swears that he saw it. Andrew Cunningham swears that on election day he heard one man halloo to another that the commissioner Jackson was paying out "greenbacks."

Yet we are told it is but an idle story, that we are not to believe it. Now, if we were not called upon to believe other things equally as vile and criminal of this man Jackson, we might stagger somewhat at this; but he is shown to be capable of almost anything. The committee rejected the vote of this precinct. Let him who dares, advised of this record, stand up and assail the action of the majority of the committee in this regard as iniquitous or unwarranted.

I pass now to the second precinct of this parish, and what are we met with here? No returns at all are adduced. Montgomery swears that he never signed any return. One of the commissioners swears that he did sign a return. Why was not the other commissioner sworn? Why was not the justice sworn before whom the verification was taken? Neither of them was produced, neither of them was called upon to testify.

The commissioners were W. W. Benham, Thomas F. Montgomery, and Samuel L. Murray. Montgomery swears that he did not sign the return, and Cunningham testifies that Montgomery told him within a short time after the election that he would not sign any return. Why did they not produce the other commissioner, Murray? It would have benefited the case of the minority if they had produced Murray to swear that he and Benham signed the return. But Murray was not produced, nor was the justice before whom they were claimed to have been sworn forthcoming.

But, as to the conduct of the election, it is shown that at this precinct there was as great disregard of the requirements of the law as at the other. The poll-lists, as the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. HOUSE] says, were kept by Tom, Dick, and Harry, by parties who were "picked up" and who were not sworn. The commissioners made up the returns from tally-lists not sworn to. The law of Louisiana provides that the commissioners shall be sworn, that the poll-lists shall be made up by the commissioners, which makes them evidence, or at least competent proof from which the commissioners can make up the returns, and then the returns are to be sworn to.

But there is a great parade made that there is a poll-list introduced. Those familiar with the law of elections know that this House has frequently held that poll-lists are not records to establish anything. They are not evidence. I think it was the distinguished gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. LAMAR] who held—at least it was upon a case arising while he was on the committee—that poll-lists are not evidence. They are items going to make up evidence. And when introduced they of themselves prove nothing. In this case the supervisor of election of that parish swears that from that poll-list and from the names of those who voted he believed that Spencer received more votes than were allowed to him.

Pass now to the third precinct. In that precinct the gentleman says there was no evidence of fraud. He undertook to have this House believe that there was no such evidence, except in the one matter of the poll at the first precinct. Now, in the third precinct of this same parish one of the commissioners is brought forward by the sitting member himself; he is introduced to prove that this election was all serene and fair. What is his testimony?

The election in the third precinct was conducted very loosely—

This is a witness introduced by the sitting member—

I know that the law was not complied with in many instances. There were a great many charges of unfairness, which I, as commissioner, attempted to correct, but was overruled. Candidates for office were allowed to keep the tally-sheet. Parties were allowed to vote who were under age, and others who had not proper registration certificates. The ballots were not counted nor returns made up until thirty-six hours after the closing of the polls. The official count upon which the returns were made up was made at Providence thirty-six hours after the close of the election.

This is such an election as gentlemen of other districts are asked to allow to offset their own. This is such an election as it is asked shall counterbalance the voice of your constituents legally and solemnly expressed through the forms which have been provided by the statutes of your country. So long as I hold a position upon the Committee of Elections I never will accredit the result of an election so conducted. I disfranchise no one. I merely give notice by my action, and you, if you assent to the proposition laid down by the majority of the committee, give notice that you will require the electors in this and every other district to abide by the provisions of the statutes which have been enacted for the government of all of us alike.

But in the argument for the sitting member the scene is shifted. The case is begged, begged by the gentleman from Iowa himself. He wants us to send this case back—for what? For more testimony. On what ground? O, the doctrine of probabilities is invoked. I had supposed that "probabilities" were only an authority in governing the weather department; but if they are to be solemnly invoked in connection with election results I ask gentlemen of this House to compare the returns in the parish of Carroll, where this dispute arises, with those in the parish of Tensas, a small remove below. The latter parish is upon the river, where the gentleman tells us he has such great popularity; there he is all-powerful; he goes forth "conquering and to conquer," because he had a record with reference to the levees of the Mississippi River. Now, what is the result in that regard? Will he stand or fall by the levees? If I overwhelm him with a deluge from his levee stronghold bearing directly upon his case, will he submit with grace?

Gentlemen, the parish of Tensas in 1872 gave 2,109 republican majority. The negro vote in the parish of Tensas was 3,166, against 353 whites in 1874. Yet the majority of 2,109 scored in 1872 was changed in 1874 to a democratic majority of 754. Where are your levee stays now? Where is this all-sufficient record which bears up the contestee in this emergency? Ah, he would float upon the waters of the Mississippi into this House; but, sir, the levees give way in the parish directly below the contested ground of Carroll, and in Tensas, where the negro registration is 3,109 against 353 whites, we find that a majority in his favor two years ago of 2,109 is changed, admittedly and concededly changed, to a majority of 754 for Spencer in this election.

But proceeding further with the doctrine of probabilities, I will take the parishes of the district and run them over very hurriedly. Caldwell Parish in 1872 gave a republican majority of 117; in 1874 a democratic majority of 139. Then take Carroll Parish, and I ask gentlemen to bear this in mind, to give it their attention on the score of probabilities; I ask gentlemen who have been whispering around the House that probably Mr. Morey was elected to give this some little attention. In the presence of my Creator I will say that if I was morally certain—if I had what gentlemen call "moral evidence," satisfying me that Mr. Morey was elected by a majority of the votes really cast at the election in that district, I never would have signed the report of the majority of this committee.

The parish of Carroll in 1872, with a negro registration of 2,073 against 572 whites, on a total vote of 1,834, gave only 1,070 majority for Morey. Tensas at the same election gave 2,100 republican majority. Both of these parishes lie upon the river. We have the evidence of witnesses that there was a disaffection in the republican vote in Carroll. We have men swearing that Mr. Spencer's name was pasted over Morey's and voted on the regular republican ticket in that parish; that he received also the conservative vote. Although Gla and Benham were quarreling there and in a grip which meant death to the one or the other, we are asked to believe that in 1874 Carroll Parish, on a total vote of 2,033, gave twice as large a majority for Mr. Morey as it did in 1872 upon a total vote of 2,199.

Apply the doctrine of probabilities, and answer me in candor, gentlemen, is there evidence inducing you to believe that Mr. Morey received this great majority? If he had, would not the evidence be forthcoming? Would not Murray have been produced; would not other witnesses have been called to sustain the infamous Jackson, the miserable Benham, and men of that character, who are contestee's main witnesses? In the parish of Claiborne Spencer's majority in 1874 was 712, against a democratic majority in the same parish two years before of only 415. The majority is almost double. In Catahoula Parish we find that in 1874, on a total vote of 1,576, the democratic majority was 95. That parish gave two years before a republican majority of 200.

One precinct of Concordia is contested. She gave a republican majority of 1,485 in 1872. She had then a total vote of 1,857. Now she has a total vote of 2,193.

Franklin Parish had a democratic majority of 405 against 267 two years before.

Jackson Parish had a democratic majority of 440 against a republican majority two years before of 164.

Lincoln Parish was not counted in 1872. It met the convenience of the gentlemen who are the ruling authority and supreme in that locality of our country to throw out Lincoln in 1872.

Mr. MOREY. There was no such parish.

Mr. BEEBE. The record does not say, and I do not know.

Mr. MOREY. It was a new parish created afterward.

Mr. BEEBE. All right; it answers well the purpose of its creation, it gives a democratic majority of 389. [Laughter.]

Madison Parish, with a total vote of 2,080, gave Morey a majority of 560 in 1874, when it gave a republican majority of 1,451 in 1872, the vote for Morey falling off more than one-half in two years.

Mr. MOREY. You are not reading my vote in 1872, but the republican majority.

Mr. BEEBE. I am reading from the record of the case, page 104, given by the authorities in Louisiana, who cannot lie. [Laughter.]

Mr. MOREY. It does not pretend to give my vote in 1872, and you are giving somebody else's vote.

Mr. BEEBE. Your vote is one of those mysterious things "which no fellow can find out." [Laughter.]

Morehouse Parish in 1874 gives a republican majority of 337 against a republican majority of nearly twice that amount in 1872.

Ouachita Parish gives a republican majority of 943 in 1874. Here is an increase for Morey, and I ask your attention to it, for it only gave a republican majority of 835 in 1872.

Mr. MOREY. That is the parish I live in, and keeps increasing every year I run.

Mr. BEEBE. It does? Let us see. Here is where our friend the contestee lives. Let us "hit him where he lives." Ouachita in 1872 gave a republican majority of 835 against 943 in 1874, being the only parish where Morey increased the republican majority. Here we are asked to contravene the scriptural saying: "A prophet is not without honor, save in his own country and in his own house."

In this Ouachita Parish—give me your attention my friends, for this is where he lives—this parish of Ouachita, on a registration of 2,645 in 1874, gave it is claimed 2,460 votes; while in 1872, on a registration of 3,281, it gave only 2,047 votes, about 400 more votes on 600 less registration than 1874. It does not make any difference whether they register or not, my friend is sure to have his vote increased. In other parishes we find where there were respectable republican majorities in 1872 Morey gets only 80 or 90 votes in all. For instance, Jackson gave 164 republican majority in 1872, in 1874 Morey got only 94 votes in the whole parish.

In Richland Parish, on a total vote of 1,174, Spencer gets 293 in 1874. In 1872 the democratic majority was 428. This is the only case where there is any falling off in the democratic vote.

Tensas—now give me your attention—with a registration of 3,166 colored, (I will not follow the example of the contestee and say "darkies," because it is fashionable for democrats to respect these "men and brothers" and call them "colored gentlemen," and I must not follow the example of my friend from Louisiana, and undertake to cast a slur upon them; truth is as white from colored lips as coming from the lips of my friend who is the contestee,) Tensas, with a registration of 3,160 colored votes against 353 whites, gives Spencer 750 majority against a republican majority two years before of 2,109, making a change of 2,900 in that parish.

Union, which gave a republican majority of 29 in 1872, gave a democratic majority of 716 against Morey in 1874. Where, O, where is your doctrine of probabilities?

Tensas, according to the table on page 104 of the record, gave only 243 democratic votes to 2,622 republican; while it is conceded Spencer got 754 in the last election, which shows the colored troops fought nobly. [Laughter.] Where is your doctrine of probabilities?

Now, gentlemen, my sympathies are with the sitting member. He has held office for four years, but I will not continue him the brief period of his term; I will not vote to continue him to March 4, 1877, pleading for him ignorance; for four years he has held his seat in this House the intelligent peer of his brethren, and when he went to take his proofs in this contest he knew what the laws he helped to enact required. He knew that this House always shrank from disfranchising the votes of any one, and that by calling the voters he could have proven how they voted. But he knew also that if he could hold his seat up to this hour, and then ask this committee to go back with him to take other testimony, testimony which he did not adduce in chief, he could hold his seat on until the end of the term.

But, sir, Mr. Spencer and his constituents have some rights which we are bound to respect. On the record made his election is established, and if "probabilities" are to be considered, I have shown that they, too, indicate his election. In addition to suggestions already made under the head of probabilities, let me refer to a "probability" of a general character. In this election in 1874—I appeal to you gentlemen who have memories that will go back to that period—when you as republicans or as democrats sat around the places where the returns were being borne to you on the wings of the lightning on the night of the election and the day after, when you learned that Massachusetts even had swung loose from her miry lodgment in the "low grounds" of republicanism, and had gone democratic—when you learned that Butler had been borne by the tidal wave into a far off offing, from whence it is yet to be determined whether he can make his way safely to land again—when you learned that the election returns from California to Maine showed a great increase for the democratic party, did you not think it singular that Louisiana was joined to her idols? Did you not believe then and do you not believe now that motives had influenced her people, or that influences had been brought to bear upon them, which would not tally or comport with the dignity of the suffrage as exercised by intelligent freemen elsewhere? And in view of all that the "Wheeler committee" has since made plain, do you not believe that "moral certainties," as well as shadowy "probabilities," are all against the conclusions of the Louisiana returning board and in favor of the election of those who by that board were "counted out"—Spencer included?

Now, sir, the Election Committee can stand all the assaults which by innuendo or otherwise can be cast upon it. We have asked no questions as to the political status of the men conducting elections, or of the men contesting. There is an evidence of that, sir, in my eye which makes me proud when I reflect how I can overcome my prejudices. I can remember, sir, when I sincerely thought that I would spurn a seat in this body if it had to be held in common with "gentlemen of color." Yet the first vote called for from me when doing service upon this committee was to seat the member from Alabama, who had the vast array of four hundred thousand dollars' worth of Government bacon at his back; in the face even of evidence which showed that when the elections were held which returned him, public notice was given that those who would come to precincts where colored votes were to be taken should have this Government bacon doled out. But because Mr. Bromberg did not prove his case we sent him back, and we confirmed Mr. HARALSON in the seat. I regret that the inevitable logic of consistency asserts itself against my race and color, but, sir, it is duty and it is with me irresistible, coming as it does under the admonition and the obligation of my official oath. It will hardly do for the minority to cast imputations of unfairness upon the majority of the committee because we do not agree with them. We have had unanimous reports on all occasions when they have been in favor of republicans. We have never had a unanimous report in favor of a democrat, and I do not believe we ever will have. So much for the ungenerous imputations cast upon the democratic members of the committee.

My venerable friend and colleague from the State of New York [Mr. TOWNSEND] on another occasion undertook to show how corrupt we of the majority of the committee were, and I wondered that he did not then adduce the Scripture, as is his wont, to prove us "castaways." This gentleman who "can quote Scripture for his purpose" has on every occasion when he has spoken in this House, on election cases, assailed the fairness of the majority. I ask him now to do his best, in some one instance at least, to put aside partisan prejudice and vindicate his reputation for fairness and his reputation as a lawyer, which stands so high in the State in which we both live, by showing that it is possible for him to see justice and right in favor of a democrat.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under the operation of the previous question the question is first on the substitute of the gentleman from Iowa, [Mr. MCCRARY,] which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the report of the Committee of Elections, in the case of Spencer vs. Morey, fifth district of Louisiana, be recommitted to said committee; that the poll of Concordia Parish be counted; that the time for taking testimony in said case be extended sixty days from the 10th day of June, 1876; and that within said extended time, additional testimony may be taken upon the question. What was the true vote of the first, second, and third polls of Carroll Parish? said testimony to be taken in accordance with the statutes regulating the taking of testimony in contested-election cases, except that the contestant shall take testimony during the first twenty days, the contestee during the next twenty-five days, and the contestant during the last five days in rebuttal only; this arrangement of time to be subject to such change as may be mutually agreed on by the parties to the contest.

Mr. MCCRARY. I call for the yeas and nays on agreeing to my substitute for the report of the committee.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. HOLMAN. Before the vote is taken I ask that the resolutions reported respectively by the majority and minority of the committee be also read.

The Clerk read the majority resolutions, as follows:

Resolved, That Frank Morey was not elected and is not entitled to a seat in the House of Representatives of the Forty-fourth Congress from the fifth district of Louisiana.

Resolved, That William B. Spencer was elected and is entitled to a seat in the House of Representatives of the Forty-fourth Congress from the fifth district of Louisiana.

The resolutions reported by the minority of the committee were read, as follows:

Resolved, That William B. Spencer was not elected and is not entitled to a seat in the House of Representatives of the Forty-fourth Congress from the fifth district of Louisiana.

Resolved, That Frank Morey was elected and is entitled to a seat in the House of Representatives of the Forty-fourth Congress from the fifth district of Louisiana.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is first on the substitute submitted by the gentleman from Iowa, [Mr. MCCRARY,] on which the yeas and nays have been ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 76, nays 101, not voting 112; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Adams, George A. Bagley, William H. Baker, Ballou, Banks Blair, Bradley, William R. Brown, Horatio C. Burchard, Cannon, Caswell, Chittenden, Cronuse, Danford, Davy, Denison, Dobbins, Dunnell, Eames, Frost, Frye, Harralson, Benjamin W. Harris, Hathorn, Hays, Hendee, Henderson, Hoge, Hubbell, Hurlbut, Hyman, Joyce, Kelley, Ketchum, Kimball, Franklin Landers, Lawrence, Leavenworth, Lynch, Edmund W. M. Mackey, L. A. Mackey, Magoon, McCrary, McDill, McFarland, Miller, Nash, Norton, O'Neill, Packer, Page, William A. Phillips, Pierce, Plaisted, Platt, Potter, Pratt, Sobieski Ross, Sampson, Seelye, Sinnickson, Smalls, A. Herr Smith, William E. Smith, Thornburgh, Martin I. Townsend, Washington Townsend, Wait, Alexander S. Wallace, G. Wiley Wells, White, Whiting, Willard, Andrew Williams, Charles G. Williams, and Woodworth—76.

NAYS—Messrs. Ainsworth, Anderson, Ashe, Atkins, Bagby, John H. Bagley, jr., Banning, Beebe, Bland, Blount, Boone, Bradford, Bright, John Young Brown, Buckner, John H. Caldwell, William P. Caldwell, Candler, Cate, Canfield, John B. Clarke of Kentucky, John B. Clark, jr., of Missouri, Clymer, Cochrane, Collins, Cox, Culberson, Cutler, De Bolt, Dibrell, Douglas, Durham, Eden, Ellis, Felton, Finley, Forney, Franklin, Fuller, Glover, Gunter, Andrew H. Hamilton, Robert Hamilton, Hardenbergh, Harrison, Hartridge, Hartzell, Hatcher, Henkle, Hereford, Goldsmith W. Hewitt, Hill, Hooker House, Hunton, Jenks, Frank Jones, Thomas L. Jones, Knott, Lamar, Levy, Lewis, Lord, Luttrell, Lynde, Maish, McMahon, Metcalfe, Milliken, Mills, Money, Morrison, Mutchler, O'Brien, Odell, Parsons, Payne, Poppleton, Powell, Randall, Rea, Riddle, Miles Ross, Savage, Scales, Schleicher Singleton, Siemons, Southard, Stenger, Thompson, Turney, Robert B. Vance, Walsh, Erastus Wells, Whitthorne, James Williams, James D. Williams, Jeremiah N. Williams, Willis, and Yeates—101.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. John H. Baker, Bass, Bell, Blackburn, Blaine, Bliss, Samuel D. Burchard, Burleigh, Cabell, Campbell, Cason, Chapin, Conger, Cook, Cowan, Crapo, Darrall, Davis, Durand, Egbert, Ely, Evans, Faulkner, Fort, Foster, Freeman, Garfield, Gause, Gibson, Goode, Goodin, Hale, Hancock, Henry R. Harris, John T. Harris, Haymond, Abram S. Hewitt, Hoar, Holman, Hopkins, Hoskins, Hunter, Hurd, Kasson, Kehr, King, George M. Landers, Lane, Lapham, Le Moyne, MacDougall, Meade, Monroe, Morey, Morgan, Neal, New, Oliver, Phelps, John F. Philips, Piper, Purman, Rainey, Reagan, John Reilly, James B. Reilly, Rice, John Robbins, William M. Robbins, Roberts, Robinson, Rusk, Sayler, Schumaker, Sheakley, Sparks, Springer, Strait, Stevenson, Stone, Stowell, Swann, Tarbox, Teese, Terry, Thomas, Throckmorton, Tucker, Tufts, Van Vorhes, John L. Vance, Waddell, Waldron, Charles C. B. Walker, Gilbert C. Walker, John W. Wallace, Walling, Ward, Warren, Wheeler, Whitehouse, Wigginton Wike, Alpheus S. Williams, William B. Williams, Wilshire, Benjamin Wilson, James Wilson, Alan Wood, jr., Fernando Wood, Woodburn, and Young—112.

So the substitute offered by Mr. MCCRARY was not agreed to.

During the roll-call,

Mr. HARTRIDGE said: I desire to state that my colleague, Mr. COOK, is detained from the House by sickness.

Mr. PHILIPS, of Missouri. I am paired upon this question with the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. GARFIELD.] If he were present he would vote "ay" and I would vote "no."

Mr. JENKS. My colleague, Mr. HOPKINS, is necessarily away in Philadelphia, and some one voted when his name was called, as I understand; if it be so, that some one has voted in his name, it would be a fraud.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The vote of Mr. HOPKINS will be withdrawn from the roll-call.

Mr. HUNTON. I am requested to say that my colleague, Mr. TUCKER, is paired with Mr. FOSTER; if my colleague were here he would vote "no" and Mr. FOSTER would vote "ay."

Mr. SCALES. I desire to announce that my colleague, Mr. WADDELL, is absent by leave of the House.

Mr. DURAND. Upon this question I am paired with my colleague, Mr. CONGER, who is absent by order of the House.

Mr. RICE. On this question I am paired with Mr. PURMAN; if he were here he would vote "ay" and I would vote "no."

Mr. THROCKMORTON. I desire to state that upon this question I am paired with the gentleman from Iowa, Mr. KASSON; if he were present he would vote "ay" and I would vote "no."

Mr. CANDLER. My colleague, Mr. HARRIS, is absent, by order of the House.

Mr. THROCKMORTON. I desire to say that my colleague, Mr. REAGAN, is at home sick.

Mr. WHITING. I desire to say that my colleague, Mr. FORT, is absent by leave of the House.

Mr. STOWELL. I am paired upon this question with my colleague, Mr. CABELL; if he were present he would vote "no" and I should vote "ay."

Mr. BAKER, of Indiana. I desire to say that I am paired with my colleague on the Committee of Elections, Mr. BLACKBURN; if he were present he would vote "no" and I would vote "ay." I desire further to say that my colleagues, Mr. EVANS and Mr. ROBINSON, are absent by leave of the House.

Mr. HUNTER. I am paired upon this question with Mr. GOODE; if he were present he would vote "no" and I would vote "ay."

Mr. HOSKINS. Upon this question I am paired with the gentleman from Virginia, Mr. WALKER; if he were present he would vote "no" and I should vote "ay."

Mr. PIPER. I am paired on this question with the gentleman from Nevada, Mr. WOODBURN; if here he would vote "ay" and I would vote "no."

Mr. OLIVER. I am paired with Mr. HOPKINS; if he were here I would vote "ay" and he, I think, would vote "no."

Mr. VAN VORHES. I am paired with Mr. VANCE, of Ohio, who is absent by order of the House; if he were here he would vote "no" and I would vote "ay."

Mr. WALDRON. I am paired upon this question with my colleague, Mr. A. S. WILLIAMS, who is absent by leave of the House; if he were present he would vote "no" and I should vote "ay."

Mr. MACDOUGALL. On this question I am paired with the gentleman from Virginia, Mr. TERRY; if he were here he would vote "no" and I should vote "ay."

Mr. YEATES. Upon this question I desire to say that my colleague, Mr. DAVIS, is paired with WILLIAM B. WILLIAMS, of Michigan, and my colleague, Mr. WADDELL, is paired with Mr. WILSON, of Iowa.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I voted inadvertently and now withdraw my vote. I am paired upon this question with the gentleman from North Carolina, Mr. WADDELL; if he were here he would vote one way and I should vote the other. I suppose that statement will cover all the votes connected with the matter.

Mr. MOREY. I desire to state that my colleague, Mr. DARRALL, is paired upon this question on the merits of the case with Mr. HARRIS, of Georgia. I do not know whether Mr. HARRIS is here, but in case he has not announced the pair I desire to do it now.

The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded.

The question recurred upon the resolutions offered by the minority of the committee as a substitute for the resolutions of the majority.

Mr. BAKER, of Indiana. I desire in behalf of the minority of the Committee of Elections to withdraw the last of the two resolutions presented as a substitute for the report of the majority.

Mr. BEEBE. I rise to a question of order. I submit that debate is not in order, the previous question having been seconded and the main question ordered.

Mr. BAKER, of Indiana. I will simply say that the minority of the committee desire a separate vote upon each resolution.

Mr. BEEBE. I call the gentleman to order; no debate is in order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The previous question having been ordered by the House, nothing is in order but to proceed to vote.

Mr. McCRARY. But it is always in order to call for a division.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Indiana to withdraw the second resolution?

Mr. RANDALL and others objected.

Mr. BAKER, of Indiana. If there is any objection then I call for a separate vote on each resolution.

Mr. HOLMAN. I hope we shall be allowed to hear the proposition which my colleague [Mr. BAKER] desires to submit.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state his request.

Mr. BAKER, of Indiana. The request I desire to make is simply to withdraw the last of the two resolutions submitted by the minority of the committee, so that a vote may be taken simply on the first, which declares that William B. Spencer was not elected and is not entitled to a seat in this House. If objection is made to the withdrawal, then I ask a division of the question, so that each of the resolutions reported by the minority may be voted on separately. I desire, however, a vote on the first only.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to withdrawing the last of the resolutions reported by the minority of the committee?

Mr. YEATES. I object.

Mr. BAKER, of Indiana. Then I demand a division of the question.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman has the right to have the question divided. The first resolution will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That William B. Spencer was not elected and is not entitled to a seat in this House from the fifth congressional district of the State of Louisiana.

Mr. BAKER, of Indiana. On this resolution I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 74, nays 99, not voting 116; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Adams, George A. Bagley, William H. Baker, Ballou, Blair, Bradley, William R. Brown, Horatio C. Burchard, Cannon, Caswell, Chittenden, Crounse, Danford, Davy, Denison, Dobbins, Dunnell, Eames, Frost, Frye, Haralson, Benjamin W. Harris, Hathorn, Hays, Hendee, Henderson, Hoge, Hubbell, Hurlbut, Hyman, Joyce, Kelley, Ketchum, Kimball, Lawrence, Leavenworth, Lynch, Edmund W. M. Mackey, Magoon, McCrary, McDill, Miller, Monroe, Morgan, Nash, Neal, Norton, O'Neill, Packer, Page, William A. Phillips, Pierce, Plaisted, Platt, Potter, Pratt, Sobieski Ross, Sampson, Seelye, Sinnickson, Smalls, A. Herr Smith, Thornburgh, Martin I. Townsend, Washington Townsend, Tufts, Wait, Alexander S. Wallace, John W. Wallace, G. Wiley Wells, White, Whiting, Willard, and Andrew Williams—74.

NAYS—Messrs. Ainsworth, Anderson, Ashe, Atkins, Bagby, John H. Bagley, jr., Banning, Beebe, Bland, Blount, Boone, Bradford, Bright, John Young Brown, Buckner, John H. Caldwell, William P. Caldwell, Candler, Cate, John B. Clarke of Kentucky, John B. Clark, jr., of Missouri, Clymer, Cochrane, Collins, Cox, Culberson, Cutler, De Bolt, Dibrell, Douglas, Durham, Eden, Ellis, Felton, Finley, Forney, Franklin, Fuller, Glover, Andrew H. Hamilton, Robert Hamilton, Hardenbergh, Harrison, Hartridge, Hartzell, Hatcher, Hereford, Goldsmith W. Hewitt, Hill, Hooker, House, Hunton, Hurd, Jenks, Frank Jones, Thomas L. Jones, Lamar, Franklin Landers, Le Moyne, Levy, Lewis, Lord, Luttrell, Maish, Metcalfe, Milliken, Mills, Money, Morrison, Mutchler, O'Brien, Odell, Parsons, Poppleton, Powell, Randall, Rea, Riddle, John Robbins, Miles Ross, Savage, Scales, Schleicher, Sheakley, Singleton, Slemons, Southard, Stenger, Thompson, Turney, Robert B. Vance, Walsh, Warren, Erastus Wells, Whitthorne, James Williams, James D. Williams, Jeremiah N. Williams, and Yeates—99.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. John H. Baker, Banks, Bass, Bell, Blackburn, Blaine, Bliss, Samuel D. Burchard, Burleigh, Cabell, Campbell, Cason, Caulfield, Chapin, Conger, Cook, Cowan, Crapo, Darrall, Davis, Durand, Egbert, Ely, Evans, Faulkner, Fort, Foster, Freeman, Garfield, Gause, Gibson, Goode, Goodin, Gunter, Hale, Hancock, Henry R. Harris, John T. Harris, Haymond, Henkle, Abram S. Hewitt, Hoar, Holman, Hopkins, Hoskins, Hunter, Kasson, Kehr, King, Knott, George M. Landers, Lane, Lapham, Lynde, L. A. Mackey, MacDougall, McFarland, McMahon, Meade, Morey, New, Oliver, Payne, Phelps, John F. Philips, Piper, Purman, Rainey, Reagan, John Reilly, James B. Reilly, Rice, William M. Robbins, Roberts, Robinson, Rusk, Sayler, Schumaker, William E. Smith, Sparks, Springer, Strait, Stevenson, Stone, Stowell, Swann, Tarbox, Teese, Terry, Thomas, Throckmorton, Tucker, Van Vorhes, John L. Vance, Waddell, Waldron, Charles C. B. Walker, Gilbert C. Walker, Walling, Ward, Wheeler, Whitehouse, Wigginton, Wike, Alpheus S. Williams, Charles G. Williams, William B. Williams, Willis, Wilshire, Benjamin Wilson, James Wilson, Alan Wood, jr., Fernando Wood, Woodburn, Woodworth, and Young—116.

So the resolution was not agreed to.

During the roll-call the following announcements were made:

Mr. PHILIPS, of Missouri. On this question I am paired with the gentleman from Ohio, Mr. GARFIELD. If he were present he would vote in the affirmative, and I should vote in the negative.

Mr. DURAND. I am paired on this question with my colleague, Mr. CONGER, who is absent by order of the House.

Mr. THROCKMORTON. I am paired with the gentleman from Iowa, Mr. KASSON.

Mr. BAKER, of Indiana. On this question I am paired with my colleague on the committee, the gentleman from Kentucky, Mr. BLACKBURN. If he were present he would vote "no" and I should vote "ay." I desire further to say that my colleagues, Mr. EVANS and Mr. ROBINSON, are absent by leave of the House. If present I think they would vote "ay."

Mr. STOWELL. On this question I am paired with my colleague, Mr. CABELL. If he were present he would vote "no" and I should vote "ay."

Mr. HOSKINS. On this question I am paired with the gentleman from Virginia, Mr. WALKER, who, if present, would vote in the negative, while I should vote in the affirmative.

Mr. PAGE. My colleague, Mr. PIPER, is paired with the gentleman from Nevada, Mr. WOODBURN. My colleague, if present, would vote "no" and Mr. WOODBURN "ay."

Mr. OLIVER. I am paired with the gentleman from Pennsylvania, Mr. HOPKINS, who, if present, would vote "no," while I should "ay."

Mr. VAN VORHES. On this question I am paired with my colleague from Ohio, Mr. VANCE. If he were here he would vote "no" and I should vote "ay."

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I am paired with the gentleman from North Carolina, Mr. WADDELL.

Mr. MACDOUGALL. I am paired upon this question with the gentleman from Virginia, Mr. TERRY. If present he would vote "no" and I should vote "ay."

Mr. YEATES. I am requested by my colleague, Mr. DAVIS, to state that he is paired with the gentleman from Michigan, Mr. W. B. WILLIAMS. My colleague, if present, would vote "no."

Mr. RICE. On this question I am paired with the gentleman from Florida, Mr. PURMAN.

The result of the vote was announced as above stated.

The question then recurred on the second resolution reported by the minority of the committee; which was read, as follows:

Resolved, That Hon. Frank Morey was elected and is entitled to a seat in this House.

The resolution was not agreed to.

The question next recurred on the following resolutions reported from the Committee of Elections:

Resolved, That Frank Morey was not elected and is not entitled to a seat in the House of Representatives of the Forty-fourth Congress from the fifth district of Louisiana.

Resolved, That William B. Spencer was elected and is entitled to a seat in the House of Representatives of the Forty-fourth Congress from the fifth district of Louisiana.

The resolutions were adopted.

Mr. HOUSE moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolutions were adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. DURHAM. I move to take up the bill (H. R. No. 3156) to perfect the revision of the statutes of the United States, which was made the special order for this day.

Mr. PAGE. I move the House adjourn.

The SPEAKER pro tempore, (Mr. SPRINGER in the chair.) The first business in order is the unfinished business of Saturday.

Mr. BANNING. I believe, Mr. Speaker, I am entitled to the floor on the Army bill. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. DURHAM] has a matter of great importance which should be considered at an early day, and I think will take but a few minutes this evening.

Mr. PAGE. The gentleman from Ohio has not the right to yield the floor when I take the floor to move an adjournment. I insist on my motion to adjourn.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The first business in order is the unfinished business of Saturday, on which the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BANNING] is entitled to the floor.

Mr. PAGE My motion is in order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair has not recognized the gentleman from California to make the motion. The gentleman from Ohio has a right to yield the floor, which he has done, to the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. PAGE. I withdraw the motion to adjourn.

Mr. DURHAM. I move to proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 3156) to perfect the revision of the statutes of the United States.

The motion was agreed to.

PROTECTION OF AMERICAN CITIZENS.

The SPEAKER pro tempore, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a letter from the President of the United States, transmitting, in answer to a resolution of the House of the 22d instant, a report of the Secretary of State in reference to the protection of Americans at Constantinople and Smyrna; which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

CHIEF OF ARTILLERY.

The SPEAKER pro tempore also, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting a petition from the officers of the United States artillery, praying for the establishment of the office of a chief of artillery; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

ARMY PROMOTIONS.

The SPEAKER pro tempore also, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, in response to House resolution of March 13, 1876, asking if officers of the Army have been promoted since the 22d day of June, 1874, as provided in section 1204 of the Revised Statutes; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

SIOUX INDIANS.

The SPEAKER pro tempore also, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting copy of a communication from the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, relative to the removal of the Sioux Indians to the Indian Territory; which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Leave of absence, by unanimous consent, was granted in the following cases:

To Mr. FORT for ten days on account of important business.

To Mr. WILSHIRE for twenty days on account of sickness in his family.

To Mr. WAIT for ten days.

To Mr. SWANN, an extension of his present leave until next Saturday.

To Mr. HOPKINS until Friday next.

A. E. ADAMS.

On motion of Mr. WHITE, by unanimous consent, leave was granted for the withdrawal from the files of the House of the papers in the case of A. E. Adams, of Kentucky.

REVISED STATUTES.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Kentucky is entitled to the floor on the bill (H. R. No. 3156) to perfect the revision of the statutes of the United States.

Mr. DURHAM. The bill was recommitted with amendments, and I now report it back from the Committee on the Revision of the Laws.

I will not detain the House but a moment. This bill is the joint work of two committees on the revision of the laws, perfecting the statutes as they were on the 1st day of December, 1873. Out of a very large number of suggestions made from the State, Treasury, War, and other Departments, the two joint committees have agreed upon this bill perfecting the statutes as they were at that time so far as our attention had been called to it. It is simply to correct errors and to perfect the statutes. They have entered upon no new legislation. They have changed no statute, except as they found it on the 1st day of December, 1873. Unless some gentleman has some question to ask I shall demand the previous question.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered.

Mr. HOLMAN. The bill has not yet been read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It will be read if the gentleman desires it.

Mr. HOLMAN. The bill has not been brought prominently to the attention of the House until now. I suggest to the gentleman from Kentucky that inasmuch as a vote is called for on the bill it be postponed until after the reading of the Journal to-morrow morning.

Mr. DURHAM. I have no objection except that there is other business pressing, and we had better get through with it now.

Mr. HOLMAN. I am in the condition of very many gentlemen on the floor, not having read this bill. I discover not only it corrects errors but makes certain additions.

Mr. DURHAM. The gentleman is mistaken.

Mr. HOLMAN. What is the title of the bill?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair understands there is no new legislation in the bill.

Mr. PAGE. With the consent of the gentleman from Kentucky I will now renew my motion to adjourn, as this will come up as unfinished business to-morrow.

Mr. HOLMAN. I ask unanimous consent that, without the reading of this bill, the vote be taken on it immediately after the reading of the Journal to-morrow morning.

Mr. HURLBUT. The adjournment will do that.

Mr. HOLMAN. But the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BANNING] does not want the House to adjourn upon this.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will submit the proposition of the gentleman from Indiana that the reading of the bill be dispensed with, and that the vote be taken thereon to-morrow morning immediately after the reading of the Journal.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

REDUCTION OF THE ARMY.

Mr. BANNING. I believe I am entitled to the floor on the bill for the reduction of the Army, which now comes up as unfinished business. I call up that bill, but yield to my colleague, [Mr. MONROE.]

LOAN OF PIECES OF ARTILLERY.

Mr. MONROE, by unanimous consent, introduced a joint resolution (H. R. No. 119) authorizing the Secretary of War to loan to the authorities of Steubenville, Ohio, two pieces of artillery to be used in celebrating July 4, 1876; which was read a first and second time.

The joint resolution was read. It authorizes the Secretary of War to loan to the city of Steubenville, Ohio, from the most convenient Government arsenal, two pieces of artillery to be used by the authorities of said city in celebrating the Fourth of July, 1876; said artillery to be returned immediately after said celebration at the risk and expense of said city authorities.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

JOHN W. BRIDGELAND.

Mr. BANNING. I yield now to the gentleman from Tennessee, [Mr. CALDWELL.]

Mr. CALDWELL, of Tennessee. I ask unanimous consent to submit the following resolution for present consideration.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the testimony taken by the Committee on Military Affairs, in an investigation in relation to Horace Boughton, be referred, so far as it relates to John W. Bridgeland, at present consul to Havre, France, to the Committee on Expenditures in the State Department, and that said last-named committee be authorized and instructed to send for persons and papers, and investigate fully the matters referred to in said testimony affecting the said Bridgeland and his fitness for the position of consul as aforesaid, and report to this House.

Mr. MACDOUGALL. I object.

DECORATION OF HALL OF REPRESENTATIVES.

Mr. PAGE. I move that the House adjourn, but yield for a moment to the gentleman from New York, [Mr. COX.]

Mr. COX. I simply wish to recall a very pleasing incident. The young ladies of the Franklin school of this city, thirteen in number, emblematic of the thirteen original States, honored the House by decorating it yesterday with flowers. I think the House might recognize an act of grace of that kind by voting them their thanks, and I move that thanks be tendered to the ladies of that school for decorating the House of Representatives.

The motion was unanimously agreed to.

ISSUE OF ARMS FOR GALVESTON ARTILLERY.

Mr. HANCOCK, by unanimous consent, introduced a joint resolution (H. R. No. 120) to authorize the Secretary of War to issue certain arms to the governor of Texas for the use of the Galveston Artillery; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

The motion of Mr. PAGE was agreed to; and accordingly (at five o'clock and twenty-five minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

PETITIONS, ETC.

The following memorials, petitions, and other papers were presented at the Clerk's desk under the rule, and referred as stated:

By Mr. BAGBY: Memorial of 716 citizens of Aurora and Sycamore Counties, Illinois, against the manufacture or sale of intoxicating liquors in the District of Columbia and Territories, to the Committee on Education and Labor.

Also, the petition of 127 citizens of Mercer County, Illinois, for the repeal of the resumption act of January 14, 1875, to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

By Mr. BRIGHT: The petition of the Cumberland Presbyterian church at Fayetteville, Tennessee, to be compensated for damages done their church building by United States soldiers during the late war, to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. CHITTENDEN: The petition of the National Board of Fire Underwriters, for the enlargement of the duties of the Signal Service, to the Committee on Commerce.

By Mr. DAVY: The petition of citizens of Rochester, New York, for the appointment of a commission of inquiry concerning the alcoholic liquor traffic, to the Committee of Ways and Means.

By Mr. GARFIELD: Memorial of Clement Messenger, to be paid $105 by reason of the loss by him by fire of United States notes of that amount, to the Committee of Claims.

By Mr. GOODIN: Petition of a delegation of Cherokee Indians, for an amendment of the pension laws extending the time for the final settlement of the pension claims of Indians, to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. HOLMAN: Papers relating to the claim of Sterling A. Martin, late a private Company I, Thirty-seventh Regiment of Indiana Volunteers, for services rendered by him to the military authorities of the United States at Nashville and Gallatin, Tennessee, in 1862 and 1863, to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. LANE: The petition of A. Goodnough and other citizens of Oregon, for relief against Chinese immigration, to the Committee on Commerce.

Also, the petition of James Barry and other citizens of Oregon, of similar import, to the same committee.

By Mr. LEAVENWORTH: Concurrent resolution of the Legislature of the State of New York, declaring that it is unwise, impolitic, and dangerous at this time of depressed trade and heavy financial burdens for Congress to grant aid in the construction of a railroad line from northeastern Texas to the Pacific Ocean, to the Committee on the Pacific Railroad.

By Mr. MACDOUGALL: The petition of citizens of Cayuga County, New York, for the erection of a court-house and post-office for the use of the United States at Auburn, New York, to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

By Mr. MCFARLAND: The petition of Dr. John F. Rhaton, of Massy Creek, Tennessee, for a rehearing of his claim rejected by the southern claims commission, to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. PARSONS: The petition of Elijah Thurman, late a private Company E, Twenty-eighth Regiment Kentucky Infantry, that he be granted a pension to date from the time of his discharge from the United States Army, to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. REA: Remonstrance of the Saint Joseph (Missouri) Medical Association, against the passage of the bill granting a charter to the Surgical Institute of the District of Columbia, to the Committee for the District of Columbia.

By Mr. THORNBURGH: The petition of R. M. McClung, president Commercial Bank, Knoxville, Tennessee, for payment for a 7.30 note destroyed by fire while in the United States mails, to the Committee of Claims.

IN SENATE.

THURSDAY, June 1, 1876.

Prayer by Rev. P. H. BURGHANETT, of Washington, District of Columbia.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATION.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, in answer to a resolution of April 26, 1876, relative to the cost of the Signal Service Corps and the expediency of transferring the service to the Treasury Department, transmitting a report from the Chief Signal Officer of the Army; which was ordered to lie on the table, and be printed.

RECEIVERS OF NATIONAL BANKS.

The Senate proceeded to consider its amendments to the bill (H. R. No. 2441) authorizing the appointment of receivers of national banks, and for other purposes, disagreed to by the House of Representatives.

On motion of Mr. SHERMAN, it was

Resolved, That the Senate insist upon its amendments disagreed to by the House of Representatives, and agree to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

By unanimous consent, it was Ordered, That the conferees on the part of the Senate be appointed by the President pro tempore.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore appointed Mr. SHERMAN, Mr. LOGAN, and Mr. KERNAN.

Mr. KERNAN subsequently said: I shall not be able, on account of other engagements, to act on the committee of conference appointed this morning. I beg to be excused, and ask that another be appointed in my place.

By unanimous consent Mr. KERNAN was excused, and the President pro tempore appointed Mr. BAYARD to fill the vacancy.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The following bills from the House of Representatives were severally read twice by their titles, and referred as indicated below:

The bill (H. R. No. 3590) to change the name of the scow-schooner J. L. Quimby to that of Perry G. Walker—to the Committee on Commerce.

The bill (H. R. No. 3585) for the relief of Joshua C. Stoddard—to the Committee on Patents.

The bill (H. R. No. 2552) to reduce the expenditures for public advertising in the District of Columbia—to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

The bill (H. R. No. 3625) providing for the sale of the Osage ceded lands in Kansas to actual settlers—to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

The following bills from the House of Representatives were severally read twice by their titles, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary:

A bill (H. R. No. 3116) providing for the payment of judgments of the court of commissioners of Alabama claims; and

A bill (H. R. No. 3589) to amend section 840 of chapter 16, title 13, Revised Statutes of the United States.

The following bills from the House of Representatives were severally read twice by their titles, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands:

A bill (H. R. No. 2258) for the relief of Henry Gee, of the State of Florida; and

A bill (H. R. No. 3573) to amend an act for the relief of certain settlers on the public lands, approved December 28, 1874.

The following bills from the House of Representatives were severally read twice by their titles, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs:

A bill (H. R. No. 735) for the relief of Philip Pendleton;

A bill (H. R. No. 1183) for the relief of David W. Stockstill, of Sidney, Ohio; and

A bill (H. R. No. 2019) for the relief of Edwin Morgan, late captain of Company G, Seventy-seventh Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry.

The following bills from the House of Representatives were severally read twice by their titles, and referred to the Committee on Claims:

A bill (H. R. No. 429) for the relief of Charles C. Campbell, of Washington County, Virginia;

A bill (H. R. No. 890) for the relief of Randall Brown, of Nashville, Tennessee;

A bill (H. R. No. 1219) for the relief of D. P. Rowe and Brown & Crowell, of Morristown, Tennessee;

A bill (H. R. No. 2691) for the allowance of certain claims reported by the accounting officers of the Treasury Department;

A bill (H. R. No. 3186) for the relief of Margaret Janet Burleson;

A bill (H. R. No. 3273) for the relief of Mrs. Ellen J. Brosman; and

A bill (H. R. No. 3359) making appropriations for the payment of claims reported allowed by the commissioners of claims under the act of Congress of March 3, 1871, and for other purposes.

The following bills from the House of Representatives were severally read twice by their titles and referred to the Committee on Pensions:

A bill (H. R. No. 2242) granting a pension to George McColly;

A bill (H. R. No. 3184) granting a pension to Emerick W. Hansell;

A bill (H. R. No. 3277) granting a pension to Kate Louise Roy;

A bill (H. R. No. 3278) granting a pension to Ellen Fechtel;

A bill (H. R. No. 3279) granting a pension to Benjamin C. Webster;

A bill (H. R. No. 3281) granting a pension to Hannah A. Wood; and

A bill (H. R. No. 3282) granting a pension to Sarah McCooey.

JOSEPH ANDERSON.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Petitions and memorials are now in order.

Mr. COOPER. I present the petition of Joseph Anderson, of Nashville, Tennessee, praying compensation for certain lumber furnished the Quartermaster's Department of the United States Army, at Nashville, in February, 1862, to be referred to the Committee on Claims; and in this connection I move that the bill (H. R. No. 2693) for the relief of Joseph Anderson, of Nashville, Tennessee, which has been reported adversely from the Committee on Claims, be recommitted to that committee.

Mr. WRIGHT. I understand the Senator from Tennessee now presents additional testimony in that case?

Mr. COOPER. I present a new petition with new evidence. The bill is on the Calendar with the adverse report of the committee.

Mr. WRIGHT. I suppose the order to recommit had better be made.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The petition now presented will be referred to the Committee on Claims, and the bill will be taken from the Calendar and recommitted to that committee, if there be no objection. The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. KEY presented the petition and papers of James T. Shelley, of Boone County, Tennessee, late colonel of the Fifth Regiment of Tennessee Volunteer Infantry, praying to be re-imbursed certain moneys expended in recruiting and organizing his regiment; which were referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. CONKLING. I present the petition of a large number of merchants, bankers, traders, manufacturers, and others, 200 in number, of the State of New York, favoring the passage of the bill protecting trade-marks; and I move its reference to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. SHERMAN presented the petition of Burgert & Hart and others, of Toledo, Ohio, praying for the repeal of the bankrupt law; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. RANSOM presented the petition of F. Fraley, president of the Schuylkill Navigation Company, and others, of Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, praying for an increased appropriation for the improvement of the navigation of the Schuylkill River; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. SARGENT. A petition has already been received and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, purporting to come from officers of the Navy, Army, and Marine Corps, asking for the passage of a law recognizing assignments of pay due to officers. I present now a memorial which remonstrates against the passage of such a law and shows its inconvenience, and which is signed by the disbursing clerks of the various Departments. I move that it be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

The motion was agreed to.

CATHARINE A. WINSLOW.

Mr. ALLISON. I am directed by the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 599) granting a pension to Catharine A. Winslow, widow of the late Rear-Admiral John A. Winslow, to report it favorably.

Mr. BOUTWELL. I think I may safely ask the Senate to act upon the bill at the present time. As I understand it there is a unanimous report of the committee in favor of the widow of Admiral Winslow, who commanded the Kearsarge in the contest with the Alabama.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It authorizes the Secretary of the Interior to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension-laws, the name of Mrs. Catharine A. Winslow, widow of John A. Winslow, late rear-admiral United States Navy, and to pay her a pension at the rate of $50 a month from and after the passage of the act.

Mr. INGALLS. The bill should be amended by the addition of a clause to the effect that this pension shall be in lieu of the one now received by her. She is now on the pension-roll at $30 per month.

Mr. ALLISON. I move to add at the end of the bill:

The pension hereby granted to be in lieu of the pension which she now receives.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. ALLISON, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 216) granting a pension to Henry Schnetberg, of Indiana, Pennsylvania, submitted an adverse report thereon; which was ordered to be printed, and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 2288) granting a pension to Fannie S. White, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon; which was ordered to be printed.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the petition of Stillman E. Dix, late a private in Company H, Thirty-seventh Massachusetts Volunteers, praying to be allowed a pension, submitted a report accompanied by a bill (S. No. 882) granting a pension to Stillman E. Dix, of Hampton, Virginia.

The bill was read and passed to the second reading, and the report was ordered to be printed.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the petition of William H. Oliver, late a private of Company D, Fifth Regiment Tennessee Infantry, submitted a report accompanied by a bill (S. No. 883) granting a pension to William H. Oliver, of Sweet Water, Tennessee.

The bill was read and passed to the second reading, and the report was ordered to be printed.

Mr. INGALLS, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the petition of James Flanagan, late a private of Company I, First United States Artillery, praying to be allowed an increase of pension, asked to be discharged from its further consideration; which was agreed to.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 2465) granting a pension to Emily Schwartz, reported adversely thereon; and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 2705) granting a pension to Sarah Buery, submitted an adverse report thereon; which was ordered to be printed, and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 3179) granting a pension to Thomas F. Wildes, late lieutenant-colonel One hundred and eighteenth Regiment Ohio Volunteers, reported it without amendment.

Mr. McDONALD, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 2301) granting a pension to Mary B. Hook, reported it without amendment, the committee adopting the report of the House committee.

Mr. McMILLAN, from the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 2252) to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to change the name of the steamboat Hiram Wood, reported it without amendment.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin, from the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 2140) establishing Cheboygan, in the State of Michigan, a port of delivery, reported it with an amendment.

He also, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the petition of John W. Edwards, late captain Company A, Third Regiment North Carolina Mounted Infantry, praying to be reimbursed certain moneys expended by him for supplies purchased for United States troops recruited by him in Tennessee and North Carolina in 1863 and 1864, submitted an adverse report thereon; which was agreed to, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. WINDOM. I am instructed by the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 2473) to authorize claimants upon even-numbered sections of land within the twenty-mile limits of the Northern Pacific Railroad to make proof and payment for their claims at the ordinary minimum rate of $1.25 per acre, to report it back, without amendment, and recommend its passage. I ask the indulgence of the Senate for its present consideration. I am sure there will be no objection to the passage of the bill at this time.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I must object until morning business is through, in order to give us a chance to make some reports on this side of the Chamber.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Delaware objects, and the bill will be placed upon the Calendar.

Mr. CONKLING. I am directed by the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 863) to change the name of the steamship City of Brashear to Lone Star, to report the same favorably; and, as it would take but a moment, at the request of a Senator interested in the bill, I ask that it may be considered now.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I object.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Delaware objects, and the bill will be placed upon the Calendar.

Mr. CONKLING, from the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the petition of officers of the New York Harbor Towing Company, reported a bill (S. No. 884) to authorize the change of name of the steamboat Peter Crary to that of Joseph L. Chapman; which was read and passed to the second reading.

Mr. CONKLING, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 1803) to provide for the appointment of commissioners for taking affidavits, &c., for the courts of the United States, reported it with an amendment.

Mr. SAULSBURY, from the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 341) for the relief of John Wightman, a contractor for carrying the mail in Pennsylvania, submitted an adverse report thereon; which was ordered to be printed, and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

Mr. WRIGHT, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 650) for the relief of James Allender, of Preston County, West Virginia, reported it with amendments.

Mr. WEST. The Senator from Delaware, who interposed an objection to the passage of the bill reported by the chairman of the Committee on Commerce, simply changing the name of a steamboat, for a moment or so to enable him to submit some morning business, will now withdraw his objection, I presume, as he has presented a report from a committee. I should like to call up the bill. It will take but a moment to pass the bill.

Mr. WINDOM. My bill was objected to first. It would take only a moment, too.

Mr. WRIGHT. I ask Senators to allow me first to get through with the reports I have to make.

Mr. WEST. Certainly; I will yield for morning business.

Mr. WRIGHT, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the memorial of S. H. Kettlewell, praying compensation for services and sufferings on the Isthmus of Darien ship-canal expedition No. 1, submitted an adverse report thereon; which was agreed to, and ordered to be printed.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the petition of Minerva Tilley, praying compensation for services rendered by her late husband, Durell Tilley, formerly justice of the peace of Orange County, North Carolina, in administering the amnesty oath under Governor Holden, submitted an adverse report thereon; which was agreed to, and ordered to be printed.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 406) for the relief of Harden W. Reynolds, submitted an adverse report thereon; which was ordered to be printed, and the bill was rejected.

CHANGE OF NAME OF STEAMSHIP.

Mr. WEST. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. No. 863) to change the name of the steamship City of Brashear to Lone Star.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. CLAYTON asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 885) relating to civil appointments in the Executive Departments of the Government; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Civil Service and Retrenchment, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. DAVIS asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 886) granting a pension to Margaret Kenah; which was read twice by its title, and, together with the accompanying petition, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. INGALLS (by request) asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 887) authorizing the construction of bridges over the Kill von Kull by the Staten Island and New Jersey Suspension Bridge and Railroad Company; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. CRAGIN (by request) asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 888) to authorize the building of a military, postal, and freight railway from Lewes, in the State of Delaware, to the cities of Washington, Baltimore, Philadelphia, and New York; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Railroads, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. WEST asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 889) to amend section 1212 of the Revised Statutes; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

PAPERS WITHDRAWN.

On motion of Mr. INGALLS, it was Ordered, That John Hildreth have leave to withdraw his petition and papers from the files of the Senate.

G. B. TYLER AND E. H. LUCKETT.

Mr. McCREERY submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Senate be directed to present to the Secretary of State the bill entitled "An act for the relief of G. B. Tyler and E. H. Luckett, assignees of William T. Cheatham," together with the certificates of the Secretary of the Senate and the Clerk of the House of Representatives showing that the said act was passed by a vote of two-thirds of both Houses of Congress, after the same had been returned to the Senate by the President with his objections, and after the reconsideration of said act by both Houses of Congress in accordance with the Constitution.

PARIS INTERNATIONAL EXPOSITION OF 1878.

Mr. CAMERON, of Pennsylvania. I desire to present a letter from the Secretary of State, transmitting a letter from the legation of France, which I ask to have read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, May 29, 1876.

SIR: I have the honor to transmit herewith a translation of a note dated the 20th instant which has been received from the French minister at this capital, announcing the institution of measures by the French government for a universal exhibition to be held in Paris in the year 1878, and inviting the co-operation of the United States in the proposed undertaking.

I have the honor to be, sir, your obedient servant,

HAMILTON FISH.

Hon. SIMON CAMERON,
Chairman Committee on Foreign Relations, United States Senate.

[Inclosure.]

Mr. Bartholdi to Mr. Fish, May 20, 1876.

LEGATION OF FRANCE IN THE UNITED STATES,
Washington, May 20, 1876.

MR. SECRETARY OF STATE: By two decrees, dated respectively the 4th and 13th of April last, the President of the Republic decided that a universal exhibition of productions of agriculture, industry, and the fine arts should be open at Paris on the 1st day of May, 1878, and closed on the 31st of October of the same year.

The superior commission for international exhibitions, which is attached to the ministry of agriculture and commerce, has been instructed to make arrangements for the exhibition of 1878 and to decide upon the conditions on which goods sent for exhibition shall be received.

As soon as the regulations and the programme which the commission is now preparing shall have been issued, I shall transmit copies thereof to your excellency; but I hereby notify your excellency, by order of my government, of the opening of this new international exhibition, and through your mediation officially invite the Government of the United States to be pleased to lend its valuable co-operation.

My government feels confident that the appeal which it addresses to all governments will be heard. It is convinced that all will respond with sympathy, realizing as they do the advantages of these great enterprises, through which nations form new bonds and learn mutually useful lessons, thus insuring the development of their prosperity by labor and peace.

Be pleased to accept, Mr. Secretary of State, the assurances of my very high consideration.

A. BARTHOLDI.

His Excellency HAMILTON FISH,
Secretary of State.

Mr. CAMERON, of Pennsylvania. I move that the letters be printed and referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

The motion was agreed to.

COURTS IN ARKANSAS.

Mr. CLAYTON. If there is no further morning business, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. N. 155) to amend sections 533, 556, and 572 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, reported from the Committee on the Judiciary.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill amends sections 533 as to the boundaries of the Arkansas judicial districts and section 536 as to the clerks of the courts in the eastern district of Arkansas. It also amends section 572.

The bill was reported from the Committee on the Judiciary with an amendment in line 20 after the words "that section 572 be" to strike out the following words:

amended so as to read as follows:

SEC. 572. In the eastern district of Arkansas, at Little Rock, on the second Monday in April and October, and at Helena on the second Monday in March and September.

In the western district of Arkansas, at Fort Smith, on the first Monday in February, May, August, and November.

And in lieu thereof to insert:

so amended as to provide for the holding of the regular terms of court in the eastern and western districts of Arkansas, as follows:

In the eastern district of Arkansas, at Little Rock, on the first Monday in April and October, and at Helena on the second Monday in March and October.

In the western district of Arkansas, at Fort Smith, on the first Monday in February, May, August, and November.

That section 571 be amended so as to read as follows:

"SEC. 571. The district courts for the western district of Arkansas, the eastern district of Arkansas at Helena, the northern district of Mississippi, the western district of South Carolina, and the district of West Virginia shall have, in addition to the ordinary jurisdiction of district courts, jurisdiction of all causes, except appeals and writs of error, which are cognizable in a circuit court, and shall proceed therein in the same manner as a circuit court."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, and read the third time.

Mr. WRIGHT. I wish to suggest to my friend from Wisconsin [Mr. HOWE] who reported the bill, and to my friend from Arkansas also, that the title of the bill ought to be amended. As it is, it merely refers to the sections without designation.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair understands there is an amendment of the title.

The bill was passed.

The committee proposed to amend the title so as to read:

To amend sections 533, 556, 571, and 572 of the Revised Statutes of the United States.

Mr. WRIGHT. The title ought to indicate what the subject-matter of the bill is: that it relates to courts in the district of Arkansas.

Mr. HOWE. There is no sort of objection to that amendment.

Mr. WRIGHT. It has been usual, I will suggest to the Senator from Wisconsin, to thus amend the titles of bills when they refer to sections of the Revised Statutes. I move to insert at the end of the title the words:

Relating to courts in Arkansas.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The title will be amended as indicated.

PURCHASES AT DIRECT-TAX SALES.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. I move to take up Senate bill No. 530, reported by the Committee on Finance.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill (S. No. 530) to re-imburse purchasers at direct-tax sales in Arkansas declared illegal by United States courts in consequence of a defective board of commissioners was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported by the Committee on Finance with an amendment, which was in line 12 after the word "their" and before the word "assigns," to insert "legal representatives or;" and in line 19, between the words "their" and "assigns," to insert the words "legal representatives or."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WITHERS. Is there no report accompanying that bill or explanation to be given? I cannot understand it from the mere reading of the bill.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. I will state that the necessity for the bill arises in consequence of the Supreme Court having decided that the board of assessors were not legally constituted, and therefore that the whole proceedings in the tax sales have become void, and the party who purchased and paid over the money has been without his money for a long series of years. It is deemed just and proper that the money should be refunded at least to the party who has no land to show for the amount of money that has been paid.

Mr. WITHERS. I inquire whether it would not be practicable by some action of the United States to correct the irregularity complained of and confirm the title to the land?

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. No, sir; it is impossible.

Mr. WITHERS. I would also inquire, while I am up, why it is that in this case provision is made that interest be allowed, which is not the case in other instances?

Mr. SHERMAN. That is stricken out.

Mr. INGALLS. What is the amount of money involved?

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. About $10,000. I desire to say that there was an amendment striking out the interest. I do not quite understand whether it has been read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is informed there is no such amendment.

Mr. SHERMAN. The amendment was reported; that clause was marked to be stricken out.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. That was the intention of the committee. I move to strike out the following words, commencing in line 12, in accordance with the action of the committee:

Together with interest at 6 per cent. per annum from the date of the decree of the court depriving the purchaser of his possession of the property, or from the time the party claiming ownership took the possession of the property from the purchasers at the tax sale, in cases where no decree or judgment was made.

Mr. WRIGHT. As I remember the reading of the bill it is confined to sales in the State of Arkansas.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. Yes.

Mr. WRIGHT. I desire to inquire whether there is any difficulty in making this a general bill, or whether there are circumstances connected with the sales in Arkansas that render it necessary to confine the bill to those sales; and therefore why the bill has not been made general? I remember very well that numberless cases of this kind have been before the Committee on Finance and also the Committee on Claims from other States as well as Arkansas. I remember several cases from the State of Virginia; and it seems to me if it can be done the bill ought to be made general.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. I do not think it would be entirely safe to make it a general bill. This case is a very clear one, and has been adjudicated by the Supreme Court. I know of no other of exactly a similar character.

Mr. SHERMAN. My attention has been called to the latter clause of the bill. I ask that the last clause be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

With the cost thereon, so rendered against them, together with such other necessary expenses as have been paid by them in defending their titles to the property so purchased at direct-tax sales.

Mr. SHERMAN. I think the bill had better be laid aside. I think there is a provision in that last clause that will be general and applicable to other cases.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. I ask to have the bill withdrawn. I think there was a mistake on the part of the clerk in reporting the wrong bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be withdrawn if there be no objection.

CHARLES B. VARNEY.

Mr. WRIGHT. I ask for the consideration of a little bill (S. No. 808) for the relief of Charles B. Varney, of Portland, Maine.

There being no objection, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It directs the Secretary of the Treasury to pay to Charles B. Varney, of Portland, Maine, $200 as compensation for the use and occupancy of a certain piece of land situated in the city of Portland, belonging to Varney, by the United States, during the years 1867, 1868, and a part of 1869.

Mr. SARGENT. Is there a report accompanying the bill?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There is. The report will be read if the Senator desires it.

Mr. SARGENT. I should like to hear the report or some explanation of the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The report will be read.

Mr. WRIGHT. Perhaps I can save time by stating to the Senator from California that there is no dispute but that ground was used and occupied by the United States at the time they were erecting the Government buildings at Portland, Maine, and for three years. The testimony is conclusive that it was worth very much more than $200; and letters are on file, recommendations from officers in charge of the work and also of the Supervising Architect, showing that $200 is a very small compensation for the use of the ground. The reason the payment was not made at the time was that the person who owned the property was absent for some time and did not return until the whole sum was covered into the Treasury, and it is too late now to get it there.

Mr. SARGENT. Is there any question about the title?

Mr. WRIGHT. None at all. It is for the mere use of the ground.

Mr. HAMLIN. I will add that if they had the funds in the Department they would have paid it without sending the party here.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

OTOE AND MISSOURIA INDIANS.

Mr. INGALLS. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate bill No. 779.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill (S. No. 779) to provide for the sale of the reservation of the confederated Otoe and Missouria Indians to the States of Kansas and Nebraska was read the second time, and considered as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. MITCHELL. I desire to inquire of the Senator from Kansas what reservation this has reference to?

Mr. INGALLS. The reservation of the confederated Otoe and Missouria tribe of Indians in the States of Kansas and Nebraska.

Mr. MITCHELL. Does it provide for their removal without their consent?

Mr. INGALLS. No, sir; it provides for their consent being expressed in open council.

Mr. MITCHELL. About how many of these Indians are there?

Mr. INGALLS. The Senator from Nebraska can answer the Senator.

Mr. PADDOCK. I do not recollect the exact number of the tribe; I think about six hundred. But, whatever may be the number, it is a very small tribe; and I desire to state, moreover, for the information of the Senator from Oregon and of the Senate generally, that the chiefs and head-men of the tribe have petitioned almost unanimously for the privilege of disposing of this reservation which they now occupy in the States of Kansas and Nebraska. It is a very large tract of land, as I recollect, about one hundred and sixty thousand acres, in one of the most fertile and fruitful districts in those States. It will sell for a very large sum of money, and they can purchase a smaller one in the Indian Territory, which will make them an acceptable home, for a very small sum.

Mr. INGALLS. The Senator from Nebraska is mistaken about the number of acres in the reservation. It is 85,680 acres.

Mr. PADDOCK. That is a mistake. It has a much larger area than my friend names. I know that the west half of it, which they proposed in the first instance to sell, embraces fully 80,000 acres. At all events the Indians have expressed their desire to sell the reservation and go into the Indian Territory where they can procure a reservation sufficiently large for a much less sum of money, leaving to them a large balance with which they may be able to maintain themselves and to make improvements in their new homes.

But, sir, in addition to this fact it will be seen by a reference to the bill itself that it definitely provides that nothing whatever shall be done in respect to the disposition of the reservation until the Indians, all of them, in open council, shall have signified their willingness—their desire—that it shall be done. The bill is very carefully guarded, perhaps more so than any bill that has ever been proposed for such a purpose. The citizens of Kansas and Nebraska are deeply interested in its passage. In fact, sir, the States in which it is situated and all the citizens thereof, as well as the Indians themselves, are to be greatly benefited by the measure. Indeed, it will be a most desirable consummation for all the parties in interest if the Indians shall be permitted to sell the reservation and it can be placed in possession of actual settlers. Moreover, every consideration of economy demands their removal.

Mr. THURMAN. I did not quite catch what the Senator said as to the place to which these Indians wish to go.

Mr. PADDOCK. They wish to go to the Indian Territory south of Kansas, where the Government is making an effort to congregate all the Indians.

Mr. THURMAN. On a Government reservation?

Mr. PADDOCK. It is a territory which has been set aside, as I understand, exclusively for Indian occupation, where it is to be hoped all may be induced to go at an early day. The Senator from Kansas who reported the bill knows more about the condition of that country than I do, and I ask him for such information as he possesses in regard to it, for the benefit of the Senate.

Mr. INGALLS. With the consent of the Senator from Nebraska I will state that under an arrangement with the Cherokees a large portion of their reservation in the Indian Territory west of the ninety-sixth meridian was set apart to be dedicated by the United States as homes for friendly tribes of Indians. The fourth section of this bill provides that out of the fund derived from the sale of this reservation a portion shall be expended in removing the Indians to the Indian Territory, procuring a reservation for their use, and providing thereon homes and means of support.

Mr. COCKRELL. Do they have to buy another reservation?

Mr. PADDOCK. They will be required to buy another reservation with the proceeds from the sales of the one they now occupy, but they will be able to sell their present reservation, perhaps, at an average of from $5 to $10 per acre, and they can buy the other at possibly a dollar and a quarter an acre or even less. There are not more than six hundred of these Indians at the most.

Mr. INGALLS. Four hundred and fifty-seven.

Mr. PADDOCK. Four hundred and fifty-seven, the Senator from Kansas informs me. It is a manifest absurdity that four hundred and fifty-seven Indians, when they desire to go upon a smaller reservation, should be compelled to remain upon one vastly too large, utterly useless to them, and an obstacle in the way of the settlement and development of that section. I think the reservation contains about one hundred and sixty thousand acres—I am sure my friend from Kansas in his statement of the area of the reservation has made a mistake in the figures, it certainly contains twice the number of acres he named—at any rate, sir, a reservation of ten or twenty thousand acres will be sufficiently large for this tribe.

Mr. DAWES. I inquire of the Senator from Nebraska if he understands that those who have the title to this Indian territory can dispose of it, can convey a title to these Indians?

Mr. PADDOCK. I do so understand. Moreover, I would say that this measure is sanctioned by the Interior Department. They are not only willing that these Indians should go, but are anxious that all others in that part of the West should go to that Territory.

Mr. DAWES. I see it is very desirable to get them, if possible, on this reservation in the Indian Territory, and my fear lest they should go somewhere else with this money and squander it led me to make the inquiry. Would it not be a good plan, I suggest to the Senator from Nebraska, to provide that the Interior Department or some officer of the Government should effect the transfer, so that the money itself when it is paid should not be squandered, and they left without a home and without their money? Is it not practicable to incorporate such an idea as that into the bill? I only make the suggestion because we know the Indians are proverbially improvident. All I desire to say is that I fear that when they dispose of this land and get the money they themselves will forget to go and purchase themselves another home until they tarry awhile by the way and the money will be lost.

Mr. INGALLS. The Senator from Massachusetts misunderstands the terms of the bill. The sale is to be exclusively under the control and direction of the Interior Department and of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, and the proceeds of the sale of their lands are to "be placed to the credit of said Indians in the Treasury of the United States and bear interest at the rate of 5 per cent. per annum," and to be disbursed exclusively under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, with the approval of the President.

Mr. DAWES. That was the very inquiry I was making. Is it to be so placed that the Indians cannot take it themselves and waste it?

Mr. INGALLS. They are to have no control over it whatever, except through the organized Department of the Government.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I desire to say a single word only. This bill is a very carefully guarded bill; it is a very satisfactory bill to the settlers in the neighborhood of this reservation and to the Indians themselves and to the Interior Department, who have the control of those Indians; and I trust there will be no objection to the passage of the bill at this time.

Mr. SHERMAN. I should like to strike out the words "if practicable" in section 3, line 5. They make an obscurity in the construction of the law.

Mr. INGALLS. I have no objection.

Mr. PADDOCK. The amendment will be a good one.

Mr. SHERMAN. I move an amendment to strike out the words.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

IMPEACHMENT OF W. W. BELKNAP.

At one o'clock p. m. the managers on the part of the House of Representatives (with the exception of Mr. LAPHAM and Mr. HOAR) appeared and were conducted to the seats provided for them.

The respondent appeared with his counsel Mr. Carpenter.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Pursuant to order, legislative and executive business will be suspended and the Senate will proceed to the consideration of the articles of impeachment exhibited by the House of Representatives against William W. Belknap, late Secretary of War. The Secretary will notify the House of Representatives that the Senate is ready to proceed in the trial, the managers being present.

The Senate then proceeded to the trial of the impeachment of William W. Belknap, late Secretary of War.

The Senate sitting for the trial of the impeachment of William W. Belknap having adjourned then resumed its LEGISLATIVE SESSION.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senate resumes its legislative session.

EXECUTIVE BUSINESS.

Mr. CAMERON, of Pennsylvania. I move that the Senate now proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. WITHERS. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. CAMERON, of Pennsylvania. I trust the Senator from Virginia will not insist upon his call for the yeas and nays. Let us go into executive session. There is business of importance to be done.

Mr. WITHERS. I wish to proceed with legislative business. There will be ample time after that for an executive session.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is not debatable.

Mr. CAMERON, of Pennsylvania. I appeal to the Senator.

Mr. WITHERS. I cannot stand an appeal, and with the consent of the Senate I will withdraw the call for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to withdrawing the call for the yeas and nays? The Chair hears none, and the question is on the motion of the Senator from Pennsylvania that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After thirty-two minutes spent in executive session the doors were re-opened.

SOLDIERS' REUNION AT CALDWELL.

Mr. LOGAN. I am directed by the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the joint resolution (H. R. No. 115) granting the use of artillery, blankets, &c., at the national soldiers' reunion at Caldwell, Ohio, to report it back without amendment. I ask for its present consideration.

By unanimous consent, the joint resolution was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It authorizes the Secretary of War to send, from some convenient Government arsenal, to be used at the national soldiers' reunion at Caldwell, Ohio, at its next meeting, four pieces of artillery, and such blankets and muskets and blank cartridges as can be spared; the cannon, blankets, and muskets to be returned after the meeting.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PUBLIC BUILDINGS AT DOVER, DELAWARE.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate bill No. 558.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill (S. No. 558) making a further appropriation for the erection of Government buildings in Dover, Delaware, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It appropriates $8,500, in addition to appropriations heretofore made for the erection of a post-office in Dover, Delaware, for the purpose of adding an additional story to the building, to be used for United States court-rooms and other Government offices.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds with an amendment in line 3, to strike out "$8,500" and insert "$15,000;" so as to read:

That the sum of $15,000, in addition to appropriations heretofore made, &c.

Mr. SAULSBURY. All I will say upon the amendment is that this sum was based upon the estimates and recommendation of the Supervising Architect.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LEGISLATIVE, ETC., APPROPRIATION BILL.

Several Senators addressed the Chair.

Mr. WITHERS. The Senator from Kansas [Mr. INGALLS] gave notice that he would move to proceed to the consideration of unobjected bills on the Calendar. I will make that motion if he does not do so.

Mr. INGALLS. I have agreed to yield to the Senator from Maine [Mr. MORRILL] simply for the purpose of taking up the general legislative appropriation bill, with the understanding that when it is before the Senate he will waive it informally.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. My object is to take the bill up now so as to save time to-morrow. I do not desire to have it considered to-day. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 2571) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1877, and for other purposes, with a view to leaving it the unfinished business for to-morrow at one o'clock.

The motion was agreed to.

THE CALENDAR.

Mr. WITHERS. I move to take up the Calendar for the consideration of unobjected cases.

Mr. SARGENT. The effect of taking up the Calendar for unobjected cases will not be to displace the legislative bill, I understand.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Not at all.

Mr. SARGENT. Very well.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is understood that the legislative bill will be considered to-morrow at one o'clock. The Calendar will be suspended when we adjourn, by common consent. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Virginia, that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the Calendar for unobjected cases.

The motion was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The first bill on the Calendar at the point where its consideration was last suspended will be reported.

FANNIE E. RECORDS.

The first bill was the bill (H. R. No. 1811) granting a pension to Fannie E. Records.

Mr. WITHERS. This bill was reported adversely from the Committee on Pensions and should be postponed indefinitely.

Mr. INGALLS. Let it go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

YOUNG MEN'S CHRISTIAN ASSOCIATION JOINT-STOCK COMPANY.

The next bill on the Calendar was the bill (S. No. 634) to amend an act entitled "An act to incorporate the joint-stock company of the Young Men's Christian Association of Washington," approved March 2, 1867; which was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

Section 1 empowers the joint-stock company of the Young Men's Christian Association to borrow, on the security of the real estate now owned by it in square No. 407 in the city of Washington, not exceeding the sum of $33,000, at a lawful rate of interest, for the purpose of paying off the debt now due from the company to the Freedman's Savings and Trust Company, and to secure which indebtedness the Freedman's Savings and Trust Company now holds a deed of trust upon said real estate, the validity of which is doubted and is in dispute.

Section 2, in order to secure the amount authorized to be borrowed by the preceding section, authorizes the joint-stock company to execute and deliver its note for the amount borrowed, bearing such lawful rate of interest and payable at such time, principal and interest, as may be agreed upon between it and the persons from whom it may borrow the money, and, to secure the payment of such note and interest, to convey the property to two trustees in fee simple, with power in the trustees, or the survivor of them, to sell the property at public auction in case of default made in the payment of the note, or any installment of interest due thereon, upon such terms and after such notice by advertisement as the trustees, or the survivor of them, may deem best for the interest of all parties concerned, and to convey the same to the purchaser in fee simple.

The bill was reported from the Committee on the District of Columbia with an amendment to strike out lines 16 to 19 inclusive of section 1, in the following words:

And to secure which said indebtedness the said Freedman's Savings and Trust Company now holds a deed of trust upon said real estate, the validity of which is doubted and is in dispute.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

TRANSFER OF INDIAN TRUST FUNDS.

The next bill on the Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 2447) transferring the custody of certain Indian trust funds; which was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It provides that all stocks, bonds, or other securities or evidences of indebtedness now held by the Secretary of the Interior in trust for the benefit of certain Indian tribes shall, within thirty days, be transferred to the Treasurer of the United States, who shall become the custodian thereof. The Treasurer is to collect all interest falling due on these bonds, stocks, &c., and deposit the same in the Treasury of the United States, and to issue certificates of deposit therefor, in favor of the Secretary of the Interior, as trustee for various Indian tribes. The Treasurer of the United States is also to become the custodian of all bonds and stocks which may be purchased for the benefit of any Indian tribe or tribes after the transfer of funds herein authorized, and make all purchases and sales of bonds and stocks authorized by treaty stipulations or by acts of Congress when requested so to do by the Secretary of the Interior. Nothing in the act is in any manner to impair or affect the supervisory and appellate powers and duties in regard to Indian affairs which may now be vested in the Secretary of the Interior as trustee for various Indian tribes, except as to the custody of the bonds and the collection of interest thereon as before mentioned.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MARY P. ABEEL.

The next bill on the Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 1992) granting an additional pension to Mary P. Abeel; which was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It authorizes the Secretary of the Interior to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Mary P. Abeel, widow of James S. Abeel, late ordnance-storekeeper in the United States Army, and to pay her a pension at the rate of $20 per month as though her husband had held the rank of captain in the Army of the United States. The act is to take effect from its passage, and the pension granted by it is to be in lieu of that which she is now receiving.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

FRANCIS BERNARD.

The next bill on the Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 42) granting a pension to Francis Bernard; which was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It authorizes the Secretary of the Interior to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Francis Bernard, late a private in Company K of the Forty-ninth Regiment Ohio Volunteers.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JOHN H. GARRISON.

The next bill on the Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 2291) granting a pension to John H. Garrison, which was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It authorizes the Secretary of the Interior to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of John H. Garrison, late a corporal in Company B, One hundred and thirty-ninth Regiment of New York Volunteers.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MARTIN KELLY.

The next bill on the Calendar was the bill (S. No. 539) to provide for an increase of pension in favor of Martin Kelly; which was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It authorizes the Commissioner of Pensions to allow Martin Kelly (case No. 15802, Pension Office) an increase of pension from $18 to $24 a month, for a disability equivalent to the loss of an arm.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Pensions with an amendment, to insert at the end of the bill the words, "from and after the passage of this act."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JOHN M'INTIRE.

The next bill on the Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 2306) granting a pension to John McIntire; which was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It authorizes the Secretary of the Interior to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of John McIntire, private soldier in Company A, Fourteenth Regiment Kentucky Cavalry.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JAMES H. WOODARD.

The next bill on the Calendar was the bill (S. No. 118) granting a pension to James H. Woodard; which was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It is a direction to the Secretary of the Interior to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions of the pension laws, the name of James H. Woodard, late hospital steward of the Eighty-sixth Regiment of Indiana Volunteers, (who now draws a pension of $8 per month from July 12, 1875,) to date from the 7th of March, 1864, to the 12th of July, 1875, at the rate of $8 per month.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CHARLES E. HEDGES.

The next bill on the Calendar was the bill (S. No. 294) for the relief of Charles E. Hedges.

Mr. COCKRELL. In regard to that bill—I do not see here the Senator from Iowa who introduced it—that bill was before the Committee on Claims. I think the Senator from Iowa consented that it might be recommitted to the committee.

Mr. WRIGHT. I suggest to the Senator from Missouri that my colleague, who introduced the bill, is about the building, and I have sent for him. I suggest that it be passed over informally until he comes in, so that it shall not lose its place on the Calendar.

Mr. COCKRELL. I object to the bill, because I do not think the Government has anything to do with it at all, and there is plenty of funds belonging to the Indians out of which the claim ought to be paid.

Mr. WRIGHT. Let it be passed over informally.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

HORACE L. EMERY.

The next bill on the Calendar was the bill (S. No. 675) to enable Horace L. Emery to make an application to the Commissioner of Patents for the extension of letters-patent for improvement in cotton-ginning machines; which was read a second time, and considered as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. WRIGHT. I believe the Senator from Minnesota reported this bill, and I should like him to state on what ground it is and for what reason special legislation is needed in this particular case.

Mr. WINDOM. The reason, I believe, is that the applicant made a mistake as to the time when he should make application to the Commissioner. Formerly the Commissioner had authority to fix the time. A law was subsequently passed requiring all applications to be made ninety days prior to the expiration of the patent. He, supposing that the Commissioner had the authority to fix the day, mistook the time, and was fifteen days too late. The bill is simply to relieve him against that mistake, and let him take the chances of the renewal of his patent as if the mistake had not been made.

Mr. WITHERS. When did the patent expire?

Mr. WINDOM. I do not remember; the time has escaped my mind. The report fixes the time. There is a very brief report in the case which fixes the time, I think.

Mr. WITHERS. I think it was in 1867. Let the report be read.

The Chief Clerk read the following report submitted by Mr. WINDOM from the Committee on Patents on the 30th of March:

The Committee on Patents, to whom was referred the petition of Horace S. Emery, having considered the same, and the accompanying evidence, beg leave to report:

That, from the evidence submitted, it appears that said Emery's improvement in cotton-ginning machines is a new and useful invention; that his patent was issued on the 4th day of September, 1860; that the said Emery has used due diligence in introducing the invention during the original term of his letters-patent, but that, without fault or negligence on his part, and owing to the interruption of business by the late war, and to other circumstances beyond his control, he has not been adequately remunerated; that he has received, as a profit from his interest in manufacturing the said machines, the sum of $7,250, which has been mainly absorbed by his expenses in attending fairs, exhibitions, advertising, &c., for the purpose of introducing said invention.

That in the opinion of the committee the said improvement is capable of saving to the public a very large amount upon the annual crop of cotton made in the United States, by reason of the increased capacity of the machine, the more uniform cleanliness of picking, the improved condition and greater value of the staple, the economy of force required to drive the machine, and the exemption of danger from firing.

That the applicant had made preparations in time to visit Washington for the purpose of making application to the Commissioner for an extension of his patent; but supposing that the ninety days' notice required was a rule of the Commissioner of Patents, and subject to his discretion to some extent, and not a statutory enactment, he did not reach Washington until fifteen days after the time limited, being seventy-five days before the expiration of the original term, when he learned that his only remedy was through an enabling act by Congress. That he has since been diligent in pressing his case upon the attention of Congress, and though it received the favorable action of our committee at the last session, the said committee were unable to submit their report.

Your committee are of the opinion that the applicant is entitled to relief from the effects of his mistake, and therefore recommend the passage of the accompanying bill.

Mr. WITHERS. I think the bill had better go over. I do not think there is sufficient cause stated there. I object to it on principle.

Mr. KERNAN. Will my friend yield to me a moment? This man is a manufacturer of these gins. He has to compete with all others. He gets no royalty out of the public, and this does not therefore cost the consumer anything, but it prevents other men making that improvement. He has to compete with the market. I trust there will be no objection.

Mr. WITHERS. My objection to it is just this, that the patent having expired ten years, and gins having been manufactured without reference to any rights which the inventor had previously acquired under his patent, it seems to me it would be unjust to give an unlimited right to the manufacturer of these gins under this patent in the future.

Mr. WINDOM. The Senator is mistaken as to the time. The patent expired only two years ago—in 1874.

Mr. WITHERS. I understood that the invention was patened first in 1860, and that owing to the difficulties growing out of the war it was not renewed in 1867 at the time it originally expired.

Mr. WINDOM. It expired in 1874—two years ago.

Mr. KERNAN. Not ten years ago; and he applied to the very next Congress after the expiration of his patent.

Mr. WITHERS. Then it was a fourteen-year patent instead of a seven?

Mr. WINDOM. It was a fourteen-year patent. The bill provides that no one shall suffer injury by the renewal.

Mr. WITHERS. I am opposed to all extensions of patents in all cases after they have expired except such conditions can be shown to exist as to render them necessary, and with such provisions put on as will prevent the public from imposition.

Mr. INGALLS. Does the Senator object to the consideration of the bill?

Mr. WITHERS. I do.

Mr. INGALLS. Then I insist on the enforcement of the rule.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The next bill on the Calendar will be read.

LIGHT-HOUSE ON ROUND ISLAND.

The next bill on the Calendar was the bill (S. No. 676) authorizing the construction of a light-house and fog-bell on Round Island, Straits of Mackinac; which was read the second time, and considered as in Committee of the Whole. It appropriates $15,000 for the purpose of erecting a light-house, with fog-bell, on Round Island, in the Straits of Mackinac, under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CHARLES E. HEDGES.

Mr. BOGY. I call up the bill (S. No. 294) for the relief of Charles E. Hedges, passed over a while ago at the suggestion of my colleague. There is no trouble about it.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which provides for paying to Charles E. Hedges $11,399, in full payment for supplies furnished by him to the Yankton Indians, at the request of the United States Indian agent, to prevent starvation among those Indians, during the winter of the years 1866-'67, as found by the Interior Department, and reported to Congress, on the 17th of January, 1871.

Mr. COCKRELL. I offer an amendment, and I will state the object of the amendment. Mr. Hedges furnished these supplies to the Indians there. They were in a destitute and starving condition. They have annuities, and there are certain provisions made by which their debts and obligations are to be paid in the treaty giving them these annuities. They have an abundant amount to pay this claim. Now I move to amend by inserting after the word "dollars," in line 5, the words:

Out of the annuities belonging to the Yankton Sioux Indians.

They have $40,000 a year now allowed them.

Mr. BOGY. The amendment is objectionable. This subject was examined by the Committee on Indian Affairs and submitted to me as a subcommittee. No question exists as to the provisions having been furnished by the claimant here, this man named Hedges, with whom I am not at all acquainted. The papers were all before us. These Indians were at that time in a starving condition, perfectly destitute. The grasshoppers the year before had destroyed their crops, hail-storms and one accident or another had completed the destruction, and they were in a most deplorable condition. The Indian agent called upon this man to make certain advances to these Indians, which he did, several years ago. The proof of the advances having been made is abundant and satisfactory beyond all question. He is out of pocket and ought to be paid; and the only question now is, should the money be paid out of the annuities of the Indians or by the United States? The Indians have an annuity of $40,000 a year; but there are two thousand Indians and upward; so that you can very well see that the amount is really very small. They are in a very deplorable condition, and they have always refused to pay this money. Although it was expended for the benefit of the destitute of that tribe, yet they have heretofore refused to make the payment out of their funds, and it should not be paid by them. It was an obligation incurred by the Government for a charitable purpose. The amount of their annuity appears to be large; but the number of the Yankton Indians is also very large, and there is not enough to support and educate them and give them farming implements; and if you cut off from their annuity eight or ten thousand dollars, the result will be that they will be again on our hands in a very short time. We have no right to make an appropriation of their money unless it is at their request. They have not so requested, and we have no right to do it, and they are not able to do it.

The claim is a just one. I am not acquainted with the claimant. That he advanced this amount there can be no question, and it should be paid by the Government of the United States and not by the Indians. Their means are too limited. They cannot support themselves now, and indeed since that time they have been fed once or twice by the Government of the United States.

Mr. COCKRELL. I cannot possibly consent that this amount should be paid out of the Treasury of the United States. The bill asks an appropriation of $15,000. Here is a letter from the Commissioner of Indian Affairs stating that he has $2,031.60 which can now be applied to the payment of this claim. Shall we make a gratuity of that amount at least? This Indian tribe made a treaty a number of years ago, and they have been treated exceedingly liberally. I ask that the report of the Committee on Claims which was made upon this claim be read for the information of the Senate. It sets forth all the facts in the case. They have $40,000 a year, and there are $2,000 already on hand which can be appropriated to the part payment of this claim. Then the balance can be paid in annual installments in such a way as not to oppress the Indians any more than the payment of the $15,000 will oppress the honest tax-payers of this country.

Mr. KEY. I suppose the bill had better go over on objection.

Mr. BOGY. I think the bill can be disposed of in a moment.

Mr. ALLISON. It is too late now to object.

Mr. BOGY. It is too late to make objection. We have commenced its consideration, and if we go on we can dispose of it in a minute.

Mr. KEY. I withdraw my objection.

Mr. COCKRELL. I ask that the report be read.

The Secretary read as follows from the report submitted by Mr. COCKRELL from the Committee on Claims March 6:

The Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the Bill (S. No. 294) for the relief of Charles E. Hedges, have considered the same, and submit the following report:

This bill directs the Secretary of the Treasury to pay to Charles E. Hedges $11,399, in full payment for supplies furnished by him to the Yankton Indians, at the request of the United States Indian agent, to prevent starvation among said Indians during the winter of the years 1866 and 1867, as found by the Interior Department and reported to Congress on the 17th day of January, 1871.

Your committee found with the bill a printed document, Executive Document No. 66, House of Representatives, Forty-first Congress, third session, and on February 15, 1876, transmitted same, with the bill, to the Secretary of the Interior for examination, report, &c., and in reply received his letter, as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
Washington, February 21, 1876.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 15th instant and inclosures, in relation to the claim of Charles E. Hedges.

In reply, I have the honor to transmit herewith copy of report, dated the 19th instant, from the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, to whom your letter was referred, which contains, it is believed, the information desired by you.

The papers accompanying your letter are herewith respectfully returned.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

Z. CHANDLER, Secretary.

Hon. F. M. COCKRELL,
United States Senate.

And also received the letter of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, therein referred to, as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, OFFICE OF INDIAN AFFAIRS,
Washington, D. C., February 19, 1876.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt, by reference from the Department, of a communication from Hon. F. M. COCKRELL, United States Senate, on behalf of Committee on Claims, dated the 15th instant, inclosing Senate bill 294, Forty-fourth Congress, first session, and copy of House of Representatives Executive Document No. 66, Forty-first Congress, third session, being for the relief of Charles E. Hedges, for supplies furnished the Yankton Sioux Indians during November and December, 1866, and January, February, March, April, and May, 1867, amounting to $11,399.

The matter having been referred for report, I have to state, in reply to the questions of Senator COCKRELL, as follows:

First. This Office has no reason to doubt the justness or correctness of the claim of Mr. Hedges, as shown by printed document No. 66, which embraces all the evidence known to the Department regarding said claim.

Second. The only funds on the books of this Office applicable to the part payment of above claim are the sum of $2,031.62, of the treaty with the Yankton Indians, appropriated prior to July 1, 1873; and Third. These Indians have a treaty with the United States, which was concluded April 19, 1858, ratified by the Senate February 16, 1859, and proclaimed on the 26th of February following. By the second section of article 4, (see pages 857 and 858 of Revision of Indian Treaties,) the Government is now making an appropriation of $40,000 annually, the eighth of ten installments, second series, being embraced in the estimate of this Office for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1877, now before Congress for its consideration.

In connection with the above I desire to say that any attempt to provide for the payment of this claim from the funds annually appropriated for these Indians would very seriously embarrass this Office and cause suffering at the agency in question, the amount of $40,000 being barely sufficient to provide subsistence and pay for services rendered at the Yankton agency during the term of one year.

The papers referred by you under date of the 16th instant are herewith returned.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

J. Q. SMITH, Commissioner.

The HON. SECRETARY OF THE INTERIOR.

Mr. BOGY. It is upon that report that I base my objection to the amendment. The Commissioner of Indian Affairs says it would embarrass his Bureau very much to make this payment out of this Indian fund. They have not means enough now to support themselves. They are in a state of great destitution, and this money should be paid by the United States if paid at all. We should be governed by the statement made by the Commissioner. He says it cannot be done. The Indians will be in a starving condition if it is done. It is true there is a balance due them now because those moneys are only paid by installments; but when the year is out there is not enough to support them. They have been in a suffering condition for several years.

Mr. INGALLS. I may have misunderstood the reading of the executive document from the Secretary of the Interior; but, unless I did so, my view of it would be different from that entertained by the Senator from Missouri, [Mr. BOGY.] I understand that there is a fund in the possession of the Department amounting to over $2,000, which can be applied to the payment of this claim.

Mr. BOGY. But the Commissioner says to do so would be embarrassing to the Indians.

Mr. INGALLS. I do not so understand it.

Mr. BOGY. If the Senator will read the report he will see that I state it correctly.

Mr. INGALLS. The report states that to pay the entire amount out of their annuity would be embarrassing to the Department and might result in suffering to the Indians.

Mr. BOGY. Of course.

Mr. INGALLS. But that there is a fund of $2,000, which can be applied to the payment of this claim——

Mr. BOGY. There is a fund of $40,000 which can be applied to it. There may have been $2,000 unexpended at that moment, but it does not prove that the means exist to make this appropriation.

Mr. INGALLS. I think a reference to the report will show that there is a balance outside of the annual appropriation that can be applied to the extinction of this particular liability. If that is the case, it certainly is not worth while to appropriate the entire amount and leave that stand there without being of any service to anybody.

Mr. BOGY. It is as broad as it is long. If you make this appropriation out of their funds you have got to make an appropriation from the Treasury to support the Indians.

Mr. INGALLS. The Senator will observe that the $2,000 accumulated in the Office accrued prior to 1873 and has been lying there ever since. It is no part of the annual appropriation, and to apply that to the payment of this claim will diminish the draft on the Treasury by so much.

Mr. BOGY. The $40,000 expires two years from this time, and after two years they will be destitute.

Mr. COCKRELL. I should like to have the whole report read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The rest of the report will be read.

Mr. BOGY. They have objected to the appropriation and we have no right to make it.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the whole letter be read over again.

The Secretary read as follows:

The Executive Document No. 66, sent to the Secretary of the Interior and referred to in said letters, is as follows:

Letter from the Secretary of the Interior in relation to the claim of C. E. Hedges for supplies furnished Yankton Sioux Indians.

JANUARY 23, 1871.—Referred to the Committee on Claims, and ordered to be printed.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
Washington, D. C., January 17, 1871.

SIR: I transmit herewith for the consideration of Congress a copy of a report of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, dated the 10th instant, together with the papers connected with the claim of C. E. Hedges, of Sioux City, Iowa, amounting to $11,329, for supplies furnished the Yankton Sioux Indians during November and December, 1866, and January, February, March, April, and May, 1867, to prevent suffering and absolute starvation of said Indians.

There being no funds at the disposal of the Department applicable to the payment of this claim, the attention of Congress is respectfully invited to the subject with a view to the necessary appropriation for the payment of said claim.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

C. DELANO, Secretary.

Hon. JAMES G. BLAINE,
Speaker of the House of Representatives.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, OFFICE OF INDIAN AFFAIRS,
Washington, D. C., January 10, 1871.

SIR: I have the honor to inclose herewith two copies of a claim amounting to $11,329 of C. E. Hedges, of Sioux City, Iowa, for supplies furnished the Yankton Sioux Indians during November and December, 1866, and January, February, March, April, and May, 1867, at the urgent request of the Indians, to prevent suffering and absolute starvation, and upon the promise of the agent, P. H. Conger, that he would use his influence to obtain payment of the claim by the Department.

The claimant submits in support of the claim the affidavit of A. C. Guyon to the effect that a large lot of flour, bacon, sugar, and coffee were furnished said Indians, and that it was their wish that the trader, Mr. Hedges, should be paid for the provisions furnished. C. F. Picotte testifies also——

Mr. BOGY. You need not read the evidence. There is no question about the furnishing of the supplies.

Mr. COCKRELL. No, that need not be read, and the account need not be read; but the rest of the report had better be read.

The Secretary continued the reading as follows:

The foregoing contains all the evidence and facts before us——

Mr. BOGY. I have already said that it is not necessary to read any further. I know that it is not necessary.

Mr. COCKRELL. I ask for it in regard to the treaty stipulations. I want to show them. I want to hear the part about the treaty.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will proceed with the reading of the report.

The Secretary continued the reading as follows:

The foregoing contains all the evidence and facts before us. It seems clear that Mr. Hedges did furnish supplies, amounting, as charged, to $11,329, to the Indians; and that the Indians were in a destitute and suffering condition, and that the only funds in the hands of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs applicable to the payment of this claim amount to $2,031.62.

This treaty referred to is found in the United States Statutes at Large, volume 11, 1855 to 1859, pages 743 to 749; was concluded at Washington April 19, 1858; ratified by the Senate February 16, 1859; and proclaimed by the President February 26, 1859. By article 4, section 2, the United States agreed—

"To pay to them, or expend for their benefit, the sum of $65,000 per annum for ten years, commencing with the year in which they shall remove to and settle and reside upon their said reservation; $40,000 per annum for and during ten years thereafter; and $15,000 per annum for and during twenty years thereafter; making $1,600,000 in annuities in the period of fifty years, of which sums the President of the United States shall, from time to time, determine what proportion shall be paid to said Indians in cash and what proportion shall be expended for their benefit, and also in what manner and for what objects such expenditure shall be made, due regard being had in making such determination to the best interests of said Indians. He shall likewise exercise the power to make such provision out of said sums as he may deem to be necessary and proper for the support and comfort of the aged or infirm and helpless orphans of the said Indians. In case of any material decrease of said Indians in number, the said amounts may, in the discretion of the President of the United States, be diminished and reduced in proportion thereto, or they may, at the discretion of the President of the United States, be discontinued entirely, should said Indians fail to make reasonable and satisfactory efforts to advance and improve their condition; in which case such other provision shall be made for them as the President and Congress may judge to be suitable and proper.

"Third. In addition to the foregoing sum of $1,600,000 as annuities to be paid to or expended for the benefit of said Indians during the period of fifty years, as before stated, the United States hereby stipulate and agree to expend for their benefit the sum of $50,000 more, as follows, to wit:

"Twenty-five thousand in maintaining and subsisting said Indians during the first year after their removal to, and permanent settlement upon, their reservation, in purchasing stock, implements, &c.

"Fourth. To expend $10,000 to build a school-house, &c.

"And such further sum, in addition to said $10,000, as shall be deemed necessary and proper by the President, shall be reserved and taken from their said annuities and applied annually to the support of the schools, to furnish them with assistance, aid, and instruction in agriculture, &c.

"Fifth. To provide said Indians with a mill, one or more machine-shops, &c., and to expend therefor a sum not exceeding $15,000."

Article 6 provides:

"It is hereby agreed and understood that the chiefs and headmen of said tribe may, in their discretion, in open council, authorize to be paid out of their said annuities such a sum or sums as may be found to be necessary and proper, not exceeding in the aggregate $150,000, to satisfy their just debt and obligations, and to provide for such of their half-breed relations as do not live with them or draw any part of said annuities of said Indians: Provided, however, That their said determinations shall be approved by their agent for the time being and the said payments authorized by the Secretary of the Interior: Provided, also, That there shall not be paid out of their said annuities in any one year a sum exceeding $15,000."

Article 9 provides, in substance, that—

"In case of any injuries or depredations by said Yanktons, full compensation shall, as far as possible, be made therefor out of their tribal annuities, the amount in all cases to be determined by the Secretary of the Interior."

Article 13:

"No part of the annuities of the Yanktons shall be taken to pay any debts, claims, or demands against them, except such existing claims and demands as have been provided for, and except such as may arise under this agreement or under the trade and intercourse laws of the United States."

Article 14 provides that—

"For the special benefit of the Yanktons, parties to this agreement, the United States agree to appoint an agent for them, who shall reside on their said reservation, and shall have set apart for his sole use and occupation, at such a point as the Secretary of the Interior may direct, one hundred and sixty acres of land."

Article 10 provides, in substance, that no white person, unless in the employ of the United States or duly licensed to trade with the Yanktons or members of the families of such persons, shall be permitted to reside or settle on said reservation.

From these extracts from said treaty——

Mr. BOGY. Rather than have that whole book read, I will succumb and accept the amendment of my colleague. I give it up. [Laughter.]

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Missouri, [Mr. COCKRELL.]

Mr. COCKRELL. I will put the amendment in this form:

Insert at the end of the bill:

Provided, That said sum shall be retained and re-imbursed to the Treasury of the United States out of annuities due, and to become due, to the said Indians.

The question being put, it was declared that the amendment appeared to be rejected.

A division was called for.

Mr. INGALLS. I really hope that a division will not be called for on this question, because it will result in the termination of this afternoon's business. I think we ought to agree to the amendment.

Mr. SARGENT. Let the question be tried again on the sound.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will again put the question.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate and the amendment was concurred in.

Mr. WRIGHT. I suggest that evidently there is a mistake in the amount. It is $11,399 in the bill It ought to be $11,329, according to the figures of the report.

Mr. ALLISON. That is right.

Mr. WRIGHT. I move that amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

HORACE L. EMERY.

Mr. WINDOM. The Senator from Virginia [Mr. WITHERS] withdraws his objection to Senate bill No. 675, and I ask that it may be taken up now.

There being no objection, the bill (S. No. 675) to enable Horace L. Emery to make an application to the Commissioner of Patents for the extension of letters-patent for improvement in cotton-ginning machines was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, and ordered to a third reading.

The bill was read the third time.

Mr. COCKRELL. I should like to have the yeas and nays on the passage of the bill. I do not think that the Senate ought to grant an extension of any of these patent-rights.

Mr. KERNAN. We do not by this bill. We only allow this man to apply now on account of his mistake by which he did not apply at the proper time.

Mr. COCKRELL. That is eqnivalent to granting a renewal of the patent-right. When you send him before the Commissioner of Patents you authorize the Commissioner of Patents to go on and grant a renewal. I am opposed on principle to granting extensions by acts of Congress. There is a law, and everybody knows what that law is, and should comply with it. This patent has already been in existence fourteen years, and it does seem to me that is sufficient.

Mr. WINDOM. If it were not for delaying business I should like to have the yeas and nays on this bill, because if the Senate should reject this one, I think the Committee on Patents would consider themselves instructed to report no more under any circumstances; for if there is a case that is exceptional and free from all objection, it seems to me this is the one. Here is a patent of great value to the public; one which, according to the evidence, costs the public nothing, because it is manufactured by the party himself and no royalties are sold; one out of which he has made no reasonable compensation whatever. This is not an extension; but the bill simply authorizes him to go before the Commissioner and make application, and the whole point in the case is that it relieves him from a mistake as to the time. He would have had the right under the law to make this application, but being mistaken as to the time—he was fifteen days behind—he did not make it until seventy-five days before the expiration of the patent instead of ninety. Had he been fifteen days earlier, it would not have been necessary for him to come to Congress. In every view of the case it is exceptional and free from objection.

Mr. SARGENT. What is the patent?

Mr. WINDOM. It is for a cotton-ginning machine. The question is not as to the extension of a twenty-one years' patent. It ran but fourteen years. The law gave him the right to go before the Commissioner for a seven years' extension, but he must apply ninety days before the expiration of the patent under the general law. He made a mistake, and did not apply until fifteen days of that time had gone.

Mr. SARGENT. Is the article patented generally used?

Mr. WINDOM. It is used a great deal, I think.

Mr. SARGENT. Has he not enjoyed for a long while the profit of making and selling the machine?

Mr. WINDOM. He received about $7,000 in all during the entire life of the patent, which the evidence shows was nearly all expended in introducing it. I feel no interest in this bill, but if the Senate reject it by yeas and nays, I certainly shall consider myself instructed never to report a patent bill favorably, because no other can be more clearly unobjectionable than this.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Missouri calls for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. BOGY. I hope the patent will not be extended. It has no particular merit. I advocate the principle that patents should not be extended. I think it is one of the very great curses now impending over this country. You cannot build a steamboat without having to employ some patent. You cannot make a plow or a shovel or a harrow without being annoyed by patents. The system of obtaining patents is so very vicious that you can obtain patents for everything. As the patentee has the exclusive right for fourteen years, there never should be an extension.

Mr. KERNAN. I have no special zeal in this case; but being on the Committee on Patents, and the man being from my State, I want to state one or two things. I am one of those who have in committee acted on the principle not to concur in any report permitting a patent to be extended unless it was an exceptional case. But your laws say that a man may have his patent fourteen years, and then he may, by applying ninety days before it is out, have it extended seven years more if the Commissioner of Patents is of opinion upon examination, after full notice to the world, that it is useful, that the man has made his best efforts to introduce it, and that he has not had reasonable compensation. While that law stands, surely if a man is stricken down by sickness and does not get there within a few days of the time I would let him go and have his day in court there. If I would not do that, then I would repeal the law that authorizes an extension at all.

We do not by this bill extend the patent; we simply say that we relieve him from the accident, and he may yet go and see if our officer, according to the usual practice, with notice to the world, thinks he ought for his ingenuity to have any further extension. That is all I desire to say. I concur with the Senator who reported the bill, [Mr. WINDOM,] that, if this bill does not pass, it is saying to the Committee on Patents that it is not worth while to ever examine another case; for I have heard none there, among the many heard—most of them rejected, and only a few reported—that was so exceptional and so free from objection as this one in every respect.

Mr. WADLEIGH. As I understood the Senator from Missouri, [Mr. BOGY,] he said just now that he would not vote to extend any patent whatever. It seems to me that if that position is to be taken here by a majority of the Senate, it would be best to abolish the Committee on Patents, and have no such committee.

Now let me call the attention of the Senate to the bill, No. 38 in the order of business, for the relief of Luther Hall. Here was a case where a poor New England mechanic made a valuable improvement in machinery for the manufacture of shoes, by which the cost to every man who wears a pair of boots and shoes in this country is now at least fifteen to twenty cents less than before. He benefited the country to that extent by his ingenuity and by his labor. He contrived a machine which makes a heel instantaneously and puts it upon the boot or shoe. His poverty compelled him to grant to a great corporation engaged in the sale of patents and procuring them the right to use that patent and employ it during the time for which the patent was first granted. They gave to him a royalty which did not begin to pay for his labor and for his ingenuity, and did not enable him to maintain his family except by his daily labor. When the time was about to expire, Mr. Hall went to that company and said to them that he proposed to get that patent extended.

Mr. KERNAN. If my friend will permit me, they came to him and got him to make a written agreement.

Mr. WADLEIGH. That makes the case stronger.

Mr. KERNAN. Certainly.

Mr. WADLEIGH. They came to him and proposed to get it extended for him, and proposed the amount that they would pay him for it, and gave him a written contract that they would do it; told him that they had employed an attorney, and told him who the attorney was, and the attorney assured him that he would do it; but that company and that attorney let that time expire and run out without making any application whatever, and thus defrauded and cheated him. Are we to be told that in this Senate there is to be no relief in a case of that kind? I am certain that the Senators who say that they will in no case grant relief against the hardships which the law sometimes imposes in respect to these matters will, if they examine the subject, see that they are wholly in the wrong, and that there may be cases in which great advantage has resulted to the public from these patents where the inventors have received no compensation whatever or substantially none, and where, perhaps through mistake or through fraud, they have been prevented from asking for the extension which the law gave them.

This committee, let me say, have been careful in all cases not to report any bill in favor of extending patents except where it seemed clearly their duty so to do; and, although the number of applications has been very large, a reference to the Calendar will convince any one that but very few cases have been reported favorably upon by the committee.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the passage of the bill.

Mr. WRIGHT. I wish to say just one word. I have studiously opposed, if not all, at least most of the propositions made here for the extension of patents. I think it should not be done unless in exceptional cases, and very exceptional ones. I understand the committee to act upon that theory and upon that rule, and hence of the numberless cases, almost, referred to the committee, but one or two have been reported back at this session. I understand that under this bill this party is given the opportunity to go before the Commissioner of Patents to do what he could have done under the law as it stood before, but was prevented from doing without any fault on his part, but by reason of a misunderstanding of the law, ignorance on his part of the law without any fault or neglect except in that way. I understand that to be the fact. I understand, also, that there is a provision here that all rights of third persons which may have intervened since the expiration of the fourteen years up to this time are saved by the bill. So that, in substance, this bill is simply to refer the matter to the Commissioner of Patents, and he to consider it just as he would have done under the law as it stood, and this special act is necessary to allow him to come in, he having lost his time by reason of the expiration of the days. That being so, and the case being exceptional, I shall not oppose it, but shall oppose all cases unless they stand on very exceptional grounds. I think this is an exceptional instance, and therefore I shall vote for the bill.

Mr. DAWES. I think the Senate should bear in mind the distinction between this case and a large class of cases that come before Congress. A large class of cases are of this kind: Men enjoy a patent for fourteen years, then apply to the Commissioner of Patents under the old law as it existed, and, if they can satisfy him that it is a proper case, get an extension to twenty-one years. Then they come to Congress for a further extension. Now this is only asking permission to go before the Commissioner of Patents and get that extension—to which the patentee would otherwise have been entitled—to twenty-one years, giving him that which he would have got of himself under the general law had it not been for the difficulty by which he lost fifteen days, and he does not get it in this case unless he shows that he would have been entitled to it had he applied in time under existing laws.

I have strenuously opposed patent extensions. I do not remember now that I ever voted for the extension of a twenty-one years' patent, though possibly I may have done so in a very exceptional case; but this is not extending a patent. It is simply allowing a party to go before the Commissioner under the general law and get the right which he would have got under the general law, asking nobody, if he could have satisfied the Commissioner what this bill requires him to satisfy him of, namely, those requisitions of the old law that he had used all proper means to bring it into use, that he had not received any considerable beneficial result from it, and that it was a useful invention. Those who feel as I feel that there is great impropriety in extending patents longer than twenty-one years will not find this one of those cases.

Mr. GORDON. Mr. President, I happen to come from a State which probably is as much interested in cheap cotton-gins as any other represented on the floor of the Senate. As a rule, I agree with those who have preceded me in saying that I am opposed to the extension of patents; but learning the circumstances connected with this case, I believe them to be very similar to those of the one instanced by the Senator from New Hampshire. I understand this to have been a case of a mechanic who was poor and who has up to this time derived very little benefit from his invention, and owing to the neglect of others he has failed to secure the rights which the law intended he should secure. I therefore, as the representative of a cotton State, appeal to my friend from Missouri to withdraw his objection and let the bill pass as due to this party.

Mr. MAXEY. I would ask the Senator from Minnesota who reported this bill how long the patentee has had the exclusive benefit of the patent?

Mr. WINDOM. From 1860 to 1874.

Mr. MAXEY. Fourteen years.

Mr. WINDOM. But, as he states in his petition, and as the evidence shows, he was prevented some eight or ten years from enjoying it on account of the condition of the country.

Mr. MAXEY. The Constitution evidently contemplated that there shall be a limit to these patent privileges. It provides (section 8, article 1) that "Congress shall have power to promote the progress of science and useful arts by securing for limited times to authors and inventors the exclusive right to their respective writings and discoveries." Now if a patent is worth having at all, fourteen years is long enough for that patent. It is a part, a lamentable part, of the history of this country, that when patents are of immense value they are not only carried up to the twenty-one years' limit, but by special laws are carried even beyond that extended period. We have an instance in Colt's revolver, and there are numerous other cases where that has been done to the very great injury of the country. We have an instance in the sewing-machine, which is of incalculable value to the poorest families in all the country, and yet they have been required to pay a royalty to the patentees, who have grown into being the owners of fabulous fortunes by some little invention or other for which seven years would have been sufficient to pay them back.

The honorable Senator from Georgia represents a cotton State, and he has a right to speak on this matter. I represent a cotton State, and I have a right to speak, too; and I say if a patent be worth anything for a cotton-gin (and we have them of almost every character in the South) it is fully paid for in fourteen years, and if it will not pay for itself in fourteen years it is not worth having and it is not worth repatenting. For that reason, and believing that the whole principle of extending patents is wrong, believing that the Constitution designed and intended by the term "limited times" some period which was reasonable in limit, I am opposed to this extension, as I am to all others.

Mr. INGALLS. The Legislature of my State by joint resolution instructed me to vote against the extension of all patents of every description whatsoever. In obeying these instructions, I desire to say, however, that I follow my own conviction of what is right and proper in voting against the bill.

The question being taken by yeas and nays on the passage of the bill, resulted—yeas 28, nays 17; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Allison, Booth, Bruce, Cameron of Wisconsin, Christiancy, Conkling, Cooper, Dawes, Eaton, Ferry, Frelinghuysen, Goldthwaite, Gordon, Hamlin, Johnston, Jones of Florida, Jones of Nevada, Kelly, Kernan, Key, McMillan, Morrill of Vermont, Paddock, Sargent, Wadleigh, West, Windom, and Wright—28.

NAYS—Messrs. Bayard, Bogy, Boutwell, Cockrell, Davis, Harvey, Ingalls, McCreery, Maxey, Mitchell, Norwood, Ransom, Robertson, Saulsbury, Stevenson, Whyte, and Withers—17.

ABSENT—Messrs. Alcorn, Anthony, Barnum, Burnside, Cameron of Pennsylvania, Caperton, Clayton, Conover, Cragin, Dennis, Dorsey, Edmunds, Hamilton, Hitchcock, Howe, Logan, McDonald, Merrimon, Morrill of Maine, Morton, Oglesby, Patterson, Randolph, Sharon, Sherman, Spencer, Thurman, and Wallace—28.

So the bill was passed.

ELECTIVE FRANCHISE IN UTAH.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The next bill on the Calendar at the point where it was left off will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. Bill (S. No. 483) to regulate elections and the elective franchise in the Territory of Utah.

Mr. COCKRELL and Mr. JOHNSTON. Let that go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

EPHRAIM P. ABBOTT.

The next bill on the Calendar was the bill (S. No. 678) for the relief of Ephraim P. Abbott; which was read the second time, and considered as in Committee of the Whole. It allows Ephraim P. Abbott, on paying $2.50 per acre within six months, to obtain a patent for a specified tract of land in Ecorse township, Wayne County, Michigan.

Mr. CHRISTIANCY. That is a bill which I had the honor to report from the Committee on Private Land Claims, and it was unanimously concurred in by the committee. There is a report which will state the facts of the case better than I can at once state them, and will show the propriety of the bill. If there is any objection to the bill the report can be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does any Senator desire the report to be read? The Chair hears no such request.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LANDS OF FORT SEDGWICK RESERVATION.

The next bill on the Calendar was the bill (S. No. 471) to re-open the lands of the Fort Sedgwick military reservation to settlement and occupation as public lands; which was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The Committee on Military Affairs reported an amendment, to strike out all of the original bill and to insert in lieu thereof:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of War be, and is hereby, authorized and directed to transfer the lands embraced within the limits of the Fort Sedgwick military reservation situate in the State of Nebraska and the Territory of Colorado to the custody and control of the Secretary of the Interior for disposition according to the existing laws of the United States relating to the other public lands within said State and Territory; the said reservation being no longer needed for military purposes.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

DANIEL WORMER.

The next bill on the Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 1808) for the relief of Daniel Wormer, of Albany, New York; which was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It provides for the payment to Daniel Wormer, of Albany, New York, of $3,500, in full compensation for expenses incurred in carrying out a contract with the United States to furnish one thousand two hundred cavalry horses.

The Committee on Claims reported the bill with an amendment, to strike out in line 6 the words "3,500" and insert "2,000."

Mr. CONKLING. I wish to make an inquiry of the Senator from Missouri, [Mr. COCKRELL.] The amendment proposed is the one which reduces this sum from the lowest amount which the claimant insists on to the sum stated.

Mr. COCKRELL. The amendment is to change $3,500 to $2,000.

Mr. CONKLING. I wish to say (and I think the Senator from Missouri will bear me out) that, without going to all the questions made by the claimant, or saying that I coincide in his views, there is a sum of money, consisting of expenses which as I understand it this claimant should have, clearly beyond this naked sum which is given to him. I ask the Senator from Missouri who reports the bill whether I am not, in his judgment, right in saying so much, that there is a certain sum here of expenses, clearly shown to have been incurred and paid, which sum is omitted from this lower sum which will stand in the bill if the amendment prevail?

Mr. COCKRELL. Mr. Wormer gave his evidence at one time and made a rough estimate of $2,000; that he had expended that much. That was before he had conversation and held communication with some of his agents who were assisting him in the city of Washington. Afterward he presented additional evidence which shows some $1,500 additional or more. It was upon that that the report of the House committee was based.

Mr. CONKLING. After looking through somewhat voluminous papers, which have been sent me not only by this claimant, but in his behalf by others, because there seems to be enlisted in his behalf a considerable number of very respectable men known both to my colleague and myself, residing in Albany and elsewhere in the State of New York, I am persuaded, as they are, that this amendment if adopted will have the effect of adjusting this claim, if I may apply that word, upon an untenable basis and at the same time cutting it down below that to which confessedly as it seems to me the claimant is entitled. I hope the amendment will not prevail.

I mean to be; I trust I am as a rule, very careful in never voting for a larger sum than I am compelled to vote for in these bills proposing to pay private claims. Indeed I think I may flatter myself by supposing that, if I have a fault that is chronic in such cases, it is to lean against the claimant and with the Government. But if it be true that this man has really expended in consequence of the breach of this agreement, a certain sum of money, I do not see how we can select a part of that money and say we will pay this and refuse to pay the other part which stands on the same foundation.

I understand that if the Government is liable in justice, whether you call it law or equity—you cannot say "in law" technically speaking, because a Government is not suable—but if the Government is liable on principles of justice between man and man, as I think it is in this case, it is liable in a measure of compensation which is denied by this amendment, and therefore I suggest that the bill stand as it came from the House of Representatives.

Mr. WRIGHT. Will the Senator from New York allow me to suggest that this claim received not a little attention at the hands of the committee. We were all of us very favorably impressed with the merits and justice and equity of this claimant's demand. After an examination of it, we reached the conclusion that $2,000 was about the sum that ought to be paid, taking the whole case altogether. Subsequently, since the report was made, information has come to the committee which leads us to doubt whether the amount should not be larger; and I suggest to the Senator from New York that perhaps it would be best to have the case recommitted, that we may reconsider it; and I say to him that we will take it up at as early a day as we can, and, if we so agree and it be desired, we can at once propose a consideration of the subject when the bill is again reported.

Mr. CONKLING. I am very much obliged to the Senator for his consideration and courtesy in giving attention to this case. I will take any direction about it that he shall suggest, as it is wise for me to do. I will, however, before having the bill recommitted, submit to him one fact and one suggestion.

In the first place, this claimant has been here this winter as well as formerly, expending a great deal of time and a great deal of money, which he is not in a condition to expend. It therefore would be, perhaps, in an exceptional sense, a mercy and justice to him if he could receive, within a reasonable time, whatever he is to be paid. That fact I submit to the Senator for what it is worth; and this is the suggestion to which I ask his attention: The honorable Senator from Missouri, who I think I might say in his presence is pretty careful, and deemed very careful by the committee of which he is a member, as I know, because I have troubled him myself about it, has bestowed upon this case what I take it must be exceptional attention. I have had forwarded to me supplemental papers which I have taken to the Senator from Missouri, and he has very good-naturedly and patiently received them and given them attention. I think it must be true, therefore, that the Senator from Missouri has a pretty full and clear understanding of this case; and after what he has said, and what I think he will say to the Senate, I suggest to the honorable Senator from Iowa that this being a House bill, having been reported with unanimity there as I am told, and acted upon without doubt, without hesitation, and having undergone so much consideration here, perhaps he would feel that he had sufficiently discharged his duty by allowing the bill to pass as it came from the House. I only ask him to consent to that in case the Senator from Missouri in a further statement he will make shall satisfy him that he has looked so far into this matter as to know that I am right in saying that there is no principle, except an arbitrary principle, on which the residue of the expense confessedly incurred by this man can be denied. If the Senator from Missouri upon saying what he may say on the subject makes a statement satisfactory to the Senator from Iowa, I confess I should be very glad personally to have an end to this case; for although it is the business of every Senator to attend and to continue to attend to the work urged upon him, I have been written to and furnished with papers and with budgets of papers so frequently on this subject that I confess it would be a personal relief to me, if this man is right in his statement and any member of the committee is able to state upon examination that he is so, if I may see the end of this bill. Although I do not ask to interpose my personal convenience about it, I should be glad if we could now hear the statement and dispose of the case.

Mr. WRIGHT. I desire to say that, while I have a disposition to accommodate the Senator from New York, yet, after consultation with some members of the committee who are here, it is thought that the better course would be to have the bill recommitted to the committee, so as to take the opinion of the members of the committee in the committee-room. The question is one of some importance. It does not involve a very large amount, it is true; but there is a matter of principle contained in it. I am sure the Senator will bear witness that the committee have been somewhat expeditious in getting their business before the Senate, and we will make it a point to report this bill back at an early day, so that it may be taken up and disposed of. I doubt not at the time of our meeting next week the committee will be able to come to a conclusion upon the bill, so as to report it to the Senate in the morning hour. We shall agree, I doubt not, under the recent evidence that we have, and then the Senate can at once proceed to the consideration of the bill. That is the orderly way of doing the work, and I should prefer that course.

Mr. CONKLING. After that preference expressed by the chairman of the committee, I do not feel at liberty to attempt to resist it, which doubtless I could not do.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Iowa moves to recommit the bill to the Committee on Claims.

The motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. SARGENT. (at four o'clock and twenty-five minutes p. m.) I move that the Senate adjourn.

The question being put, a division was called for; and the ayes were 17 and the noes 19; no quorum voting.

Mr. CONKLING. If there is no quorum, I think no business is in order except a call of the Senate or a motion to adjourn. We cannot go on.

Mr. EATON. The yeas and nays are in order. I call for the yeas and nays on the motion to adjourn.

Mr. CONKLING. I suggest that the shortest way is to adjourn. We certainly do not want to waste time in getting a quorum. I move that the Senate adjourn.

Mr. COCKRELL. I hope the Senate will not adjourn. I believe there are ten cases on the Calendar which I have reported. The parties are here and want the bills passed. It is a matter of a great deal of importance to them, and we certainly——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will remind the Senator from Missouri that a motion to adjourn is not debatable. The Senator from New York moves that the Senate do now adjourn.

The question being put, it was declared that the ayes appeared to prevail.

Mr. COCKRELL. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

Several SENATORS. Let us divide.

The question being taken by a division, resulted—ayes 16, noes 18; no quorum voting.

Mr. EATON. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will call the roll to ascertain how many Senators are present.

Mr. SARGENT. The Secretary may as well call the roll on the question of adjournment. I ask that we again ascertain if there is a second to the demand for yeas and nays.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from California demands the yeas and nays on the adjournment.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and being taken, resulted—yeas 17, nays 25; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Allison, Booth, Boutwell, Christiancy, Conkling, Cooper, Dawes, Ferry, Frelinghuysen, Johnston, Jones of Nevada, McCreery, Mitchell, Patterson, Ransom, Sargent, and Saulsbury—17.

NAYS—Messrs. Bayard, Bogy, Bruce, Cameron of Wisconsin, Cockrell, Davis, Dennis, Eaton, Gordon, Harvey, Hitchcock, Ingalls, Kelly, Kernan, Key, McMillan, Maxey, Morrill of Vermont, Norwood, Paddock, Stevenson, Wadleigh, Windom, Withers, and Wright—25.

ABSENT—Messrs. Alcorn, Anthony, Barnum, Burnside, Cameron of Pennsylvania, Caperton, Clayton, Conover, Cragin, Dorsey, Edmunds, Goldthwaite, Hamilton, Hamlin, Howe, Jones of Florida, Logan, McDonald, Merrimon, Morrill of Maine, Morton, Oglesby, Randolph, Robertson, Sharon, Sherman, Spencer, Thurman, Wallace, West, and Whyte—31.

So the Senate refused to adjourn.

TELEGRAPH LINE IN OREGON.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will report the next bill on the Calendar.

The next bill on the Calendar was the bill (S. No. 144) to provide for the construction of a telegraph line from Fort Canby, via Fort Stevens and Astoria, to Portland, Oregon.

Mr. MITCHELL. That bill has been recommitted to the Committee on Commerce. It is not upon the Calendar.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

Mr. MITCHELL. No; let it go to the Committee on Commerce. It should not be on the Calendar.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That course will be taken.

ORDNANCE DEPARTMENT.

The next bill on the Calendar was the bill (S. No. 684) for the better regulation of the Ordnance Department of the Army of the United States.

The Chief Clerk read the bill.

Mr. BOUTWELL. I think we had better pass over the bill.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the Clerk read the report.

Mr. BOUTWELL. I object to the bill.

Mr. COCKRELL. I hope the Senator from Massachusetts will not object. I ask him to just hear the report read, and see if it is not satisfactory. It is a report of only fourteen lines.

Mr. BOUTWELL. I will waive the objection and hear the report read, subject to objection afterward.

The Chief Clerk read the following report, submitted by Mr. COCKRELL, from the Committee on Military Affairs April 3:

The Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred "the letter from the Secretary of War," accompanying "a statement of the Chief of Ordnance in relation to an omission in the Revised Statutes not enumerated in his letter of August 17, 1875," have duly considered the same, and submit the following report:

Your committee, upon an examination of the Revised Statutes and a comparison of the same with section 3, act of March 3, 1813, chapter 48, page 816, United States Statutes at Large, volume 2, and with act of February 8, 1815, chapter 38, pages 203 and 204, United States Statutes at Large, volume 3, find that the provisions of said acts of March 3, 1813, and February 8, 1815, requiring returns and property accountability on the part of ordnance officers, have been omitted in the Revised Statutes, and, to supply such omission, recommend the passage of the accompanying bill.

Mr. BOUTWELL. I venture to suggest that the report may possibly be based upon an error. There is a section of the Revised Statutes requiring all officers to make reports, civil, military, and naval; it is comprehensive.

Mr. COCKRELL. I will state that the Chief of Ordnance, through the Secretary of War, communicated to Congress the fact that there was no law requiring ordnance officers to make any report at all. This communication from the Chief of Ordnance was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs. I took the act governing the Ordnance Department and compared it with the acts of 1813 and 1815, and found those sections were left out entirely in the Revised Statutes; but they are not left out when it comes to the Quartermaster's or the Commissary's or any other Department. The Ordnance Department say they have no such authority; that there is no law requiring any return at all from the Ordnance Department; and it was upon their instance and upon their written petition to Congress that I examined all these statutes and prepared the bill which I submitted to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. BOUTWELL. Very likely the Senator from Missouri is correct; but the Committees on the Revision of the Laws, both the House committee and a portion of the Senate committee, in conference, went over that matter. This particular communication was not referred by the Senate to the Committee on the Revision of the Laws, but it was referred by the House to the House Committee on the Revision of the Laws. We came to the conclusion that if they would obey what law there was, it would be sufficient for the purposes of the country.

Mr. COCKRELL. Do I understand the Senator from Massachusetts to say that this communication from the Ordnance Department which was referred to our committee, and upon which this bill was based, was referred to the Committee on the Revision of the Laws?

Mr. BOUTWELL. Of the House.

Mr. COCKRELL. When was it referred?

Mr. BOUTWELL. I cannot say.

Mr. COCKRELL. I will state the fact that the communication was sent in to this present Forty-fourth Congress at this session, and the revision, as I understand, dates back to December 3, 1873. How the communication could have been referred to the Committee on Revision, which has been dead for two years, I cannot see. They presented it at this session, and called attention to the fact that this provision was omitted in the revision. The revising committee could certainly not have considered that matter.

Mr. BOUTWELL. I do not refer to the committee that had charge of the revision of the statutes when it was originally passed by Congress, but to the standing committee of the House of Representatives which is now in existence. This communication from the War Department, as I recollect—I may be in error—was referred by the House to the House committee. I say that the document which came from the War Department and was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs of the Senate was considered by a portion of the Senate Committee on the Revision of the Laws in conference between the subcommittee of the Senate committee and the subcommittee of the House committee for the purpose of seeing wherein we agreed and wherein we differed. It was the result of the conference of both committees that the substance of the old statutes relating to this subject was brought forward into the Revised Statutes and is found in a section which, instead of being specific with regard to officers of certain classes, is general in regard to all officers of the Government. Therefore this legislation is unnecessary, and I think we had better let the bill go over.

Mr. COCKRELL. I should like to ask the Senator from Massachusetts when it was that this revising committee of the Senate had this communication before them?

Mr. BOUTWELL. The revising committee of the Senate never had it by order of the Senate before them; but the House Committee on the Revision of the Laws had this communication before them.

Mr. COCKRELL. When was that?

Mr. BOUTWELL. At this very session of Congress. The two subcommittees of the two Houses met every morning during an entire week, week before last, and went over all the matters in which we agreed and in which we differed, for the purpose of bringing the two committees together, so that we might save time in the two Houses. I think, if the honorable Senator will allow this bill to go over, I shall be able to show him the section to which I refer and convince him that it is not necessary to pass a bill on the subject.

Mr. COCKRELL. As a matter of course, if the Senator objects the bill will go over; but I cannot see why in the world you do not want the officers of the Ordnance Department to make returns as other officers do. There is no law requiring them to make returns. There may be a law making them responsible for property, but there is no law requiring them to make returns.

Mr. BOUTWELL. I will look up the matter, and specify the statute on which the Committee on Revision relied.

Mr. COCKRELL. I am not responsible for the acts of the administration nor of the officers under it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection being made, the bill will go over.

DICKSON SHINAULT.

The next bill on the Calendar was the bill (S. No. 105) for the relief of Dickson Shinault, late assistant keeper of the light-vessel at Wolf Trap light-station, in the State of Virginia; which was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It directs the proper accounting officers of the Treasury to adjust and settle the account of Dickson Shinault, late assistant keeper of the light-vessel at Wolf Trap light-station, in the State of Virginia, and allow him the sum of $120, being the amount due him as salary for the first quarter of the year 1861.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Claims with an amendment in lines 8 and 9 to strike out the words "for the first quarter of the year 1861" and insert "in full for all wages in 1861."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

THOMAS J. KNOWLTON.

Mr. ALLISON. I ask unanimous consent to just go forward a little on the Calendar and take up the bill (S. No. 816) granting a pension to Thomas J. Knowlton, which will take no time, as I shall have to be absent from the Chamber for a while.

Mr. WITHERS. Let us go on with the cases in their regular order. We shall soon reach that one.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection is made, and the next bill on the Calendar will be reported.

Mr. MITCHELL. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to—ayes 27, noes 16; and (at four o'clock and forty-five minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

THURSDAY, June 1, 1876.

The House met at twelve o'clock m. Prayer by Rev. J. G. BUTLER, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

EDWARD MASON.

Mr. BRADLEY, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3626) for the relief of Edward Mason, of the District of Columbia; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of Claims, and ordered to be printed.

JOEL H. WATSON.

Mr. BRADLEY also, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3627) granting a pension to Joel H. Watson, late a private in Company D, One hundred and thirty-sixth Regiment New York Volunteer Infantry; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

POST-ROUTES.

Mr. CLARK, of Missouri. I am instructed by the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads to report the general bill establishing post-routes; and to ask that it be printed and recommitted.

The bill (H. R. No. 3628) to establish post-routes was received, read a first and second time, recommitted to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads, and ordered to be printed.

REVISION OF THE STATUTES.

Mr. DURHAM. I now ask for a vote on the bill (H. R. No. 3156) to perfect the revision of the statutes of the United States, which it was ordered by the House yesterday should be voted on immediately after the reading of the Journal to-day.

Mr. EAMES. I ask unanimous consent of the House before the vote is taken on the engrossment and third reading of the bill to offer an additional section, to which I think no one will object.

Mr. DURHAM. I will hear it read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add the following as an additional section:

SECTION 2. That nothing in this act contained shall be so construed as to alter, change, or amend the statute laws of the United States in force on the 1st day of December, 1873; it being the true intent and meaning of this act only to correct and supply any errors or omissions, if any, in the act entitled "An act to revise and consolidate the statutes of the United States in force on the 1st day of December," approved June 2, 1874.

Mr. DURHAM. I accept that. That is the intention of the bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky cannot accept it. It is for the House to agree to it.

Mr. DURHAM. I have no objection to the amendment.

Mr. GARFIELD. It may be considered as pending, and I would like to make a suggestion in regard to it. It is of the utmost importance that we understand what the statutes of the United States are; whether the volume of the Revised Statutes is the law, or whether the laws enacted previously must be resorted to in case of any doubt to know exactly what the law is.

Now, I am afraid the language used by the gentleman from Rhode Island [Mr. EAMES] will throw discredit upon the text of the Revised Statutes to this extent, that it declares legislatively that all the laws in existence at the date of the revision are the laws of the United States. If so, then what are the Revised Statutes? Query: whether you will not be compelled always to go behind the Revised Statutes in order to be sure what the law is?

Now I think the thing we ought to attain is this, that we treat the Revised Statutes as the law, and if any case occurs in which we find the revision was faulty, then let us correct it, but hold the revision to be the law. I am afraid the language employed by the gentleman from Rhode Island will tend to throw discredit upon the text of the revision rather than to strengthen it. I will be glad to look a little further into the matter in order to see whether that is not the effect of it.

Mr. DURHAM. I will simply state for the information of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARFIELD] that, as I understand this proposed second section, there can be no possible objection to it. The bill which we propose is a bill really pointing out and correcting the errors which we believe are contained in the Revised Statutes—is really a correction of the Revised Statutes. I do not want any misunderstanding about it. The committee are unanimously of the opinion that the Revised Statutes as reported by the revisers is incorrect to the extent set forth by this bill, and the bill now reported by the committee is to perfect the Revised Statutes. If there can be any misconstruction about this proposed second section, I hope the House will vote it down and pass the bill as reported by the committee; but I understand the object of this second section is to apply to this bill of ours and not to the original act of revision.

Mr. WOOD, of New York. I did not hear fully what the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. DURHAM] has said. I hope, however, that the House will not only hear what he says, but will heed what it is proposed to do in this second revision of the statutes of the United States. Those of us who were in Congress at the time of the adoption of the Revised Statutes know that a surprise was perpetrated upon the country by the incorporation of entirely new provisions of law into what now seems to be the law of the land. I know in regard to the revenue laws of the country that some of the provisions of those laws were changed entirely by that revision. The revision was adopted in this House when there were at no time more than ten or twelve members present.

I desire to call the attention of the House especially to the importance of not attempting to revise existing laws without giving the subject due consideration and weight as to the effect of such revision and the changes which such new revision may make in the law. We may find ourselves surprised at the effect of the work we are now asked to perform when it is too late.

We have already had one or two revisions of the Revised Statutes. During the last Congress we had a committee that proposed subsequently to their original report to revise their own work. After it was in print it was found that the work was so defective that its own fathers scarcely recognized it. The effect of the revision was to make a change in the tariff laws and in the revenues of the country to an amount between three millions and four millions of dollars a year. I trust that the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. DURHAM] and the committee with which he is associated have given this subject the proper attention, and that he will make himself distinctly understood by the House, so that every member may comprehend what it is now proposed to do.

I desire for one to say just here that I think it a great misfortune that we ever attempted to revise and consolidate the Statutes at Large of the United States, for advantage has already been taken of the people of the country and of Congress itself in that so-called revision. Therefore I for one, representing as one member the great commercial interests of this country, desire to know what it is proposed shall be done on this occasion, especially if any change is proposed to be made in the existing revenue laws, and if so, in what regard.

Mr. DURHAM. As the previous question has been called and sustained and there is nothing left to do but to vote on the bill, with the consent of the House I will make a statement in addition to what I stated yesterday. For the information of the gentleman from New York [Mr. WOOD] and all others concerned in this matter, I would say that there were pointed out to this committee nearly two thousand supposed errors in the Revised Statutes. The committee took under consideration all suggestions in regard to the matter, some of them coming from New York, some from the Treasury Department, many from the War Department, indeed some from all of the Departments, coming before the committee regularly through the Speaker of this House and through the presiding officer of the Senate. We took under consideration all the proposed amendments, examined them one by one, and we now report this bill as a bill correcting all the errors we believe existed in the Revised Statutes on the 1st day of December, 1873.

In answer to the question propounded last evening by the gentleman from Indiana I will say that we have in every instance incorporated into this bill the exact language that was used in the old statute. After we had completed our labors and the Senate committee had completed its labors, we found that we differed in about twenty-five or thirty particulars. We then had a joint meeting of the two committees, and this is the bill agreed upon in that joint conference, correcting all these errors and making, as we believe, all the amendments necessary to exhibit the true state of our laws as they existed on the 1st of December, 1873.

Mr. GARFIELD. Will the gentleman allow me to make an inquiry?

Mr. DURHAM. Yes, sir.

Mr. GARFIELD. I wish to inquire whether the committee have examined and embodied all the corrections that have been made between the making of the original revision and the present time?

Mr. DURHAM. We have not touched a single one of them.

Mr. GARFIELD. So that they all stand?

Mr. DURHAM. They all stand.

Mr. GARFIELD. And yours are additional corrections?

Mr. DURHAM. Additional corrections up to December, 1873, going back of that date, but not this side of it.

Mr. GARFIELD. I wish further to inquire whether in the bill now pending the committee have treated the old revision as it now stands and the additions to it as the recognized and authoritative body of the law?

Mr. DURHAM. So far as we have passed upon it, we have. There may still be inaccuracies in the Revised Statutes to which our attention may not have been called.

Mr. GARFIELD. I wish to say in this connection that I do not agree with the gentleman from New York [Mr. WOOD] in the opinion that the revision of the statutes was a bad thing. On the contrary, I believe it was one of the most beneficent of the recent undertakings of Congress. I believe, moreover, that it is our first duty to hold to that as the authoritative version of the statutes, and to make it as perfect as we possibly can. I hope therefore that the amendment of the gentleman from Rhode Island [Mr. EAMES] will not be adopted.

Mr. SOUTHARD. It is impossible for us to hear the gentleman.

Mr. GARFIELD. Then I will in conclusion make a single remark, repeating what I last said.

We started out upon the plan of consolidating, classifying, and arranging in a sort of logical sequence the general statutes of the United States. That I conceive to have been a work of very great value. All that remains to be accomplished in that direction, as I understand, is just what this bill is intended to do: to perfect the revision so that we shall have the veritable meaning of the statutes consolidated in this volume.

For that reason I regard it as unwise to adopt the amendment offered by my friend from Rhode Island, which in its terms appears to throw discredit upon the revision of the statutes, and refers us back for the authoritative version of the laws to the acts passed before the revision was undertaken. If we adopt that amendment we shall raise doubts in all the courts on any question which may come up as to which are the real statutes. It is understood that by the act of general revision we have repealed the whole body of the general Statutes at Large, and that, they being repealed, this is our only law. We are now only perfecting the details and supplying the omissions in that general law, and we ought not by any word to revert back to the old statutes, which are repealed, as having any authority whatever. I hope therefore that the amendment will not prevail.

Mr. WOOD, of New York. If the gentleman from Kentucky will pardon me, I desire to say in reply to my friend from Ohio [Mr. GARFIELD] that it is no new thing to throw discredit upon the Revised Statutes. That revision positively altered our tariff duties very materially; it changed existing laws so as to affect interests in this country amounting to millions and millions of dollars. In my judgment the courts will discredit that revision whenever the subject is properly presented for adjudication. If any change is now to be made, I desire to see the old rates of duties restored. I do not want tariff laws passed surreptitiously. I want Congress and the people to know when such alterations are made.

Mr. DURHAM. I yield a moment or two to the gentleman from Rhode Island, [Mr. EAMES.]

Mr. EAMES. I desire to state in a very few words the reasons which induced me to offer my amendment. I took this bill to my room last night and attempted to examine its provisions. So far as I recollect, it has never been read in the presence of the House; but, as it went over at the adjournment last evening, most members undoubtedly had an opportunity to examine it.

I find that, in the propositions which are made to supply omissions and correct errors in the Revised Statutes some sections are entirely omitted, other sections are stricken out and new sections substituted, and other changes are made throughout the bill upon almost every general subject of legislation. In the bill there are nearly two hundred proposed corrections of errors or supplyings of omissions which are said to exist in the Revised Statutes. I found it impossible to come to any intelligent conclusion myself; but I have no reason to question the correctness of the conclusions arrived at by the committee in the bill reported or to doubt the statement of the chairman of the committee in reporting the bill that its only purpose is simply to correct errors and supply omissions. It was with this understanding that I offered the amendment.

I think I may say to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARFIELD] that the Revised Statutes of the United States, as passed in the last Congress and approved June 22, 1874, were never intended to be and are not anything more than a consolidation and revision of the statute-laws of the United States as they existed on the 1st day of December, 1873. It is so recited in the beginning of the revision and at the close in the repealing clause the same idea is expressed. And I think, sir, it is necessary, or at any rate it will be wise and prudent at this time, before passing the bill which has been reported by the Committee on the Revision of the Laws, to adopt some amendment like that I propose in order that we may not change that legislation. As I have said, that bill covers almost every general subject of legislation, and the amendment I propose only affects the provisions of this bill, only affects the proposed correction of errors and supplying of omissions, and cannot have the effect to throw any discredit on the revision itself.

If you will allow me, I will call the attention of the House very briefly to the language used in the amendment:

> That nothing in this act contained shall be so construed as to alter, change, or amend the statute-law of the United States in force on the 1st day of December, A. D. 1873.

But, to make the thing absolutely certain and throw no discredit on the Revised Statutes, the language is used in addition to this and qualifying what precedes it, "it being the true intent and meaning of this act only to correct any errors and supply any omissions, if any, in the act entitled 'An act to revise and consolidate the statutes of the United States in force on the 1st day of December, A. D. 1873,' pproved June 22, 1874," which is the Revised Statutes. And the amendment will have no effect whatever, except so far as it applies to the provisions contained in the bill pending before the House. I hope, therefore, before a bill of this kind is passed, without any further consideration than this has had, affecting as it does almost every general subject of congressional legislation, the amendment I propose may be added to it.

Mr. DURHAM. I now call for the previous question.

The SPEAKER. The House yesterday evening, just before adjournment, seconded the demand for the previous question, and the main question on this bill was ordered. It is therefore not now in order to amend this bill without unanimous consent of the House.

Mr. GARFIELD. Allow me to make a single statement, which I think will throw further light on this subject.

Mr. WOOD, of New York. I object to any proceeding out of order.

Mr. GARFIELD. The clause the gentleman has read was put in as a sort of prefatory statement what this great act of revision was, but it did not affect the legal character of the revision adopted, because (I read from section 5596 the following words)—

> All acts of Congress passed prior to the said 1st day of December, 1873, any portion of which is embraced in any section of said revision, are hereby repealed.

So, being a sweeping, unequivocal provision of an act adopted in the usual form and approved by the President, all these prior acts are no longer any part of our law. We embarked upon the work of making a statute as one, and if it were full of blunders—and I admit there were many serious ones—the only thing that remained for us was to correct them, and only for the aid the old repealed statutes would give us in making that correction here they are of no value whatever. The old repealed statutes are mere historical monuments, by which we are able to make any corrections we desire, but they have no more force than the laws of England.

Mr. EAMES rose.

Mr. DURHAM. I cannot yield any further.

Mr. SOUTHARD. I interpose an objection to the amendment.

The SPEAKER. The Chair desires permission to complete a statement he began a minute ago. Strictly, this amendment cannot come in this morning, the previous question having been seconded and the main question ordered yesterday. After the amendment was offered it was accepted by the gentleman who controls the bill, and was read to the House, was considered by the House, and the Chair must now hold that notwithstanding what has gone before it is properly before the House, and must be adopted or rejected. The question therefore is, Will the House agree to the amendment proposed to this bill by the gentleman from Rhode Island?

Mr. HOLMAN. Let the amendment be again reported to the House.

Mr. EAMES. Add to the amendment the words "as embraced in the Revised Statutes."

The SPEAKER. The Chair hears no objection, and it will be so modified.

Mr. DURHAM. That defeats the whole object of the bill.

Mr. EAMES. Not at all.

Mr. DURHAM. I hope the House will vote it down.

Mr. EAMES. I withdraw the modification.

Mr. WOOD, of New York. I am satisfied the House does not understand the amendment or the effect of it.

The SPEAKER. It is too late to debate it. The amendment has been thrice read, and the House is now dividing.

The house divided; and there were ayes 18, noes not counted.

So the amendment was rejected.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. DURHAM moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

MERCHANDISE WITHDRAWN FROM BONDED WAREHOUSE.

Mr. DURHAM, by unanimous consent, from the Committee on the Revision of the Laws, reported back a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury transmitting draught of a bill to regulate the transportation of merchandise from bonded warehouses; and the committee was discharged from the further consideration of the same, and it was referred to the Committee of Ways and Means.

SECTION 3945 OF REVISED STATUTES.

Mr. DURHAM also, by unanimous consent, from the same committee, reported back the bill (H. R. No. 3451) to amend section 3945 of the Revised Statutes of the United States; and the committee was discharged from the further consideration of the same, and it was referred to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post Roads.

PENSIONS TO CHILDREN OF DECEASED PENSIONERS.

Mr. DURHAM also, by unanimous consent, from the same committee, reported back the bill (H. R. No. 3605) to modify and amend section 4718 of the Revised Statutes of the United States so as to provide for the payment of pensions to the children of deceased pensioners, in certain cases; and the committee was discharged from the further consideration of the same, and it was referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA BUSINESS.

Mr. BUCKNER. I desire to ask unanimous consent of the House to set aside next Monday after two o'clock for District business. There are some important matters of business for the District that ought to be acted on, and I hope there will be no objection.

Mr. RANDALL. I object. The District Committee have their regular day under the rule.

REDUCTION OF THE ARMY.

Mr. BANNING. I call up as the unfinished business the bill (H. R. No. 2935) to promote the efficiency of the Army of the United States, to provide for its gradual reduction, and to consolidate certain of its staff departments, and for other purposes.

I desire to say before the House resumes the consideration of this bill that I hope the House will give unanimous consent, as the previous question is now operating, to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HURLBUT] to offer a substitute for the bill to be voted on. There is also an amendment to the first section which a gentleman wishes to offer, and I hope permission to offer that will also be granted. Then I hope the House will extend the time half an hour, as there are two gentlemen, the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. SMALLS] and his colleague, [Mr. MACKEY,] who desire to speak—the one ten minutes, the other twenty minutes.

Mr. MACKEY, of South Carolina. I, also, desire to amend the bill by striking out lines 20 to 23 of section 1.

Mr. BANNING. I cannot consent at this time to any other amendments which I have not been asked before to admit as pending. But I hope the House will grant my request on behalf of the gentlemen from South Carolina, so that none may say that they have not had a full opportunity to discuss the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore, (Mr. COX.) The Chair understands that the previous question has been called and ordered on this bill. The pending question is on the recommitment of the bill; and on the question of recommitment the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BANNING] asks unanimous consent that the time for debate be extended half an hour.

Mr. SMALLS. I thought that the demand for the previous question was now pending.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question of recommitment is now pending, and on that the previous question has been ordered.

Mr. SMALLS. If the previous question has been ordered and I am precluded from offering an amendment, I have no desire to speak. I desire to offer an amendment and to make some remarks in support of it. If the gentleman from Ohio does not allow me to offer an amendment, I will yield the time allowed me to my colleague.

Mr. BANNING. What is the amendment which the gentleman wishes to offer?

Mr. SMALLS. If the gentleman will allow me I will submit the amendment by unanimous consent to be voted upon.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the gentleman from South Carolina being permitted to offer an amendment to be considered as pending?

Mr. RANDALL. I would like to have the amendment read, and reserve the right to object till I hear it read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will read the amendment tendered by the gentleman from South Carolina, [Mr. SMALLS.]

The Clerk read as follows:

Insert at line 19, section 1, after the word "service," the following:

Provided further, that hereafter in the enlistment of men in the Army, or the merging of enlisted men into other organizations, no distinction whatever shall be made on account of race or color.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to this amendment being considered as pending?

Mr. RANDALL. I object.

Mr. HURLBUT. With the consent of the Committee on Military Affairs, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk as a substitute for the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the President of the United States be requested and directed to appoint a commission of seven officers of the Army of distinguished service and knowledge, who shall report through the President, as soon as practicable, their opinions upon the best method of re-organizing the Army of the United States, and especially upon the best method of organizing the staff departments with a view to economy and efficiency.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. If there be no objection, this amendment will be considered as pending.

There was no objection.

Mr. STEELE. I ask unanimous consent to offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend section 1 of the bill by striking out lines 3 and 4 and inserting in lieu thereof the following:

That the number of cavalry regiments is hereby fixed at ten, and the number of infantry regiments is hereby reduced to eighteen.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to this amendment being considered as pending?

Mr. RANDALL. The bill of the committee, as I understand, proposes to make the number of cavalry regiments eight.

Mr. BANNING. The number of cavalry regiments in the gentleman's amendment is the same as exists now. I would suggest that there is no necessity for that portion of the amendment.

Mr. STEELE. The only effect of the amendment would be to reduce the number of infantry regiments. It would have no effect on the cavalry.

Mr. BANNING. The number of cavalry regiments is now ten under the existing law. This amendment changes the existing law only by reducing the infantry regiments to eighteen. I suggest to the gentleman that he strike out the first portion of his amendment.

Mr. STEELE. I agree to that.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the amendment of the gentleman from Wyoming, as modified, being considered as pending?

There was no objection.

Mr. MACKEY, of South Carolina. I now ask unanimous consent to offer the following amendment:

Strike out lines 20 to 23 of section 1, to wit, these words:

Sections 1104 and 1108 of the Revised Statutes, providing that the enlisted men of certain regiments shall be colored men, are hereby repealed.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to this amendment being considered as pending?

Mr. O'BRIEN. This is substantially the same amendment as that offered by the gentleman's colleague, [Mr. SMALLS,] and which has already been objected to. I object.

Mr. BANNING. I now yield to the gentleman from South Carolina, [Mr. SMALLS.]

Mr. SMALLS. Inasmuch as the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] objects to the amendment I propose, I yield to my colleague [Mr. MACKEY] the ten minutes conceded to me by the gentleman from Ohio. I had intended to speak to the amendment which I desired to offer; but as the gentleman from Pennsylvania saw fit to object to it, I yield my time to my colleague.

Mr. MACKEY, of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I desire to address myself particularly to that portion of this bill which proposes to discontinue the enlistment of colored men in the Army by repealing those sections of the Revised Statutes which provide that the enlisted men of certain regiments shall be colored men. It is true that the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BANNING] who has this bill in charge denies that this is the object of that portion of the bill. In answer to an inquiry last Saturday, he stated that the bill merely does away "with that odious feature in the law which says that the privates of two cavalry regiments and of two infantry regiments shall be colored men, and it leaves the question open as it is in this House and as it is in all the departments of the Government." In other words, he seeks to convey the impression that while this bill does away with colored regiments as distinct organizations, yet it imposes no restraint upon colored men enlisting if they so desire, or, in his own words, "it leaves it open to all." Then, if that really be the object of the bill, why is objection made to the amendment offered by my colleague, [Mr. SMALLS,] which simply provides that hereafter in the enlistment of men in the Army, or the merging of enlisted men into other organizations, no distinction whatever shall be made on account of race or color? Objection is made by the supporters of this bill even to the consideration of this amendment, showing plainly the insincerity of their assertions that the bill makes no discrimination against colored men enlisting. If while declaring that this bill makes no discrimination against colored men the supporters of the bill persistently object to the insertion therein of a proviso to that effect, then we must conclude that their declaration is untrue and that the real object in seeking a repeal of the law which provides for colored regiments is to discontinue entirely the enlistment of colored men. If additional evidence is needed that the real intention of the advocates of this bill is to prevent any further enlistment of colored men, it will be found in the speech made by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BANNING] last Saturday. Referring to the colored troops, in that speech he declares that—

The experiment has proven a disastrous failure. Colored men will no longer enlist, so that it is found impossible to keep up the regiments; while those who do enter the Army are of such a class that they cannot be trusted or made of any benefit to themselves or the country.

He then calls attention to the report of an inspector-general in the Army to sustain his assertions. But, if not opposed to the enlistment of colored men, why endeavor to prove that as soldiers they are a failure? Repeal the existing law which provides for certain colored regiments and the enlistment of colored men must cease, for with the repeal of this law the matter will then be left entirely to the discretion of a few enlisting officers who will never accept colored men as recruits if those colored men are to be assigned to white regiments. Moreover, few colored men, even if the opportunity is afforded them, will care to enlist in regiments composed entirely of white men, subject as they must be to all the prejudices of the ignorant and uneducated men always largely composing the regular Army in time of peace. The enlistment of colored men in white regiments at the present time is utterly impracticable, and of this fact no one is better aware than the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. BANNING,] for in his speech already alluded to I find a memorandum from the Adjutant-General's Office, in which it is stated that—

General Ord has expressed opinions adverse to mixing white and colored troops in the same garrison.

The repeal of the law which now provides for these colored regiments is only an indirect way, therefore, of getting rid of colored soldiers in the Army. Practically its effect will be to discontinue the enlistment of all colored men, and this is well understood by those who favor this bill, for after having endeavored to prove that colored men are unfit for soldiers, and after citing the opinion of a prominent Army officer that it is impossible to mix white and colored troops in the same garrison, they then demand the repeal of the law providing for colored regiments, declaring that their only intention is to repeal a law which, in the words of the gentleman from Ohio, "is an insult to the race it was meant to compliment." Thus they seek under the guise of a worthy motive to accomplish the unworthy one of practically closing the Army against all colored men.

I am now contending for the right of the colored man to enlist in the Army if he so desires, because to deny him that privilege seems to me exceedingly unjust in view of the fact that this country has never failed in time of war to call upon these people to fight as soldiers in her defense. In time of war we have always willingly accepted their services as soldiers. It is only in time of peace that we say to them, "No longer shall you be soldiers of ours." In time of peace when the duty of a soldier is a mere pastime, when your soldier seldom hears the thunder of cannon except when fired as a salute, or the roar of musketry except in sham battles, you say keep colored men out of the Army; but when the hour of danger approaches and the country needs all the soldiers she can get, you are then willing that the men of color shall also be allowed a chance to be shot at by the enemy. This is no mere idle assertion; the facts of history prove it beyond doubt. In the revolutionary war these people fought side by side in the army as soldiers with our forefathers in the cause of liberty and independence. In the war of 1812 they helped to fight our battles both by land and sea. And in the great rebellion, when white men were beginning to grow weary and tired of the fight and could no longer be procured in sufficient numbers to fill up the gaps, the colored men were at last willingly accepted as soldiers of the Union.

In this centennial year, when we are celebrating the heroic deeds of our revolutionary ancestors, it will not be inappropriate for me to recall to the memory of those who are now seeking to close the Army against colored men some of the services that class of people performed during that glorious struggle.

CRISPUS ATTUCKS.

Who does not remember the story of Crispus Attucks, the mulatto slave and the hero of the Boston massacre? On that memorable 5th of March, 1770, when all Boston was excited with patriotic indignation at the presence of the British troops, and while hundreds of white patriots were deliberating what was to be done, this brave and fearless negro, laying aside all hesitation, urged the populace to meet the red-coats and drive them from the streets. The crowd, acting upon his suggestion, began the attack, led by Crispus Attucks, who was the first to fall, pierced by two balls, one in each breast. "Don't hesitate! Come on! We'll drive these rebels out of Boston!" were the last words of this first martyr to American liberty. It is true he was not "a soldier in the regular Army," because just at that time we had not yet reached that respectable stage of existence when we could boast of such an organization, but he fell in a far nobler fight than that of army against army, he fell at the head of a brave band of Americans who, John Adams has justly said, "could not restrain their emotion or stop to inquire what they must do according to the letter of the law."

BATTLE OF BUNKER HILL.

It is due no doubt to the noble example of Crispus Attucks that a few years after we find at the battle of Bunker Hill negro soldiers fighting side by side with their white brethren. It will be remembered that on that occasion Major Pitcairn of the British marines fell just as he had mounted the American redoubt, shouting, "The day is ours!" The shot which laid him low was fired by Peter Salem, a black soldier of Colonel Nixon's regiment, and the scene is thus described by an eye-witness:

The major (Pitcairn) had passed the storm of our fire without and had mounted the redoubt, when, waving his sword, he commanded in a loud voice the "rebels" to surrender. His sudden appearance and his commanding air at first startled the men immediately before him. They neither answered or fired, probably not being exactly certain what was next to be done. At this critical moment a negro soldier stepped forward, and, aiming his musket directly at the major's bosom, blew him through.

Another colored soldier who participated in the battle of Bunker Hill is favorably noticed in a petition to the general court of Massachusetts Bay. This petition, dated less than six months after the event and signed by some of the principal officers, declares "that a negro man called Salem Poor, of Colonel Frye's regiment, Captain Ames's company, in the late battle at Charlestown, behaved like an experienced officer as well as an excellent soldier. To set forth particulars of his conduct would be tedious. We would only beg to say, in the person of this said negro centers a brave and gallant soldier."

Of the colored soldiers in the revolutionary army at the time of the battle of Bunker Hill the historian Bancroft (History of the United States, volume 7, page 421) says:

Nor should history forget to record that as in the army at Cambridge, so also in this gallant band, the free negroes of the colony had their representatives. For the right of free negroes to bear arms in the public defense was at that day as little disputed in New England as their other rights. They took their place, not in a separate corps, but in the ranks with the white man; and their names may be read on the pension-rolls of the country, side by side with those of other soldiers of the Revolution.

General Thomas, writing under date of October 24, 1775, to John Adams upon the subject of the army, says:

We have some negroes; but I look on them, in general, equally serviceable with other men for fatigue, and in action many of them have proved themselves brave.

OPPOSITION TO COLORED SOLDIERS.

Notwithstanding the good conduct and bravery of the negro soldiers at Bunker Hill, a prejudice against the employment of negro soldiers in the army soon began to show itself; and the question at a very early stage of the Revolution produced a controversy, both in the army and in Congress, which did not, however, continue very long. The opposition was at first confined to the enlistment of slaves, for at the commencement of the war not only were free negroes received into the army, but in many instances slaves also stood in the ranks with freemen. This opposition began even before the battle of Bunker Hill, but arose, however, from a far nobler principle than that which sought to exclude all negroes from the army. Many of the patriots of the Revolution were unwilling to use as soldiers in an army raised for establishing national liberty those who were held in bondage. It was this motive, no doubt, which prompted the resolution adopted by the Massachusetts committee of safety, on the 20th May, 1775:

Resolved, That in the opinion of this committee, as the contest now between Great Britain and the colonies respects the liberties and privileges of the latter, which the colonies are determined to maintain, that the admission of any persons, as soldiers, into the army now raising, but only such as are freemen, will be inconsistent with the principles that are to be supported, and reflect dishonor on this colony; and that no slaves be admitted into this army upon any consideration whatever.

This resolution, it will be perceived, opposed the enlistment of slaves only, and was no doubt adopted for the purpose of compelling the manumission of all slaves who might desire to become soldiers.

On the 26th of September, 1775, an attempt was made in the Continental Congress to instruct General Washington to discharge all negroes, as well slaves as freemen, in his army. The supporters of this measure, on account of the powerful opposition, failed, however, to carry their point. Soon after, on the 8th of October, 1775, a council of war was held at Washington's headquarters, at which were present Generals Washington, Ward, Lee, Putnam, Thomas, Spencer, Heath, Sullivan, Greene, and Gates. The question was then considered whether it was advisable to enlist any negroes in the new army, and whether a distinction should be made between slaves and freemen.

It was unanimously agreed to reject all slaves, and by a great majority to reject negroes altogether.

This action of the council of war was sustained by the committee of conference, consisting of Dr. Franklin, Benjamin Harrison, and Thomas Lynch, which met at Cambridge, October 18, 1775, with the deputy governors of Connecticut and Rhode Island and the committee of the council of Massachusetts Bay, to confer with General Washington in relation to the condition of the army and to devise a method for its improvement. On the 23d of October the subject of negro soldiers came before them for action, and, like the council of war, they decided to exclude negroes altogether from the army. Accordingly General Washington, on the 12th of November, 1775, in general orders, says:

Neither negroes, boys unable to bear arms, nor old men unfit to endure the fatigues of the campaign are to be enlisted.

This order, however, did not long remain in force, for upon representations being made to General Washington that the "free negroes" who had served in his army were very much dissatisfied at being discarded, he assumed the responsibility of acting contrary to the instructions of the council of war and the committee of conference, and on the 30th of December, 1775, issued general orders authorizing the enlistment of free negroes in the army. In these orders he says:

As the general is informed that numbers of free negroes are desirous of enlisting, he gives leave to the recruiting officers to entertain them, and promises to lay the matter before Congress, who he doubts not will approve of it.

The next day Washington communicated his action to the President of Congress, adding:

If this is disapproved of by Congress, I will put a stop to it.

Washington's letter was referred to a committee on the 15th of January, 1776, and upon their report on the following day Congress determined—

That the free negroes who have served faithfully in the army at Cambridge may be re-enlisted therein, but no others.

After this action of Congress the opposition to the enlistment of negro soldiers seems to have gradually ceased, until nearly every State by legislative act or by practice sanctioned their employment. While Congress did nothing toward settling a general policy with regard to their employment, each State decided the matter for itself, and all through the Revolution colored men continued to be admitted into the line of the Army under various laws, and sometimes under no law, and often in defiance of law. In some of the States they were earnestly besought to enlist, while in very few of the States were their services as soldiers refused. Almost every State had its colored representatives among the soldiery; and not only were the names of colored men entered with those of white citizens on the muster-rolls, but often distinct companies and even regiments were formed of this class of persons.

THE BLACK REGIMENT OF RHODE ISLAND.

Most prominent among these distinct organizations of colored soldiers was the celebrated black regiment of Rhode Island. Its history is as remarkable as any part of the subject we are now discussing.

In January, 1778, it was proposed by General Varnum, in a communication to Washington, (dated January 2, 1778,) that the two Rhode Island battalions in camp at Valley Forge should be united, and that the officers of one, Colonel Greene, Lieutenant-Colonel Olney, and Major Ward, with their subalterns, be sent to Rhode Island to enlist a battalion of negroes for the continental service. General Washington at once wrote to Governor Cooke, of Rhode Island, inclosing General Varnum's letter. Both letters were laid before the General Assembly at the February session; and that body, after due deliberation, passed an act providing "that every able-bodied negro, mulatto, or Indian-man slave" in the State might enlist in either of the two battalions to serve during the continuance of the war; that every slave so enlisting should become absolutely free, the owners to be paid by the State.

The soldiers of this newly raised black regiment soon had an opportunity of showing of what stuff they were made. Their conduct at the "battle of Rhode Island, on the 29th of August, 1778, entitles them to perpetual honor. That battle Lafayette pronounced 'the best fought battle of the war,'" and the success of the Americans on that occasion was owing in a great degree to the good fighting of these negro soldiers. Arnold, in his History of Rhode Island, volume 2, pages 427, 428, thus closes his account of this battle:

A third time the enemy, with desperate courage and increased strength, attempted to assail the redoubt, and would have carried it but for the timely aid of two continental battalions dispatched by Sullivan to support his almost exhausted troops. It was in repelling these furious onsets that the newly raised black regiment under Colonel Greene distinguished itself by deeds of desperate valor. Posted behind a thicket in the valley, they three times drove back the Hessians who charged repeatedly down the hill to dislodge them, and so determined were the enemy in these successive charges, that the day after the battle the Hessian colonel, upon whom this duty had devolved, applied to exchange his command and go to New York, because he dared not lead his regiment again to battle lest his men should shoot him for having caused them so much loss.

Dr. Harris, who served under Washington in the Revolution, and who was a participant in the battle of Rhode Island, gives additional testimony as to the bravery and valor of this black regiment on that occasion. In an address delivered in 1842 he says:

When stationed in the State of Rhode Island, the regiment to which I belonged was once ordered to what was called a flanking position; that is, upon a place which the enemy must pass in order to come round in our rear to drive us from the fort. This pass was everything both to them and to us; of course it was a post of imminent danger. They attacked us with great fury, but were repulsed. They re-enforced and attacked us again with more vigor and determination, and again were repulsed. Again they re-enforced and attacked us the third time with the most desperate courage and resolution, but a third time were repulsed. The contest was fearful. Our position was hotly disputed and as hotly maintained. * * *

There was a black regiment in the same situation. Yes, a regiment of negroes, fighting for our liberty and independence; not a white man among them but the officers, stationed in this same dangerous and responsible position. Had they been unfaithful or given way before the enemy all would have been lost. Three times in succession were they attacked with most desperate valor and fury by well-disciplined and veteran troops, and three times did they successfully repel the assault and thus preserve our army from capture.

When Colonel Greene was surprised and murdered on the 14th of May, 1781, near Point's Bridge, New York, his colored soldiers heroically defended him till they were cut to pieces, and the enemy reached him over the dead bodies of his faithful guard of blacks, every one of whom was killed.

MAJOR LAWRENCE'S COLORED COMPANY.

The black regiment of Rhode Island was not the only colored organization in the revolutionary army. Major William Lawrence, who served from the commencement to the close of the Revolution, and who for a considerable period was attached to General Sullivan's staff as adjutant, at one time commanded "a company whose rank and file were all negroes, of whose courage, military discipline, and fidelity," says his biographer, "he always spoke with respect." On one occasion, being out reconnoitering with this company, he got so far in advance of his command that he was surrounded and on the point of being made prisoner by the enemy. The men, soon discovering his peril, rushed to his rescue, and fought with the most determined bravery till that rescue was effectually secured. He never forgot this circumstance, and ever after took especial pains to show kindness and hospitality to any individual of the colored race who came near his dwelling.

COLORED SOLDIERS OF CONNECTICUT.

Connecticut is also said to have raised a company of colored soldiers when the difficulties of recruiting became pressing, and Colonel David Humphreys, who was afterward attached to the military family of Washington, accepted the command of these men, who are said to have "conducted themselves with fidelity and efficiency throughout the war." This company was a part of Meigs's (afterward Butler's) regiment in the Connecticut Line.

In regard to the enlistment of colored men in Connecticut Mr. J. H. Trumbull, editor of the Public Records of Connecticut, says:

In point of fact, some hundreds of blacks—slaves and freemen—were enlisted, from time to time, in the regiments of the State troops and of the Connecticut Line. How many it is impossible to tell; for from first to last the company or regimental rolls indicate no distinctions of color. The name is the only guide; and in turning over the rolls of the Connecticut Line, the frequent recurrence of names which were exclusively appropriated to negroes and slaves, show how considerable was their proportion of the material of the Connecticut army.

In reference to the efficiency of these colored soldiers, he adds:

So far as my acquaintance extends, almost every family has its traditions of the good and faithful service of a black servant or slave who was killed in battle, or served through the war and came home to tell stories of hard fighting and draw his pension. In my own native town—not a large one—I remember five such pensioners, three of whom, I believe, had been slaves, and in fact were slaves to the day of their death.

MASSACHUSETTS.

Thomas Kench, belonging to Colonel Craft's regiment of artillery, then at Castle Island, in a communication under date of 3d of April, 1778, to the Legislature of Massachusetts upon the necessity of raising additional forces, thus speaks of the colored soldiers:

We have divers of them in our service, mixed with white men. But I think it would be more proper to raise a body by themselves than to have them intermixed with the white men; and their ambition would entirely be to outdo the white men in every measure that the fortune of war calls a soldier to endure. And I could rely with dependence upon them in the field of battle or to any post that I was sent to defend with them.

On the 11th of April, 1778, Kench's petition was referred to a joint committee "to consider the same and report." On the 17th a resolution of the General Assembly of Rhode Island for enlisting negroes in the public service was referred to the same committee, and on the 28th they submitted the following report:

The committee of both houses upon the letter of Thomas Kench, with other papers accompanying it, have attended to that service, and report:

That there be one regiment of volunteers raised as soon as possible, to serve during the war, to consist of the same number of officers and privates as those of a continental regiment; that one sergeant in each company and every higher officer in the said regiment shall be white men; and that all the other sergeants, inferior officers, and privates shall be negroes, mulattoes, or Indians.

One of the colored companies raised in Massachusetts was called "The Bucks of America," and to this company at the close of the revolutionary war Governor Hancock presented a silk flag as a tribute to their courage and devotion throughout the struggle.

Wherever the colored men were not organized into separate corps they could be found in large numbers scattered throughout white regiments. A Hessian officer who was with Burgoyne at the time of his surrender, in an entry in his journal of October 23, 1777, says, "that no regiment is to be seen in which there are not negroes in abundance; and among them there are able-bodied, strong, and brave fellows."

General Schuyler, writing from Saratoga July 23, 1777, to the president of Massachusetts Bay, says:

That of the few continental troops we have had to the northward, one-third part is composed of men too far advanced in years for field service, of boys, or rather children, and, mortifying barely to mention, of negroes.

VIRGINIA.

It was not only in the Northern States that colored men were used as soldiers. In some of the Southern States their services were gladly accepted. At an early date in our revolutionary struggle colored men appear to have been accepted as soldiers in many of the regiments raised in Virginia; for as early as 1777 the general assembly of that State passed an act that no negro should be enlisted without a certificate of freedom, the preamble to which declares that slaves had deserted their masters and, under pretense of being freemen, had enlisted as soldiers. Notwithstanding this act, slaves continued to be enlisted, and at the close of the war, an attempt being made by some vile wretches to re-enslave some of these colored soldiers, the Legislature of Virginia, to the honor of that State, passed, in 1783, a law "directing the emancipation of certain slaves who have served as soldiers in this State." The preamble to this act recites that—

Whereas it hath been represented to the present General Assembly that during the course of the war many persons in this State had caused their slaves to enlist in certain regiments or corps raised within the same, having tendered such slaves to the officers appointed to recruit forces within the State as substitutes for free persons whose lot or duty it was to serve in such regiments or corps, at the same time representing to such recruiting officers that the slaves so enlisted by their direction and concurrence were freemen; and it appearing further to this Assembly that, on the expiration of the term of enlistment of such slaves, the former owners have attempted again to force them to return to a state of servitude, contrary to the principles of justice and to their own solemn promise; and whereas it appears just and reasonable that all persons enlisted as aforesaid, who have faithfully served agreeably to the terms of their enlistment, and have thereby of course contributed toward the establishment of American liberty and independence, should enjoy the blessings of freedom as a reward for their toils and labors.

This act then declares—

That each and every slave who, by the appointment and direction of his owner, hath enlisted in any regiment or corps raised within this State, either in Continental or State establishment, and hath been received as a substitute for any free person whose duty or lot it was to serve in such regiment or corps, and hath served faithfully during the term of such enlistment, or hath been discharged from such service by some officer duly authorized to grant such discharge, shall, from and after the passing of this act, be fully and completely emancipated, and shall be held and deemed free, in as full and ample a manner as if each and every of them were specially named in this act; and the attorney general for the Commonwealth is hereby required to commence an action, in forma pauperis, in behalf of any of the persons above described who shall, after the passing of this act, be detained in servitude by any person whatsoever; and if, upon such prosecution, it shall appear that the pauper is entitled to his freedom in consequence of this act, a jury shall be impaneled to assess the damages for his detention.

MARYLAND AND NORTH CAROLINA.

In a "return of negroes in the army, 24th August, 1778," signed Alexander Scammell, Adjutant-General, it appears there were fifty-eight negroes in the North Carolina brigade and sixty in the Second Maryland. A few years later, in 1781, the Legislature of Maryland resolved to raise immediately seven hundred and fifty negroes to be incorporated with the other troops.

SOUTH CAROLINA AND GEORGIA.

Just here, I regret to state that South Carolina and Georgia alone remained firm throughout the revolutionary war in their opposition to the employment of the negroes as soldiers. In South Carolina this opposition was maintained to the last against the opinion of many of her best men, against the recommendation of Congress, and against the expressed wishes and desire of General Greene and many other brave officers who were engaged in defending her soil.

Both the Laurens favored the employment of negro soldiers, and Colonel John Laurens, a gallant officer and a fine scholar, the intimate friend of Washington, Greene, and Hamilton, and who has been called the "Chevalier Bayard of America," at a very early period of the Revolution, "recognizing the negro as a man, boldly claimed him as an ally in the war for independence." He had been in active service in Rhode Island and elsewhere, and having witnessed the usefulness and bravery of the colored soldiers, he returned to South Carolina for the purpose of using his personal influence to induce the proper authorities to take the necessary steps for raising black troops. Alexander Hamilton gave the measure his unqualified and hearty support, as is shown by the following extract from a letter bearing date March 14, 1779, from him to John Jay, upon the subject:

Colonel Laurens, who will have the honor of delivering you this letter, is on his way to South Carolina on a project which I think, in the present situation of affairs there, is a very good one and deserves every kind of support and encouragement. This is, to raise two, three, or four battalions of negroes, with the assistance of the government of that State, by contributions from the owners in proportion to the number they possess. If you should think proper to enter upon the subject with him he will give you a detail of his plan. He wishes to have it recommended by Congress to the State; and, as an inducement, that they should engage to take these battalions into continental pay.

It appears to me that an expedient of this kind in the present state of southern affairs is the most rational that can be adopted and promises very important advantages. Indeed, I hardly see how a sufficient force can be collected in that quarter without it; and the enemy's operations there are growing infinitely more serious and formidable. I have not the least doubt that the negroes will make very excellent soldiers with proper management; and I will venture to pronounce that they cannot be put into better hands than those of Mr. Laurens.

After combating the idea that they are too stupid for soldiers, in the course of which he admits "their natural faculties are probably as good as ours," he adds:

I foresee that this project will have to combat much opposition from prejudice and self interest. The contempt we have been taught to entertain for the blacks makes us fancy many things that are founded neither in reason nor experience; and an unwillingness to part with property of so valuable a kind will furnish a thousand arguments to show the impracticability or pernicious tendency of a scheme which requires such a sacrifice.

The arguments which self-interest then furnished against the use of colored troops are now supplied by unreasonable prejudice.

On the 16th of March, 1779, Henry Laurens, the distinguished member of Congress from South Carolina, and at one time president of that body, and also the father of John Laurens, wrote to Washington, saying:

Had we arms for three thousand such black men as I could select in South Carolina, I should have no doubt of success in driving the British out of Georgia and subduing East Florida before the end of July.

On the 27th of March, 1779, the committee of Congress, who had been appointed "to take into consideration the circumstances of the Southern States and the ways and means for their safety and defense," submitted a report in which it is stated—

That it is suggested by the delegates of the said State (South Carolina) and by Mr. Huger, that a force might be raised in the said State from among the negroes which would not only be formidable to the enemy from their numbers, and the discipline of which they would very readily admit, but would also lessen the danger from revolts and desertions by detaching the most vigorous and enterprising from among the negroes.

The committee also submitted a series of resolutions recommending the States of South Carolina and Georgia "to take measures immediately for raising three thousand able-bodied negroes." The resolutions may be found in the secret journals of Congress, volume 1, page 106. The first two paragraphs of the first resolution read as follows:

Resolved, That it be recommended to the States of South Carolina and Georgia, if they shall think the same expedient, to take measures immediately for raising three thousand able-bodied negroes.

That the said negroes be formed into separate corps, as battalions, according to the arrangements adopted for the main army, to be commanded by white commissioned and non-commissioned officers.

The remaining paragraphs of the first resolution simply relate to the appointment of commissioned and non-commissioned officers. The second resolution, after making provision for the payment for slaves enlisted, provides for the emancipation of "every negro who shall well and faithfully serve as a soldier to the end of the present war."

On the same day Congress passed a resolution commissioning John Laurens as a lieutenant-colonel, and he at once proceeded to South Carolina to urge upon the Legislature the adoption of the proposed plan. In a letter written by him at that time he says:

It appears to me that I should be inexcusable in the light of a citizen if I did not continue my utmost efforts for carrying the plan of the black levies into execution, while there remains the smallest hope of success. * * * The House of Representatives will be convened in a few days. I intend to qualify and make a final effort! O, that I were a Demosthenes! The Athenians never deserved a more bitter exprobration than our countrymen.

Colonel Laurens, in spite of his ardor, met with poor encouragement. Dr. David Ramsay, in a letter to William Henry Drayton, dated Charleston, September 1, 1779, says:

The measure for embodying the negroes had about twelve votes; it was received with horror by the planters, who figured to themselves terrible consequences.

General Lincoln also earnestly and repeatedly urged the necessity of enlisting the blacks. In a letter to Governor Rutledge, dated Charleston, March 13, 1780, he says:

Give me leave to add once more that I think the measure of raising a black corps a necessary one; that I have great reason to believe, if permission is given for it, that many men would soon be obtained. I have repeatedly urged this matter, not only because Congress have recommended it, and because it thereby becomes my duty to attempt to have it executed, but because my own mind suggests the utility and importance of the measure as the safety of the town makes it necessary.

To the efforts of Laurens, Huger, and Lincoln to induce the authorities of South Carolina to consent to the raising of some black troops were added those of one of America's ablest and most successful generals, General Nathaniel Greene, who at that time was in command of the southern army. "That they would make good soldiers he had not the least doubt," for he had seen them tried. His own body-servant—a negro—had fought in the Maryland ranks at Eutaw, and was found after the battle transfixed with a bayonet, and with his own bayonet set deep with mortal thrust in the body of his dead antagonist. In a letter to Washington, dated January 24, 1782, General Greene says:

I have recommended to this State (South Carolina) to raise some black regiments. To fill up the regiments with whites is impracticable, and to get re-enforcements from the northward precarious, and at least difficult, from the prejudices respecting the climate. Some are for it, but the far greater part of the people are opposed to it.

The recommendation to which he alludes was contained in a letter from him to Governor Rutledge:

The natural strength of the country—in point of numbers appears to me to consist much more in the blacks than in the whites. Could they be incorporated and employed for its defense, it would afford you double security. That they would make good soldiers I have not the least doubt.

He says—

He adds that in the impoverished condition of the treasury he could see no other way of raising a sufficient force for the protection of the country. Had this been done, he thought, from the beginning of the war, the enemy would never have gotten a foothold in it. He concludes by asking that four regiments should be raised among the blacks, "two upon the Continental and two upon the State establishment," together with "a corps of pioneers and a corps of artificers, each to consist of about eighty men."

The planters still thought the experiment a dangerous one. The Legislature agreed with them, and the project was relinquished. General Greene shortly after submitted another proposition which is contained in the following letter to Governor Rutledge dated February 11, 1782:

In answer to your excellency's letter upon the proposition of furnishing the Army with a number of negroes, provided their services may be accounted for by Congress, I beg leave to observe, if they can be had upon such terms as will engage their fidelity, the public could employ four or five hundred to great advantage. But unless the negroes can have an interest in the servitude, I am persuaded they will be of little benefit and by no means to be depended on. I would beg leave to propose, therefore, that the public clothe them, and that the negroes be allowed the same wages allowed by Congress to the soldiers of the Continental Army. If this is agreed to, the fidelity of the negroes may be depended on, and they may perhaps perform the service expected from them with cheerfulness.

I think we could employ 140 wagoners, 150 pioneers, 120 artificers, and 20 or 30 servants to advantage. If this number could be immediately furnished the Army, such as are good men and such as shall be approved of on inspection, I will recommend the matter fully to Congress for their approbation, that the State may be allowed for the same in their public accounts.

This letter was sent by Governor Mathews, who had just succeeded Governor Rutledge, to the Legislature, accompanied by the following communication:

FEBRUARY 12, 1782.

HONORABLE GENTLEMEN: I herewith send you the copy of a letter from Major General Greene to me. If the proposition therein made of furnishing the Army with a number of negroes for the different services he has mentioned should meet your approbation, it will enable General Greene to throw into the ranks a considerable number of valuable soldiers. I therefore recommend this matter most earnestly to your consideration.

JOHN MATHEWS.

No action seems to have been taken upon this proposition, notwithstanding in the very beginning of the struggle the provincial congress of South Carolina had authorized military officers to use slaves as pioneers and laborers, as appears by the following resolution adopted November 20, 1775:

Resolved, That the colonels of the several regiments of militia throughout the Colony have leave to enroll such a number of able male slaves, to be employed as pioneers and laborers, as public exigencies may require; and that a daily pay of seven shillings and sixpence be allowed for the service of such slaves while actually employed.

Colonel John Laurens soon after his return from France, to which country in the autumn of 1780 he had been sent on an important mission, again resumed his efforts to induce the people of South Carolina to allow their negroes to enlist as soldiers in the Continental Army. Writing to Washington under date of May 19, 1782, he says:

The plan which brought me to this country was urged with all the zeal which the subject inspired, both in our privy council and assembly; but the single voice of reason was drowned by the howlings of a triple-headed monster, in which prejudice, avarice, and pusillanimity were united. It was some degree of consolation to me, however, to perceive that truth and philosophy had gained some ground, the suffrages in favor of the measure being twice as numerous as on a former occasion. Some hopes have been lately given me from Georgia; but I fear, when the question is put, we shall be outvoted there with as much disparity as we have been in this country.

This persistent refusal to enlist colored men as soldiers seems to have so thoroughly disgusted Washington that in reply to Laurens he wrote:

I must confess that I am not at all astonished at the failure of your plan. The spirit of freedom, which at the commencement of this contest would have gladly sacrificed everything to the attainment of its object, has long since subsided, and every selfish passion has taken its place. It is not the public but private interest which influences the generality of mankind; nor can the Americans any longer boast an exception. Under these circumstances it would rather have been surprising if you had succeeded; nor will, I fear, have better success in Georgia.

What would the Father of our Country say if he could only witness the attempt now being made to deprive the colored men of the opportunity to enlist in the Army?

Notwithstanding all his previous discouragements, Colonel Laurens still clung to the hope that he might be able to accomplish something. Failing in South Carolina, he continued to try in Georgia "with all the tenacity," as he himself expresses it, "of a man making a last effort on so interesting an occasion."

In another letter to Washington, dated June 12, 1782, he says:

The approaching session of the Georgia Legislature, and the encouragement given me by Governor Hawley, who has a decisive influence in the councils of that country, induce me to remain in this quarter for the purpose of taking new measures on the subject of our black levies. The arrival of Colonel Baylor, whose seniority entitles him to the command of the light troops, affords me ample leisure for pursuing the business in person; and I shall do it with all the tenacity of a man making a last effort on so interesting an occasion.

But all the efforts of this noble and gallant patriot availed nothing against "the howlings of a triple-headed monster in which prejudice, avarice, and pusillanimity were united." A few months after this last effort he laid down his life for the country which he had served with so much self-devotion.

If, however, South Carolina would not employ her colored men as soldiers, she found a very novel way of using them to aid in raising recruits.

In a letter from Dr. Ramsay to William Henry Drayton, from which I have already quoted, the following language is used:

A bill for filling our regiments by giving a negro bounty to every volunteer recruit has also been twice read. This measure is now our ultima spes. Money will not procure soldiers. The militia will not submit to a draft.

Colonel Richard Hampton, writing to Major John Hampton under date of 2d April, 1781, says:

Brother Wade, I believe, will also raise a regiment. It will not be amiss to mention the terms on which they are to be raised, and the number each regiment is to consist of. The troops are to enlist for ten months, each regiment to have one lieutenant-colonel, one major, five sergeants, ten lieutenants; each company two sergeants, twenty-five privates. The pay to be as follows:

Each colonel to receive three grown negroes and one small negro; major to receive three grown negroes; captain, two grown negroes; lieutenants, one large and one small negro; the staff, one large and one small negro; the sergeants, one and a quarter negro; each private, one grown negro.

Notwithstanding the persistent refusal of South Carolina and Georgia to raise troops from among their colored population, it may be regarded as a well-established historical fact that large numbers of colored men were enrolled in the army and served faithfully as soldiers during the whole period of the war of the Revolution. And it is rather a remarkable fact that while constant mention is made of the bravery of these troops, we cannot learn of a single instance of their failure to do their duty during the whole of that memorable struggle. The individual instances of bravery on their part are numerous, two only of which have I time to cite.

The heroic defense of Fort Griswold by Colonel Ledyard and his brave comrades was one of the most brilliant achievements of the war. The assault on the part of the British was a deadly one, but finally the little garrison was overcome, and on the entrance of the enemy the British officer inquired, "Who commands this fort?" "I once did; you do now," replied the gallant Ledyard, handing the officer his sword, which was instantly seized and run through his body by the officer. Lambert, a colored soldier, being near Colonel Ledyard, retaliated by thrusting his bayonet through the British officer, and then fell himself pierced with thirty-three bayonet-wounds.

It is related upon the authority of Judge Story that a colored artillerist, while having charge of a cannon with a white fellow-soldier, was wounded in one arm. He immediately turned to his comrade and proposed changing his position, exclaiming that he had yet one arm left with which he could render some service to his country. The change proved fatal to the heroic soldier, for another shot from the enemy killed him upon the spot.

WAR OF 1812.

During the interval between the close of the revolutionary war and the commencement of the war of 1812 we hear nothing of negro soldiers, because the country was at peace with the world. But with the return of war the Army, which had been closed to the negro during the long years of peace, was again opened to him for admission. In this respect the Army of the United States to the negro is like the temple of Janus was to the Romans—closed in time of peace and open in time of war. Though the war of 1812 was much shorter than that of the Revolution, yet short as it was, colored soldiers were in demand before its close. The Legislature of New York passed, October 24, 1814, an act "to authorize the raising of two regiments of men of color." The act provided that each regiment should consist of one thousand and eighty able-bodied men; that the officers should be white men, and that "any able-bodied slave" might enlist therein "with the written assent of his master or mistress," who was to receive his pay and bounty, while the negro received his freedom.

In 1814, when the British were threatening Mobile and New Orleans, General Jackson issued the following appeal to the free colored people of Louisiana:

HEADQUARTERS, SEVENTH MILITARY DISTRICT.
Mobile, September 21, 1814.

To the Free Colored Inhabitants of Louisiana:

Through a mistaken policy, you have heretofore been deprived of a participation in the glorious struggle for national rights in which our country is engaged. This no longer shall exist.

As sons of freedom, you are now called upon to defend our most inestimable blessing. As Americans, your country looks with confidence to her adopted children for a valorous support, as a faithful return for the advantages enjoyed under her mild and equitable Government. As fathers, husbands, and brothers, you are summoned to rally around the standard of the eagle, to defend all which is dear in existence.

Your country, although calling for your exertions, does not wish you to engage in her cause without amply remunerating you for the services rendered. Your intelligent minds are not to be led away by false representations. Your love of honor would cause you to despise the man who should attempt to deceive you. In the sincerity of a soldier and the language of truth I address you.

To every noble-hearted, generous freeman of color volunteering to serve during the present contest with Great Britain, and no longer, there will be paid the same bounty, in money and lands, now received by the white soldiers of the United States, viz, $124 in money and one hundred and sixty acres of land. The non-commissioned officers and privates will also be entitled to the same monthly pay and daily rations and clothes furnished to any American soldier.

On enrolling yourselves in companies the major-general commanding will select officers for your government from your white fellow-citizens. Your non-commissioned officers will be appointed from among yourselves.

Due regard will be paid to the feelings of freemen and soldiers. You will not, by being associated with white men in the same corps, be exposed to improper comparisons or unjust sarcasm. As a distinct, independent battalion or regiment, pursuing the path of glory, you will, undivided, receive the applause and gratitude of your countrymen.

To assure you of the sincerity of my intentions and my anxiety to engage your invaluable services to our country, I have communicated my wishes to the governor of Louisiana, who is fully informed as to the manner of enrollment and will give you every necessary information on the subject of this address.

ANDREW JACKSON,
Major-General Commanding.

As the result of this proclamation the colored freemen of Louisiana raised two battalions, one of which numbered two hundred and ten men and was commanded by Major Dacquin; the other numbered one hundred and eighty and was commanded by Major Lacoste. Both these battalions took part in the battle of New Orleans. Previous to that battle, however, General Jackson, on the 18th of December, 1844, took occasion to review his little army then at New Orleans.

At the close of the review—

Says Parton in his Life of Jackson—

Edward Livingston advanced from the group that surrounded the General, and read in fine, sonorous tones, and with an energy and emphasis worthy of the impassioned words he spoke, that famous address to the troops which contributed so powerfully to enhance their enthusiasm, and of which the survivors, to this hour, have the most vivid recollection.

The following is that portion of the address which is directly addressed to these colored soldiers:

TO THE MEN OF COLOR: Soldiers, from the shores of Mobile I collected you to arms. I invited you to share in the perils and to divide the glory of your white countrymen. I expected much from you; for I was not uninformed of those qualities which must render you so formidable to an invading foe. I knew that you could endure hunger and thirst and all the hardships of war. I knew that you loved the land of your nativity, and that, like ourselves, you had to defend all that is most dear to man. But you surpass my hopes. I have found in you, united to these qualities, that noble enthusiasm which impels to great deeds.

Soldiers, the President of the United States shall be informed of your conduct on the present occasion, and the voice of the Representatives of the American nation shall applaud your valor, as your general now praises your ardor. The enemy is near. His sails cover the lakes. But the brave are united; and if he finds us contending among ourselves it will be for the prize of valor, and fame, its noblest reward.

These two battalions were not the only colored troops engaged in that memorable battle, for the British also carried into that fight two regiments of black men.

As to the use of colored soldiers in the war of 1812, we have the testimony of Mr. Martindale, of New York, who, in a speech in Congress on the 22d January, 1828, said:

Slaves, or negroes who had been slaves, were enlisted as soldiers in the war of the Revolution; and I myself saw a battalion of them, as fine, martial-looking men as I ever saw, attached to the northern army in the last war, on its march from Plattsburgh to Sackett's Harbor.

Thus, Mr. Speaker, I have endeavored to give a summary of the history of the colored soldiers of the revolutionary war and the war of 1812, in order that those who are now seeking to close the Army against colored men may fully understand that in so doing they are not only acting contrary to the experience of history, but that they are reviving a policy which must be abandoned the very first important war in which we may be engaged. The events of the late war are too fresh in the minds of all for me to recall any of the facts connected with the use of colored soldiers during that struggle. We all know, however, how the Government was finally compelled to accept their aid, and we all remember the character of the services they rendered. In view of all these facts it is not only extremely unwise, but exceedingly ungrateful to close the Army, now that we are at peace with all the world, against these people.

Mr. BANNING. Does the gentleman from South Carolina understand that this provides that colored men shall not be enlisted?

Mr. MACKEY, of South Carolina. In answer to that inquiry, I say that I do understand this bill, and if that is not its object, why then was objection made to the amendment proposed by my colleague, [Mr. SMALLS,] providing that no discrimination should be made?

Mr. BANNING. Because that is the law as it now exists.

Mr. MACKEY, of South Carolina. If it be the law of the country, then why object to inserting it in the law now about to be enacted? It is proper, however, to say that, so far as colored men are concerned, experience has taught us that the law may be one thing and the observance of it another. We know full well that, while the law may entitle colored men to admission into the Army, yet if we strike from the statute-book the only provision under which there is any earthly chance for them to enlist, the matter is then left entirely to the discretion of a few enlisting officers. These enlisting officers, armed with the powers to reject whom they please, without assigning any cause whatever, will seldom, if ever, accept colored men, especially if they are to be assigned to white regiments.

In conclusion, while I regret that objections were made to my amendment, as well as to the amendment of my colleague, yet the fact that these objections were made by the supporters of this bill proves conclusively to me that the object of this bill is to keep colored men out of the Army by repealing the only law which gives them an opportunity to enlist, and therefore I shall vote against it.

Mr. BANNING. I now yield half an hour to the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. HURLBUT.]

Mr. HURLBUT. Mr. Speaker, the Army of the United States has this misfortune: it has many friends when its services are needed; it has many enemies when political capital is sought to be made by opposing it. These attempts at undue, unwise, ungenerous retrenchment upon the Army of the United States are nothing especially partisan. There never has been a time since we have had an Army in which there have not been those who desired to cripple its efficiency, to break down its competency, and to weaken those sentiments of honor which are what make the Army a live and valuable organization, and these attempts are always made for personal and political effect. This is no new idea, sir. The history of Congress will show over and over again occasions when every one of the alterations proposed in this bill have been offered time after time and defeated time after time. In 1872 the same question was up, and the opinion of one of our leading military men of that day was asked upon it, and I do not know that I can better address myself on this question than by asking the Clerk to read a letter from that officer as the basis of the remarks I propose to make on some parts of this bill.

The Clerk read the letter, as follows:

NEW YORK, March 1, 1872.

MY DEAR GENERAL: You ask my opinion as to the proposed consolidation of the three corps (Quartermaster's, Commissary, and Pay) into one. I do not like the idea at all, and, had I the power, would prevent it.

The duties are distinct entirely, requiring different kinds of experience, and cannot advantageously be performed by the same officer, unless, perhaps, in the case of the payment of a small garrison, and * * * in the Pay Department the evils of consolidation would, in my judgment, overbalance by far any slight advantages. The present organization has worked well for many years in garrison and in the field; if there has been any defect, it has not been in the Commissary and Pay Departments.

These three corps already have a common chief in the person of the Secretary of War; no benefit is likely to be derived from the appointment of another assistant chief, who will again have under him a head of each department just as there is now. If this consolidation scheme is carried out, experience will prove that some individual interest was at the bottom of it and that no real benefit inured to the service, and before long the old order of things will be restored.

In haste, * * * yours,

GEO. B. McCLELLAN.

General W. W. BURNS,
United States Army.

P. S.—It seems almost superfluous for me to say that our peace organization should be such as to enable us to increase the Army rapidly in time of war. Any disinterested soldier knows what this means with regard to the number of staff and line officers in peace.

Mr. HURLBUT. Now, Mr. Speaker, whatever controversy there may have been with regard to the military successes of Major-General George B. McClellan, there does not live any man who does not know that he is the most thoroughly qualified organizer of troops, the most thoroughly instructed as to the staff divisions, that the Army of the United States has ever had. I place with great confidence before this House the calm, deliberate utterances made by that distinguished officer of the Army, supported, as I shall show they are, by a mass of testimony of all the instructed officers of the country, upon this question of the consolidation of the staff corps of the Army. I particularly call the attention of the House to this clause:

If this consolidation scheme is carried out, experience will prove that some individual interest is at the bottom of it.

Mr. BANNING. What is the date of that letter? I did not catch it.

Mr. HURLBUT. March 1, 1872.

Mr. BANNING. That was when General Ingalls was in favor of this consolidation?

Mr. HURLBUT. I cannot say. I have not come to General Ingalls yet. I am talking about General McClellan. Now, sir, we have the further evidence of a distinguished officer; an officer whose name ought to carry a very great weight upon the opposite side of the House; a gentleman undoubtedly of very high qualifications personally and professionally; a man of large experience and large service; a man of undoubted purity of character and lofty motives—I allude to General Winfield Scott Hancock, and I find in his testimony taken before the committee on this point this question and answer:

Question 8. Would it not be practicable to consolidate the Quartermaster's, Commissary, and Pay Departments into one corps?

Answer. It would be "practicable" to consolidate the Quartermaster's, Commissary, and Pay Departments into one corps, but the operation would be difficult and attended with no great advantage or economy. All or most of the persons who now constitute the separate corps would appear in the consolidated corps, and they certainly would not act any more efficiently or economically on account of the consolidation. If there is any wastefulness in the disbursing branches of the service it is not due to the form of organization and cannot be removed by changing that form. The present organization of these Departments answered their purposes admirably during the late war, as they had done in peace before the war. A reduction of any Department which may be deemed too large would be preferable to a consolidation of two or more Departments, and would afford an equally good opportunity of getting rid of unworthy officers, if there be any. From the recent experience of our great war we have an assurance that those Departments can be relied upon under the present system to perform their respective duties in the most successful manner under all circumstances. It would therefore, in my opinion, be unwise to make such a change, unless we can be assured that the consolidation had been tried and had given greater satisfaction in other services, as shown by experience in recent great wars; and of this I am not advised.

Sir, we have in this same document the testimony of a long list of officers, and I am compelled to say, from a careful reading of all the testimony brought before us, that I yield my own private opinion, which has always been in favor of a consolidation of the Quartermaster's and Commissary's Departments, in view of the great overwhelming weight of authority upon that question. I pass from that question simply with the indorsement of these two great men and with the statement which I make here now, that the opinion of instructed minds, so far as I know in the Army, as it appears in the testimony, is in favor of the retention of the existing divisions in the corps.

I come now to another question, and that is the reduction in the organization of the Army itself. It is proposed by this bill to reduce the cavalry and infantry service of the country; it is proposed to reduce the cavalry regiments from ten to eight, and the infantry from twenty-five to twenty. Now, sir, I had the honor to state the other day before the House the deliberate conviction to which I have come from some considerable examination of this matter, and that is that the rank and file of the Army should never be less than thirty thousand men to perform the duties devolving upon it. How the force is to be distributed is a question of course within the wisdom of Congress, but I especially deprecate here the two measures which are indicated in this bill striking down the fighting force by five regiments of infantry and two of cavalry. I am aware that the Army in proportion to the number of its men is overofficered. That is no new thing, and I will read in this connection a letter from Major-General W. B. Franklin, which is as follows:

GENERAL: The object of the consolidation I take it for granted is economy, and the main argument I presume is that three corps are much larger than is necessary for the staff of an army of the size of that of the United States. Consolidation will diminish the number of officers, concentrate the three Bureaus of the Department into one, and degrade the rank of those officers who are retained.

Nearly all of the officers who form these three corps served faithfully during the rebellion, and by seniority and faithful service are as fairly entitled to their positions as are any officers in the service. Many of them served in command of troops and some made great sacrifices in giving up opportunities to command troops which were offered to them because the chiefs of the corps entreated them not to leave their positions as staff officers in the hands of untried and unknown men, who might prove inefficient and injure the reputation of the corps, as well as inflict the greatest damage by their inefficiency and perhaps dishonesty.

But leaving out of account all personal considerations, it is not true that the staff of the Army as represented by these three corps was intended to be merely enough to supply an army of the size of our present Army. Every one who has served knows that two or three officers of rank in each staff department serving with the troops could with the necessary subordinates easily supply 30,000 men; but it would have been a short-sighted policy which before the war would have cut down these corps to the number necessary to supply the Army as it then existed.

The principle that the staff of the Army of the United States ought to be much larger than is at first sight necessary is old, and was advocated by several Secretaries of War, when, in 1838, under Mr. Poinsett it was put into practical force by a large increase of all the staff corps, including Engineers, Ordnance, Surgeon-General's, and Adjutant-General's Department, as well as the three which are now in question.

The main argument used by the advocates of a large staff is the following: It is the policy of this Government to keep a small army in time of peace and to depend upon volunteers or militia in time of war. Although volunteers and militia may have efficient regimental organizations, it is impossible that their organization should go beyond that, so that when called into the field they will be found without means of supplying themselves; but the large staff here comes in, and at once furnishes a supply of experienced, well-informed, and honest officers, who at once organize the supplies, establish depots, and instruct the subordinates who will soon crowd them out and take their places.

No one who has not had to do with the organization of new troops can appreciate how two or three cool, clear-headed, experienced staff officers bring order out of chaos in the midst of large gatherings of new troops, and how utterly impossible it is for a commanding officer, unless assisted by such men, to organize his force except at the sacrifice of much time, money, and life.

As these organizations must be made not only in one place, but in twenty or more, it is evident that when the emergency arises there will be no complaint of too many staff officers.

It will be said that the late war left in the country a large number of men who can perform these duties as well as the staff officers now in service. Whether this be true or not at present, in ten years none of these men will be left or will be available for such service; and if you cut down your staff now so that it is just sufficient for your present needs, when the emergency arises there will be scenes of disorder and confusion even in quiet camps of raw troops compared to which the Bull Run retreat was good order.

If there is a debt of gratitude due to any one in connection with the organization of the Army before the war, it is due to those great statesmen Cass and Poinsett, whose experience and reading taught them that a large, educated, and experienced staff was the great desideratum in our Army, and who finally succeeded in bringing Congress to agree with them.

However convenient and cheap it may be in time of peace to have the business of the Commissary and Quartermaster's Departments conducted by one corps, yet the War Department would learn as soon as war is upon us that there must be one head to consult with as to provisioning armies perhaps scattered from the Atlantic to the Pacific and from Canada to the Gulf, and that this head must have the control of subordinates who will carry out his orders. The War Department will also find that this head and his subordinates will have quite as much as they can do if they do their duty, and that they cannot be interfered with by other duties.

The duties of the two corps in time of war are as distinct as the duties of Ordnance and Engineers, and there are as good reasons for consolidating those two corps as they are for consolidating the Commissary and Quartermaster's Departments.

W. B. FRANKLIN.

General WM. W. BURNS,
Commissary of Subsistence, United States Army,
New York City, New York.

Now, sir, the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs, in his speech the other day, described sergeants and corporals as if no part of the effective force of the Army. Now I always supposed that they had their place in the line of battle. Is that not true? The gentleman has commanded a battalion. Are they not part of the line of battle?

Mr. BANNING. They have their place.

Mr. HURLBUT. They carry muskets, do they not?

Mr. BANNING. Generally.

Mr. HURLBUT. And they use them, too?

Mr. BANNING. Yes.

Mr. HURLBUT. They are a part of the effective force of the Army?

Mr. BANNING. Yes.

Mr. HURLBUT. Yet in order to make up that wonderful statement the gentleman included, in contrasting the small number of privates with the number of officers, in the latter class non-commissioned officers, wagoners, artificers, and musicians, although I never heard before that that class had anything to do with the command of the Army.

Mr. BANNING. I stated that the number of men in the Army was 16,665, and that there were 8,345 commissioned officers, non-commissioned officers, wagoners, artificers, and musicians.

Mr. HURLBUT. Let us see. I had it marked here, but my copy of the gentleman's speech has been mislaid. I understood him very plainly to say that there were about sixteen thousand private soldiers, who were officered and commanded by about ten thousand officers, non-commissioned officers, wagon-masters, musicians, &c. Is that so?

Mr. BANNING. I will read it to the gentleman, if he will allow me; it is interesting and entertaining.

Mr. HURLBUT. Do so, if you please.

Mr. BANNING. What I stated was this:

The maximum numerical strength of our Army is fixed by law at 25,000 men. These 25,000 men are organized into 25 regiments of infantry, 10 regiments of cavalry, 5 regiments of artillery, and Indian scouts. These organizations are divided into commissioned and non-commissioned officers, musicians, farriers, blacksmiths, artificers, saddlers, wagoners, company clerks, and private soldiers. Sixteen thousand six hundred and sixty-five are private soldiers, and 8,345 non-commissioned officers, wagoners, artificers, and musicians. Add to these last 2,168 commissioned officers on the active list and 300 officers on the retired list, making in all 10,802, and we have our Army organization of 16,665 private soldiers, commanded, marshaled, and managed by 10,803 commissioned and non-commissioned officers, artificers, musicians, and wagoners.

Mr. HURLBUT. Just so; that is what I supposed.

Mr. BANNING. That is the statement of the Adjutant-General.

Mr. HURLBUT. The gentleman states that there is one commander for every one and a half private soldiers.

Mr. BANNING. For every one and a third.

Mr. HURLBUT. And in order to make good the statement, he puts in as officers commanding and managing the Army the sergeants, corporals, wagon-masters, &c. Now, everybody that stands in line of battle is a soldier, is a part of the effective strength of the Army, and everybody above that is an officer. In my experience, wagon-masters are generally kept pretty well to the rear and do not manage the Army. The musicians are generally detailed for the purpose of doing little charitable services in the way of picking up the dead and wounded and sick. Therefore the statement of the gentleman is a little extravagant, to say the least of it.

The idea which the gentleman attempted to impress upon this House was that the Army was overofficered to the extent that we had idle officers and to spare. Now that is not so. There are to-day in the War Department twenty applications for officers to be detailed as instructors in tactics in colleges and they cannot be had, they are not to be spared.

There is no doubt that the system of our Army, ever since its reorganization by Mr. Poinsett and under General Cass afterward, undoubtedly provided for a larger number of both line and staff officers; and in order to make these line officers effective, additional regiments were made, skeleton regiments, if you choose; I regret that they are skeleton, but such is the case. The officers, however, every one of them, are in demand.

Now what is the object of striking out two regiments of cavalry? Our friends from Texas come to us with complaints that all along the Rio Grande for years there has been a system of incursions over into that country from Mexico, a system of wholesale robbery, of force, of arson, and of murder; and they have asked of the United States not only that we shall defend that territory, but that we shall authorize the power of this country to pursue these maranders into friendly territory, friendly but incapable of protecting either itself or us; and I hope the House will do it. The cavalry regiments never should be reduced in number, and should be carried up to their full strength wherever their services are required.

Again, we have a disproportioned force of artillery. Everybody knows that. We have sixty batteries of artillery of six guns each, if they were in the field service, to an army of 25,000 men. In the last years of the war the ratio established on either side was one gun to a thousand men in active service. The artillery is disproportioned, and if it is necessary to cut down the Army in the interest of a real or even a mistaken economy, the reduction should be made by striking off some of the regiments of artillery, and not by reducing the effective fighting force which controls the frontier and defends and protects our pioneers in the West. What is the proposition here made? When everybody admits, or rather when it is claimed, that one of the evils of our Army is the having too many separate organizations, the proposition is to make the artillery force of the United States a separate corps by itself, to break up its regimental organization and to put it all under the control of a brigadier-general as chief of artillery.

Now, in time of peace most of our artillery is in garrison in our fortresses along our sea-coast; it is not in what any one would term active service. In time of peace it is very rarely that a flying battery of artillery takes the field anywhere except in the form of infantry. What possible reason, then, can there be for creating this new organization? What possible reason is there for breaking up the old historic regiments of artillery?

Do not gentlemen know that the sentiment of honor, the love of reputation, the record of gallant services, are the life-spring of the Army, and that you strike straight at the life of an army when you strike down the organization and existence of those regiments which have won, by gallant services, a reputation long ago on the fields of Mexico, in the war of 1812, and in the last war, whose names and banners are historic? Strike them down, and you strike down in that service the sentiment of honor, and it can be for no purpose under the sun except to create an additional rank for some one who expects to be made either senior colonel or brigadier-general commanding the corps of artillery.

Time does not permit me to go through the whole merits of the bill. It embraces many things which I approve; not that I think by any means that the bill was ever fairly considered in the Committee on Military Affairs. That committee has an immense tenderness for its chairman; and it acted about this bill very much as it is stated that a delicate young lady once did when pursued by a rough fellow; she married him to get rid of him! That is about the substance of it. I doubt if there are any half dozen connected propositions in the bill. I think that it is a sort of gathering from a rag-bag—a weaving together of different propositions without any special connection. I propose to prove to my distinguished chairman by a little dissection of the bill itself that there is not any system in it, or if there is, it is a very bad one.

For example, I find that in the first section of the bill, in the sixteenth, seventeenth, and eighteenth lines, it is provided that—

Any officer of the discontinued regiments not liable to be brought before the board authorized by section 15 of this act may, on his own application, be honorably discharged with one year's pay for each and every term of eight years' service.

Under that provision a man whose record is fair and who is consolidated out of the service by reason of the reduction of these regiments is to receive one year's pay for every eight years' service. Now, sir, in the ninth section, where provision is made for the reduction of the Bureau of Military Justice, it is provided that—

Any officer of the Bureau, inclusive of the judge-advocates, may, on his own application, be honorably discharged from the service, with one year's pay proper for each and every term of five years' service, and travel expenses to his home.

Let the chairman of the committee tell me why an officer who has served upon the frontier honorably for the last fifteen years, who has grown gray in chasing Indians, when he is discharged on account of no fault of his, but by reason of this consolidation, is to receive one year's pay for every eight years of active service, while these gentlemen who have sat here in their comfortable quarters in Washington, revising the judgments of military courts, are when mustered out to receive one year's pay after each and every term of five years' service.

But this is not all. The bill contains a provision under which the General of the Army is authorized to constitute a board to get rid of officers who are not fit to be in the service; yet when an officer is ordered out of service by that board it is provided—

In cases where the disability has not resulted from the imprudence of the officer through intemperance or other injurious cause, he shall receive as follows: One year's pay, if he shall have served five years and less than ten; two years' pay, if he shall have served ten years and less than fifteen; and three years' pay, if he shall have served fifteen years.

Now evidently there has been no unity of consideration in the matter of this bill; otherwise so gross an injustice as this would manifestly be to officers in the service could not by any means have been proposed.

I now beg to call attention to the curious state in which this bill leaves the Pay Department. The proposition of the bill when it is carried into effect is that the Pay Department shall consist only of thirty majors; that is the final resolution of the question under this bill. Yet to a corps of thirty majors there is assigned a brigadier-general. There is no gap between to be filled, no colonels, no lieutenant-colonels; but the spring is direct from this little corps of thirty majors up to a brigadier-general. I am bound to say that, though I have seen a good many small commands for a brigadier-general, this is the smallest one I ever knew devised by Congress.

Now I say here that the rank of our staff officers, our heads of staff, is, in my judgment, altogether too high in proportion to the Army that they are connected with; but to make a paymaster-general with the rank of brigadier-general, commanding a squad of thirty majors, is one of the most startling indications in the way of economy that has ever been known. Besides, sir, every man who will look at the condition of our country, at the extent of territory which we cover, at the scattering nature of our military posts and their difficulty of access, must see that it is utterly impossible for any thirty majors to pay this Army of ours every two months, as the law directs.

There is one thing further, and only one, to which I propose to call the attention of the House. In section 29, the last section of the bill, it is provided—

That sections 1113 and 1218 of the Revised Statutes, and all other acts or parts of acts inconsistent with this act, be, and the same are hereby, repealed.

Mr. GARFIELD. Now read those sections; let the House know what they are.

Mr. HURLBUT. Section 1218, which this bill proposes to repeal, is as follows:

No person who has served in any capacity in the military, naval, or civil service of the so-called Confederate States, or of either of the States in insurrection during the late rebellion, shall be appointed to any position in the Army of the United States.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. BANNING. I hope the gentleman's time will be extended without taking it out of my time, particularly as I wish to hear the gentleman on this subject, and wish to call his attention to the fact that this House has already passed a bill exactly similar to the provision upon which he is now commenting.

Mr. HURLBUT. I am aware of that; and I have not a shadow of doubt (if I am permitted to speak of what occurred in committee) that this clause was inserted in this bill because a similar act had been passed by this House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. If there be no objection the gentleman's time will be regarded as extended.

There was no objection.

Mr. HURLBUT. But here the proposition comes in a stronger, more emphatic, and more direct form; and as I remember the bill on this subject already passed by this House it went through perhaps without examination, and I think without debate.

I simply call the attention of the House, as I have the right to do, to the fact if this becomes a law it will distinctly repeal that section. Therefore let us decide whether it be wise or not. I do not say, sir, that policy has anything to do with the passage of this bill, but I do say it has been charged that the object of the reduction of the Army and throwing out the officers now there is to create an opportunity in the hereafter to bring the Army back again to its standard and provide places to be filled in certain contingencies by gentlemen whose disabilities are removed under this law.

I do not propose now to say anything in regard to the clause relating to colored troops. I think that is misunderstood by the gentleman who preceded me in this debate. I do not understand that it was the intention of this committee or of the majority of it—and I am bound to render them justice—to do anything more than to remove a distinction which improperly and unwisely has survived to us from the time when these colored troops were originally raised. The colored regiments were originally raised before the adoption of the amendment which has made them citizens of the United States, and it was intended, as I suppose, by this bill simply to remove the question of compulsory organization into any separate regiments and leave them like other citizens of the United States, free to go wheresoever they please.

It is proper, however, I should state in simple justice to these men that, from the best information I have, no slur ought by any one to be thrown upon the manner in which they have performed their duty. Yet their officers tell me it is growing day by day more and more difficult to procure proper recruits from the colored people of this country to fill up these regiments which are specially colored, and I speak by authority when I say that there does not exist in those garrisons where white and colored troops meet any question of color or race. I have been told by the General of the Army and the Lieutenant-General commanding the Army that white soldiers in going out on guard turn out as freely, cheerfully, and obediently under a colored sergeant as the colored troops under a white sergeant, and that on the frontier in the presence of common danger all these prejudices disappear.

There are other points I should like to speak of in this bill, but I fall back to what I believe to be the true course for us to take in this matter. In the first place I say for myself what I have no doubt every other member of the committee will say—I say for myself I do not possess the proper data upon which I can judiciously undertake to re-organize the Army of the United States. As I say that for myself, I further say I do not believe the committee or this House has it. I therefore have suggested the amendment, which is now pending before the House, that this whole question of the re-organization of our Army in its staff and in its line shall be taken out of the domain of possible hostilities, possible rivalries of different men, possible partisan policies, and removed to the consideration of a commission, to be appointed by the President, of officers of high rank and full knowledge. I believe that to be the right thing to do, and I am more confident of that because I find these most wise words in the answer of General Hancock to our committee, to which, as having far more weight, being far more valuable than any words of mine, I do beg the considerate attention of the House:

Question 1. What reduction, if any, can be made in pay and allowances of officers of the Army, without detriment to the efficiency of the service?

Answer. In answering the first question I think I may assume it as an undoubted truth that one of the things which most contribute to the efficiency of military organization is the permanency of the officer's tenure of office. It is a truth well recognized by the legislation of this country, which admits of no forced loss of commission, except by action of Congress in discontinuing the office, by sentence of court-martial, or by the independent action of the President in the single case of desertion. The existence of the Military Academy, by which we undertake to educate young men for the profession of arms, is a further admission of that truth. And, while this is the theory upon which the Government proceeds, it is also the understanding with which the officer enters the service. It is, indeed, this consideration which induces him to abandon all other prospects and local ties, and to devote himself to the military profession alone. It is this consideration which reconciles him to the relinquishment of all ambitions outside of his profession, which teaches him to look within it for the satisfaction of every aspiration. Cut off from all share in other pursuits, his interests are necessarily thus circumscribed.

He has entered into a contract for life; and with what does he part? By virtue of the contract, every moment of his time, from its commencement to its end, is at the disposal of his employer, the Government. During his entire existence this employer exacts an absolute monopoly of his time, his talent, and his industry; and requires, at a moment's notice, the exposure of his life in pestilence and in war; and, with our Gulf stations and savage foes, both pestilence and war are nearly always prevailing. The particular services required of him, whether in peace or in war, are totally independent of his pecuniary interests, his comforts, or his wishes. No matter how great the personal and pecuniary sacrifices, he must go instantly when and whithersoever he may be ordered.

From the foundation of the Government to the present day, there has never been a time when the personnel of the Army did not, by its record of dead, wounded, and diseased, furnish abundant proof of the rigidness with which the Government exacts the heaviest sacrifices from its Army officers. In time of war we do not hear any mention of the excessiveness of the officers' pay; yet there is no reason for making any distinction in this respect between times of war and peace. Practically speaking, it costs the officer as much to live at one time as the other. Moreover, he is still under the same life-long contract; still liable to be, and in point of fact frequently is, ordered from station to station; still precluded from adding to his income by other occupation, and, if his pay seems large for his services in peace, it should be remembered that it is not increased for his more dangerous and arduous services in war, and is small enough when applied, as it must be in a fair consideration of the subject, to the average of his peace and war services in a whole lifetime. It should be borne in mind, too, that in the Army there is no increase of pay for the many extra duties and the great increase over their ordinary work and responsibility which, from time to time, fall to all officers in peace as well as in war.

Now, Mr. Speaker, those are the utterances of a man himself the embodiment of that high military honor, and they are words of wonderful weight. They overbalance the slender considerations of temporary policy or temporary economy; and you cannot strike at that great principle either by serious reduction of officers here or leaving them at the mercy of Congress from year to year, disbanding and breaking up the organization to which they belong, and casting them adrift on the country, without periling that greatest and best of virtues of the soldier: self-sacrifice and personal honor.

One word more, sir, and I have done; and I add this in order to correct an impression which perhaps was not intended by the chairman of the committee, but which is evidently derived from his words. I do it because I have heard others speak of the impression which they derived from one of the last sentences in his remarks. In his speech on Saturday last, in speaking of the abuses in the Army, or rather not in the Army, but in the administrative service that controls the Army, it pleased the gentleman from Ohio unnecessarily, I think, to allude to certain transactions which took place when one now on trial at the other end of the Capitol was Secretary of War. Now, sir, I am not here to defend any man who violates either the law or any of the principles of integrity and of honor, nor, sir, will I trample upon a man who is down, and I wait in that case, as in all others, until there shall have been a fair trial and a fair judgment shall have been rendered. What is the inference to be derived from this clause in the gentleman's speech?

The officer who dared protest against the extravagant prices charged by the sutler and post-trader, whose profits were made enormous from the necessity they were under of dividing with high Government officials, ordered to the most distant frontier post.

Every man who heard that expression and every man who read that speech knew that a very distinguished and honorable officer, General William B. Hazen, was pointed at, as he had been pointed at by public rumor, as an officer who had suffered at the hands of the late Secretary of War for doing his plain duty. I am glad to find in the Army and Navy Journal of the 20th May, 1876, which I hold in my hand, a letter of Major-General William B. Hazen, addressed to the editor, effectually setting that thing to rest. I knew from information derived from other quarters that in the regular course of the transfer of troops the regiment which has the honor of being commanded by that officer was removed up to a northern post. I knew that the public press of this country, always ready to make use of something sensational, had charged that that removal was done by the express act of the late Secretary of War, and as a punishment; and I regret that my friend from Ohio should have given any further currency to this charge. The letter is as follows:

CINCINNATI, OHIO, May 14, 1876.

MY DEAR COLONEL CHURCH: In your issue of yesterday, you say, "We saw considerable of General Hazen while he was in New York, and certainly never heard him hint at any such cause (meaning my action taken four years ago respecting post traders) for being ordered to Dakota." Neither you nor any other person ever heard me say so, but many persons have heard me contradict the rumor, which has given me great annoyance, and my excuse for continuing this matter in print must be that it has already been brought there in a manner requiring my notice.

The order came almost immediately after I had testified before the Military Committee, and under circumstances of peculiar hardship, before I was fairly settled at the post I was then at, and when I was exceedingly ill from an old wound which rendered me unfit to travel for two months and for duty for more than a year. This, with the sad domestic affliction resulting from the journey incident to the order, naturally enough connected the two, my testimony and the order, in the minds of many, as cause and effect. Their belief seemed confirmed by unguarded expressions of the Secretary, and those supposed to reflect his views, as to the length of service I might expect there, as well as by the fact that, although stationed for four years in the midst of the Indian country, where active expeditions were frequently sent out, of which my own regiment formed a part, I have been invariably kept at my post, while sometimes a majority of my regiment has gone to make up the command of an officer junior to me in rank. These appearances have not only attracted the notice and comment of my personal friends, but of a large portion of the Army. I state again that the rumor never came from me, but on all proper occasions I have contradicted it, until recently I have paid no attention whatever to it.

I have known from the first that the order did not emanate from the War Department, and have believed and always said that, in making the selection, direct reference was had to military reasons.

W. B. HAZEN.

I have thus briefly attempted, Mr. Speaker, to perform what I believed to be my duty to the Army and to the country, and I leave the choice between the amendment I have offered and the bill to the consideration of the House. I will close by calling attention to the following list of negative answers to the question

"WOULD IT NOT BE PRACTICABLE TO CONSOLIDATE THE QUARTERMASTER'S, COMMISSARY, AND PAY DEPARTMENTS INTO ONE CORPS?"

General SHERIDAN. Of course they can be consolidated; but I doubt whether you will get as good a result as you have now. I do not believe in tearing things down, especially when they have done well. They have certainly done well as they are, and I do not know that any great saving is to be made by consolidation. I am not prepared to recommend anything of the kind.

General HANCOCK. It would be practicable to consolidate the Quartermaster's, Commissary, and Pay Departments into one corps, but the operation would be difficult and attended with no great advantage or economy. * * * The present organization of those Departments answered their purposes admirably during the late war, as they had done in peace before the war.

General TERRY. I think that to consolidate the Quartermaster's, Subsistence, and Pay Departments into one corps would be to disregard a principle which underlies all modern progress: The principle that the best results are obtained by the division of labor; that the best work is done by specialists; a principle that is of quite as much importance in military organizations as in civil life. The Quartermaster's Department is already loaded down by the multiplicity of subjects over which it has control; to add to its duties would, I think, impair its efficacy.

General ORD. It would be practicable. In time of peace we might get along, for the same officer frequently does quartermaster and commissary duties now, but if we keep the Army on a basis ready for war, and the staff on the basis to serve for the purpose for a large army of from one to two hundred thousand troops, I think the present system is as good a one as we can have. I know no better. It has stood the test of experience very well.

General AUGUR. Practicable, undoubtedly, but in my opinion, not advisable; experience has shown that our staff organization is efficient for field service on the largest scale. It should be preserved, but reduced, or extended to meet the requirements of the service.

Colonel GROVER. I do not think it would be advisable to consolidate the Quartermaster's, Subsistence, and Pay Departments in one.

Colonel GETTY. It would be practicable; but to consolidate the three corps into one would not, in my opinion, be for the best interests of the service.

Colonel H. J. HUNT. Practicable, but perhaps not advisable.

Colonel FLINT. I think not, having a due regard for the true interests of the service.

Colonel GIBBON. I do not think that consolidation of these Departments would add to their efficiency or to the best interests of the service. It is, of course, practicable, but by no means advisable.

Colonel KING. I think not.

Colonel CLITZ. I think not. These Departments as organized have worked admirably and satisfactorily through two long wars, and I do not think any change would be for the better or would save expense.

Colonel WILLCOX. I do not think it would be practicable to consolidate the Quartermaster's, Commissary, and Pay Departments. It would require a chief of staff at the head of the whole whose importance might interfere with that of the Secretary of War, in whom the control is practically centered already; in which case there would result either a divided responsibility, for one thing, or the chief of the supply department would become a cipher. Besides, although the present staff system has some defects, yet it has proved to be a great improvement on the consolidated system in vogue during and previous to the war of 1812.

Colonel CRITTENDEN. After witnessing the extraordinary ability and efficiency of the Quartermaster's and Subsistence Departments during the Mexican war and the late war, and considering their present efficiency, I think any change would be detrimental to the service.

Colonel SYKES. It would not. Division of labor, if performed by faithful and competent officers, their number not in excess of the present wants of the service, is advantageous in every respect.

Colonel SULLY. I think in time of peace, with additional clerks, one officer could in many cases attend to all three of these duties, but in case of war I do not think it would work well.

Colonel ANDREWS. The result of a consolidation will be very apt to be the same thing under a new name. The Subsistence Department gives general satisfaction. In regard to the Quartermaster's Department, it is a difficult subject to handle.

Lieutenant-Colonel DODGE. I think it would be a very great mistake to consolidate the Quartermaster's, Commissary, and Pay Departments. The duties of these three Departments are very dissimilar, and one officer cannot possibly attend to the details of all.

General TOWNSEND. I decidedly think it would be impracticable to consolidate any of the staff departments. In 1837–'38 the present staff system was established, and in two great wars which have occurred since the manner in which our armies have been clothed, transported, and fed, paid, and provided with medical attendance has attracted the admiration of the military world.

Major VINCENT. It would not be practicable to consolidate the Quartermaster's, Commissary, and Pay Departments into one corps. * * * Consolidation marked the embryo of our supply system; but war and peace experience developed the defects of consolidation and pointed clearly to the necessity of division.

Major BRECK. The consolidation of the three Departments, Pay, Subsistence, and Quartermaster's, is not believed to be wise practically, whatever may be the theoretical grounds in its favor. * * * The present organization certainly produced wonderful results during the war, and it is hard to conceive a more severe test of its merits.

Major PELOUZE. It would be an experiment, in my opinion, not worth the trial. It seems to me that the present division of duties would have to be kept up, and the present chiefs of these departments have now as much as they can attend to. To consolidate these departments, an officer would have to supervise the duties now required of the three Departments, and the result would be to remove these Departments one step further from access to the Secretary of War.

Colonel MARCY. For the reason that each of the Departments named in question 8 has all the work it can efficiently perform now, and as the chiefs of those Departments have abundant occupation in properly administering the affairs of their separate Departments, I think the consolidation indicated would diminish their efficiency and add to the expense the pay and allowances of another officer of high rank, who could know but little about the numerous details of every Department.

Colonel METER. The consolidation would be an experiment. The Commissary, Quartermaster's, and Pay Departments successfully discharged their duties, which were very extensive, during the late war under their present organization.

Colonel ALLEN. I answer most emphatically, no. The quartermasters have always been overburdened with work, and consolidation is only a change of form. No saving would be effected.

Colonel RUCKER. I do not consider such a consolidation practicable in the interest of the service; but, on the contrary, I am satisfied that it would be injurious. These Departments are much more efficient as they now are.

Colonel VAN VLIET. It is easy to tear down, but very difficult to rebuild. The present organization of the staff corps is the work of years of experience and labor. That it is a good one and has worked admirably, it is only necessary to refer to the late war. When large armies were suddenly called into the field the staff corps supplied their wants promptly and efficiently; while almost everything else was changed during the war, the organization of the staff remained the same. They were expanded, but never changed. It is a well-known fact that the best results are only obtained in almost all departments of life by division of labor.

General MACFEELY. It would not, without impairing the efficiency of each Department. The experience of the last fifty years and the late war proved that each Department, as now organized, had as much as it could do to perform its appropriate and legitimate duties, and the manner in which these duties were performed and the immense armies supplied proved the efficiency and wisdom of the separate organizations. Any consolidation that might be made would result in a division of duties practically, as under separate organizations, and would not be advantageous or economical.

General BARNES. The experience of the war would appear to have proven the impracticability of such consolidation.

Colonel TOWER. The impression of my early service in the Army still remains with me, that the Commissary and Pay Departments are models of economical administration, and I do not think that anything would be gained by uniting them with the Quartermaster's Department, already overburdened with its various duties and responsibilities.

Major WEITZEL. I do not think that any corps should be consolidated. It will prove poor economy when the Army is needed. It cost our Government over two billion dollars to get good officers, staff and line, during the first two years of the war.

General BENÉT. Without reference to the doctrine of specialties, which is so well established, especially in the execution of labor of any extent, it is sufficient to say that the experience of the war found no fault in the organization of the Army in its general features. All army organization is for war purposes, and while a consolidation of these three Departments might possibly be an economical measure in time of peace—of which I cannot judge—it might be at the expense of efficiency, and, in the event of war, might lead to ultimate disaster. Our whole staff organization is intended for expansion in time of war, and this consolidation would not unlikely end in an unwieldy Department, with possibly not even economy to recommend it.

Lieutenant-Colonel ROGER JONES. * * * The present system is not the growth of a day, or of a year, but the result of an experience of over half a century, and has been thoroughly tested in domestic and foreign wars.

Mr. BANNING resumed the floor.

Mr. MACDOUGALL. Will the gentleman from Ohio yield to me for an amendment?

Mr. BANNING. What is the gentleman's amendment?

Mr. MACDOUGALL. I will send it to the desk to be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert——

Mr. BANNING. I cannot yield for that. I am sorry that the gentleman from New York, [Mr. MACDOUGALL,] my colleague on the committee, did not think of that at a somewhat earlier stage in the history of this bill. This bill has been considered in the committee and in the House from an early period of the session, and we have had no proposition to make an adverse report on it until to-day we find the gentleman from New York making the proposition that he has just sent to the desk and my friend from Illinois making the speech he has just made against the bill. In the interest of legislation, in order that we may legislate well and wisely, I wish they had presented, as I think it was their duty to have done, their amendments at an earlier day, so that they might have had some consideration in the Committee on Military Affairs, of which they are members.

For one, Mr. Speaker, I am unable to see in this bill anything but that which demands of men on both sides of the House fair and full consideration, in order that the Army may be re-organized as it should be, in order that it may be efficient, in order that the companies may be strengthened, in order that the regiments may be strengthened, in order that the shame and the disgrace that have been brought upon the Army by its late administration may be blotted out. When the gentleman from Illinois tells us that this measure is an attack made upon the Army by men for political purposes, I must disagree with him. But when I find the gentleman standing in his place and objecting to this bill, which prevents any promotion in the Army hereafter except from the line of the Army, and will not permit any man who has served in the confederate army to get any position except that of second lieutenant, and not that until he has served his time as a private in the Army and then as a non-commissioned officer, and when I know that this House has already stricken from the statutes that law which forbids these men from again serving in the Army, the Military Committee having unanimously so reported, and that no member of that committee made any objection to it before, I cannot but see in him a gentleman who is trying to get up a political feeling to defeat this bill.

The gentleman says he is in favor of a strong Army. He thinks the Army should number 35,000. Now, sir, that is very different from the teachings of the fathers. It was Washington who warned us against the dangers of a large military force, and it was Jefferson who, in 1802, when times were somewhat similar to the present, wrote this to Kosciusko, in answer to that old general, who wanted some young officers appointed in the Army. He says:

I wish it had been in my power to give you a more favorable answer; but, next to the fulfilling your wishes, the most grateful thing I can do is to give a faithful answer. The session of the First Congress convened since republicanism has recovered its ascendency is now drawing to a close. They will pretty completely fulfill all the desires of the people.

This letter was written in 1802. Let us hope that we may fulfill the desire of the people in like manner. Let us see how the Congress of 1802 fulfilled the desires of the people. Jefferson continues:

They have reduced the Army and Navy to what is barely necessary. They are disarming executive patronage and preponderance by putting down one-half the offices of the United States, which are no longer necessary.

Now, Mr. Speaker, unlike the teaching of Jefferson, we have the gentleman from Illinois and others upon this floor resisting every reduction of Army expenditures, and every feature of this bill which makes the Army more efficient and useful.

And now, sir, if the spirits of those great and good men (Washington and Jefferson) will forgive the association, I wish to read a resolution from the platform of the republican convention of the State of Ohio on this subject:

Resolved, That we cordially approve the determination of Congress to retrench the expenses of the Government, and that we urge upon the national Legislature the necessity of the strictest economy and the reduction of the Army and Navy.

Mr. LAWRENCE. What is the date of that?

Mr. BANNING. That was in 1869. Now, Mr. Speaker, I will show the gentleman how the expenses of the Army have been reduced. The Forty-third Congress reduced the Army by mustering out five thousand men who carried guns and knapsacks; reduced it from thirty thousand to twenty-five thousand men and retained all the officers; leaving so small a company and regimental organization of men as to make some of the companies less than a corporal's guard.

Now, sir, let us examine how this reduction reduced expenditures. An examination shows the amount paid the Army for the fiscal year 1872 to have been $10,683,181.60; in 1873, $11,188,181.60, an increase of more than half a million; in 1874, $11,797,810.78, an increase again of over half a million; in 1875, $12,171,130.92, another increase of nearly half a million. This year a greater increase is asked for, namely, $12,840,288—showing that under this administration an Army which was reduced five thousand men by the Forty-third Congress has increased in disbursements in pay to officers and men since 1872 more than $2,000,000, while the estimates for the military establishment by the War Department for next year are $33,696,178.50, being more than five millions of an increase over the appropriations of last year, with a deficiency of $500,000 for this Congress to make up for last year.

This, Mr. Speaker, has been the management of our military establishment: a reduction of men, an increase of officers, and more than two millions of increase in amount paid the officers and men.

Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Illinois was surprised at my statement of the number of non-commissioned officers and officers in our Army. While that is exactly correct, being taken from the Adjutant-General's report, I wish now to call the attention of the House to the pay of the commissioned officers of the Army as compared with the non-commissioned officers and enlisted men. The pay proper, service pay, and retired pay of the commissioned officers for 1875 was $5,139,857.22; the pay proper of the enlisted men was $5,049,609.89; showing that we pay our commissioned officers more money than all the non-commissioned officers and men of the army. This only proves that either the men are not paid enough, the officers too much, or that we have too many officers.

Mr. Speaker, the bill reduces the cavalry regiments from ten to eight and the infantry from twenty-five to twenty, consolidating the companies and regiments, giving strength to our skeleton organizations, making them useful and efficient.

Upon this subject General Sheridan says:

If you increase the size of the companies you diminish the expense. One great item of expense at present arises from the fact that the companies are so small as to be non-effective. In order to get an effective body of men for any purpose, it is necessary to take three or four companies from different places. That kind of management is, of course, expensive; and that is what we are obliged to resort to at present.

The gentleman from Illinois argues against the passage of this bill because it makes a brigadier-general in the artillery corps, and complains of the unnecessary increase of officers and expenses. He failed, however, to state that the same section does away with twenty-five officers of artillery. His only argument in favor of the present organization of artillery was that it is historic. Then, Mr. Speaker, let it live in history, and not as a regimental organization, an expensive, useless, and unnecessary ornament. And the gentleman complains because the bill makes the Paymaster-General a brigadier-general.

Mr. Speaker, the Senate has already passed a bill making the Paymaster a brigadier-general. The Military Committee of this House have approved this bill, and the gentleman from New York [Mr. MACDOUGALL] who seeks to strike out the enacting clause of this bill has been seeking the floor to put the bill upon its passage for the last week. The first objection I have heard from my colleague on the committee to this measure I heard upon this floor to-day. The same clause of the bill which makes the Paymaster-General a brigadier-general reduces the number from fifty-five to thirty-five, being a reduction of twenty majors. The gentleman says thirty-five paymasters cannot pay the Army. Forty paymasters paid an army of 30,000 men; cannot thirty-five paymasters pay an army of less than 25,000? The gentleman from Illinois ridicules the idea of a brigadier-general in command of thirty-five paymasters. I ask him, has our Adjutant-General a larger command, or the Judge-Advocate-General either? Sir, the bill does away with two brigadier-generals; one in the commissary and quartermaster's department and the Judge-Advocate-General.

Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HURLBURT] asks the House to adopt a substitute for this bill, authorizing the President to appoint a commission of Army officers to re-organize the Army. This is an admission from him that a re-organization is necessary. Mr. Speaker, this re-organization should have been made long ago, both for the efficiency of the Army and in the interest of economy.

Sir, have we a right to expect any change for the better from the Executive? Did he in his message to Congress call attention to any of the Army abuses known to exist? What would be the result of a board of Army officers to re-organize the Army? Is there not every reason to believe it would be a failure?

What have we here? Your committee, which the gentleman was pleased to say generally did what its chairman wanted, and I regret to say that the chairman is much disappointed that these different opinions were not presented in the committee—your committee have here in two hundred and thirty-four prepared pages the testimony of every general officer, of the colonels, of all the leading officers of the Army. On this testimony they have framed this bill, every section of which I believe to be right.

I trust that no man will permit the political appeals of the gentleman to affect him. Those appeals ought not to have been brought into this discussion, particularly the appeal that you are going to let the confederate soldier enter the Army. How does he get there? He can come upon this floor if elected. The colored man can go into the Army the same as the white man under this bill, and the gentleman is satisfied with that. But he stands back in holy horror when you say that the young man, mistaken in his ideas of the right, who carried a musket in the confederate army and who afterward entered our Army and served faithfully, and was promoted to be a corporal or a sergeant, who, recommended for promotion, may, if he can pass the examination required by the bill, be made a commissioned officer.

I am thankful that this House has been brave and manly enough, true enough to itself and the people we represent, to wipe from the statute-book more than three weeks ago that statute which would not permit these non-commissioned officers to receive promotion. Let me tell the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HURLBUT] in whose behalf that bill repealing this law was passed. It was in behalf of a young boy who went from this city in his sixteenth year and entered the confederate army just as the war was closing, and served in it about four months. After the war was over, as he had no other means of obtaining a livelihood, he enlisted in our Army and served there faithfully until he was made first a corporal and then a sergeant, and was then recommended by his officers for promotion to a second lieutenancy because he was capable and qualified. When the young man came to the Department and asked for the promotion, although the Secretary of War and the President wanted to give it to him, there was a statute in the way; he could not get it; it was refused him. He went back to his gun and his knapsack again. His case was presented to our committee by an Army officer. A bill was prepared repealing the law, and unanimously agreed to in the committee. General WILLIAMS reported the bill to this House, and it was passed without a dissenting voice.

Mr. Speaker, can it be that the spirit of hatred to the confederacy and the South has so imbedded itself into the hearts of men they will never forgive and forget the past? That they cannot even forgive the young men of the South who have come back and enlisted in our Army, and by faithful service proven their devotion to our flag. Shall they forever carry the knapsack and the gun and be refused a promotion to a lieutenancy, for which they are qualified and recommended? Sir, I regret that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HURLBUT] brought this matter into this discussion.

I know the people of the North will approve the repeal. I know that if the great heart of the northern people could answer, it would be with one accord, "Wipe out that statute and give the boy a chance." I know that when men speak as my friend speaks on this floor they speak not what the northern people believe and think; they speak not what their constituents would have them say.

This bill proposes to re-organize and consolidate the Quartermaster's and Commissary Departments. My friend from Illinois, who seeks in every way to defeat this bill, who appeals to that side to vote against the bill because the confederate soldier may be promoted to a lieutenancy in our Army, says that General Hancock has said that this consolidation ought not to be made. He blows hot on them and cold for you, or rather cold for them and hot for you. He says that General Hancock is opposed to this consolidation. I say that he is not. Let me read what General Hancock says. The question was asked him, "Would it not be practicable to consolidate the Quartermaster, Commissary, and Pay Departments into one corps?" The proposition was to consolidate all three of those staff departments. The answer was—

It would be "practicable" to consolidate the Quartermaster's, Commissary, and Pay Departments into one corps, but the operation would be difficult and attended with no great advantage or economy.

That is what he said in regard to consolidating the three corps. But what does he say further?

It would, therefore, in my opinion, be unwise to make such a change, unless we can be assured that the consolidation had been tried and had given greater satisfaction in other services, as shown by experience in recent great wars; and of this I am not advised.

Then we have General McDowell, who says that he has visited the English army, where all three of these departments are consolidated together, and that the consolidation there has been attended with great success. Therefore Hancock is in favor of consolidation. He says it is practicable, but that he would not like to recommend it unless it had been tried and found satisfactory. And McDowell, one of the ablest, the most accomplished and efficient officers of the Army, who has studied the interest and welfare of our Army, visited the English army, where this proposed system is carried out, and he testifies that it has been attended with the greatest success. Then as the consolidation has been tried and proved successful in other services, General Hancock must, according to his answer, be in favor of this consolidation.

Now, Mr. Speaker, the gentleman asks why we propose that certain officers who are mustered out by this consolidation shall receive one year's pay for every eight years' service, while others who are found disabled will receive one year's pay for every five years' service. If the gentleman had heard the arguments presented, when the bill was considered, upon this subject he would have heard this answer to his questions: That many good officers under the consolidation will go on to the supernumerary list, and that the service would lose less of the officers if the year's pay was given for eight years' service in place of five. As to the men who have been disabled in the service, a year's pay for each five years' service is not too much for them. If the gentleman had studied the bill, as other members of the committee have, he would have found this one of the best, most generous, and just provisions of the bill.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. BANNING. I wish to say one word further, if I may be permitted.

Mr. HURLBUT. I hope the gentleman will be allowed at all events as much additional time as I had.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. If there be no objection the gentleman will proceed.

Mr. BANNING. I wish to say only one word more, and that is in regard to the colored troops. I said in the beginning I preferred to keep all partisanship out of this discussion, and I will not now be driven to it by the gentleman. The doing away with the law in question wipes out from our statute a provision which is an insult to every colored man in the land. That provision established for the colored soldiers a separate regiment in order that they may have their rights. Now, upon this floor for the last three years we have had men asserting that political rights of colored men should be equal to those of the white man. The bill now before us proposes to wipe out a discriminating provision which is now a stain upon the statute and an insult to the colored man.

Mr. SMALLS. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. BANNING. Yes, sir.

Mr. SMALLS. Were there any colored men in the regular Army of the United States before this law which the gentleman now seeks to repeal was enacted by the Congress of the United States?

Mr. BANNING. No, sir. Before this law was enacted colored men had no political rights under the law. But to-day you have the right to come here, though there is no special law to permit you. Your rights here are the same as those of others. So it is with the rights of your race in the Army. Equality in this respect is what this bill gives you—nothing more and nothing less. For one I would not make the rights of the colored men any less.

Mr. Speaker, this provision of the bill—and I regret that I did not hear more fully upon this subject from my friend from Illinois, [Mr. HURLBUT]——

Mr. SMALLS. Will the gentleman allow me a word right there? He has stated that the same right which permits me to come here as a member of Congress will carry me into the Army. I understood the gentleman to say that.

Mr. BANNING. The gentleman has the same right to enlist in the Army that he had to run for Congress.

Mr. SMALLS. I know, sir, that no colored man could have enlisted in the Army if Congress had not passed a special act authorizing such enlistment, and I feel if matters go on just as they are going on now, and if we should have one or two more democratic Houses of Representatives, I shall not be allowed the right to come here; and no change in the law will be made either.

Mr. BANNING. Mr. Speaker, colored men are in the Navy to-day without any special enactment to put them there. The colored troops as a separate organization have proven a failure in the Army. The evidence in the War Department shows they will no longer enlist.

Mr. Speaker, the first vote on this bill will be upon the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. HURLBUT.]

Mr. MACKEY, of South Carolina. Will the gentleman yield to me for a single remark?

Mr. BANNING. Not at present; I will directly. The first question will be upon the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. HURLBUT.] That amendment, as has been already stated, proposes the appointment of seven Army officers to report a bill on this subject to the next Congress. Sir, we had a commission of Army officers to report regulations for the Army. I do not exactly know how many years ago that measure was passed; but I know that the regulations have not yet been adopted. In further answer to that proposition I might say that last evening there was sent to this House a petition from almost all the Army officers of the artillery line, recommending that there should be a chief of artillery; and the indorsement of the General of the Army was against that proposition. So you will find the staff of the Army, that is, its strength, that lives here in Washington and is powerful in the way of legislation, opposing anything that will reduce the staff. Now, sir, it was said by an old and distinguished Army officer that one campaign in Washington attending the "Germans" was equal for promotions to a dozen campaigns in the field. If the gentleman's amendment should succeed, these will be the men who will be appointed. They will scarcely agree; and if they do, it will be an agreement to take care of the officers and the staff, not the Army proper.

I hope, Mr. Speaker, the substitute will be voted down.

One word as to the amendment of the gentleman from Wyoming, [Mr. STEELE,] which makes a reduction of eight infantry regiments and none in the cavalry. I wish, by way of explanation, to say this is a question which may well be considered. I will, however, answer my friend in this way, that there are now 7,418 cavalry-men, that the non-commissioned staff of a regiment amounts to 18, the sergeants to 50, and the corporals to 80, making 148 in all, or 1,164 for the eight regiments, which, taken out of the 7,418, would leave 6,254 cavalry, or 508 less than the maximum number required for the consolidated regiments. If the reduction and consolidation are made to what we now propose, the cavalry regiments will not then be full. They will be much stronger and much more useful for operation against the Indians on the frontier or in the field by reason of their increased strength.

Mr. STEELE. Let me ask the gentleman one question.

Mr. BANNING. Certainly.

Mr. STEELE. Let me ask the gentleman whether it is not a fact that for all active operations of the Army in time of peace in this country the most useful and available troops are the cavalry regiments; whether the only use now for troops on active duty in the field is not in the protection of the Texan frontier and interior settlements from Indian raids, and whether for that purpose the infantry are not almost utterly useless; whether the active service of the Army must not now be done by the cavalry arm, and whether it would not be a very dangerous experiment, in view of the present aspect of the Indian country, to reduce the number of cavalry regiments at all; and if there were any possibility of this bill becoming a law, whether, if the number of regiments are to be reduced, it would not be much safer to make the reduction in the infantry rather than in the cavalry, retaining that arm of the service which can and must be of the most effective service? If we increase the number of cavalry and decrease the number of infantry, even if you reduce the number of regiments, that will give you an available, active, and effective military force which will be of some benefit. It is well known that, when infantry are used to pursue Indians or raiders, it is necessary to mount them to accomplish any practical purpose.

If the gentleman will allow me I would like to say that the present active force of the Army in the section of the country which I have the honor to represent has proved entirely inadequate to the protection of our people, and, in view of the present and probable complications with the Indians, that the force cannot safely be diminished, but should for the safety of our people and settlements be largely increased.

I know of course that the pending bill does not reduce the number of the enlisted men of the Army, but only reduces the regimental organizations. If a reduction is to be made of the regiments of cavalry and infantry to twenty-eight, it should be made in such manner as if possible to increase the effective force and strength of our small Army, and in my opinion that can best be done, in view of the present condition of the country and necessities of the service, by increasing the strength of the cavalry regiments, even if it has to be done at the expense of the infantry regiments.

I shall regret any hardships which may be inflicted upon any of the officers of the infantry arm of the service by the passage of this bill; but I believe the frontiers can be best protected by increasing the strength of the cavalry, even if we must submit to a reduction of the number and strength of our infantry regiments.

Mr. MAGINNIS. I wish to call the attention of the House to the fact that we support this amendment, not because we desire to have the number of infantry regiments reduced, but because we feel that the frontier cannot spare a single company of cavalry. The Army organization as it now stands should be filled up to the maximum. There is plenty of work for such an army now, and the signs are ominous that there will be a great deal more work in the future. The Government cannot remain deaf to the cries for protection coming up from the ravaged and bleeding frontier to-day. The principal object of government is to protect the lives and property of its citizens, and when it ceases to do that it abdicates the function for which it was organized. But if the reduction of the fighting force of the Army, so unwisely made by Congress two years ago, be still insisted upon, and a reduction in organization is to be made to correspond with that reduction of men, we hope that it may not be made in the cavalry arm of the service, the arm most useful at present, and most difficult to organize and train into efficiency in the case of a great war.

I might call the attention of the chairman of the Military Committee to the fact that in three expeditions now marching against the hostile Sioux one at least is largely composed of infantry, because there was no cavalry to use. And I ask him, as a gentleman of great military experience, what chance there is for that infantry in a chase after mounted Indians? How difficult to use infantry at all in such work unless you mount the men, and that is more costly and expensive than the maintenance of additional cavalry regiments. The Indians that we must hereafter fight are the Indians of the plains—cavalry Indians—occupying a country peculiarly favorable for cavalry operations. The Indians of the woods and the mountains do not give us much trouble at this time, nor do any remaining bands of them threaten much trouble in future. Our troubles and our wars are to be with Indians on horseback, and neither infantry nor artillery are speedy enough to compete with these Bedouins of the American plains. Therefore, I hope that if the Army is to be re-organized the cavalry arm will be increased to even greater efficiency than at present. I admit the argument of the gentleman from Ohio that such a result can be secured even under this bill by filling up the eight cavalry regiments, but I insist than ten or even more than ten full cavalry regiments are needed to meet the pressing necessity of protecting our people on the frontiers and giving to our citizens that peace and security which it is the duty of the Government to give to all its people.

Mr. BANNING. I will answer the gentleman's question; but before doing so I wish to state to the House, as there may be some misunderstanding in the matter, that this bill does not reduce the number of the fighting force of the Army a single man—not one.

Mr. MAGINNIS. I understand that.

Mr. BANNING. The question propounded by the gentleman is a very important one. It is one which has been carefully considered. It is one upon which there have been differences of opinion, I must freely confess. General Williams, an old and accomplished soldier himself, argued this question for a long time with me; and I am glad the House is going to determine it by a vote on this occasion. I shall ask a vote upon the bill as it is; but the gentleman from Wyoming presents a question for every man to consider; and the men from Texas and from Montana and Wyoming are, I agree, good authority upon the point here presented, and know well what are the wants of that section of the country; but it is a question for every member to consider, whether it would be better to reduce the infantry regiments to eighteen and let the cavalry regiments stand as they are. The amendment leaves that with the House to determine. I must say, however, that the evidence presented to the Committee on Military Affairs by men from the frontier who testified before us goes to prove that the infantry was useless in Indian campaigns, and that for these campaigns the cavalry was absolutely necessary in order to catch the Indians.

Thanking the House for its attention, and in the hope that this bill will not only pass this House but become a law, because I believe it is right in all its parts and will result in securing for us a much better and more efficient army than we have now, I ask for a vote on the amendment moved by the gentleman from Wyoming.

I ask the gentleman from Illinois whether he will not consent to the withdrawal of the motion to recommit, so I may demand the previous question on the bill and amendments?

Mr. HURLBUT. I do not object to considering all other motions withdrawn, and the bill now before the House.

Mr. BANNING. The bill is in the House. Does the gentleman object to the withdrawal of the motion to recommit?

Mr. HURLBUT. Not at all.

Mr. BANNING. Then I shall call for the previous question.

Mr. MACKEY, of South Carolina. I desire to ask the gentleman from Ohio a question before he takes his seat.

Mr. BANNING. I will answer if I can.

Mr. MACKEY, of South Carolina. The question I desire to ask the gentleman is this: If the gentleman from Ohio is sincere in his statement, (and I mean no offense by using the word sincere,) if his only object is to do away with that feature of the law which requires a colored man enlisting in the United States Army shall be embraced in a separate organization, will he then withdraw his objection to allowing the amendment to be offered by my colleague, that hereafter no discrimination shall be made in enlistments?

Mr. BANNING. I made no objection to it myself. It is the law now, and it would be just as proper to put in this bill the Declaration of Independence, that all men are created equal.

Mr. MACKEY, of South Carolina. Do I understand his objection is withdrawn to receiving the amendment of my colleague?

Mr. BANNING. That is the law now. I have not the power to give my consent unless the gentleman from Pennsylvania withdraws his objection. Will the gentleman vote for the bill if that is done?

Mr. RANDALL. I ask for the regular order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The regular order is called for, and the first vote is on the amendment of the gentleman from Wyoming, [Mr. STEELE,] the motion to recommit having been withdrawn by unanimous consent.

Mr. SMALLS. I ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania if he will not withdraw his objection to my amendment?

Mr. RANDALL. I have asked for the regular order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Objection being made, the gentleman's amendment cannot be received. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Wyoming, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend section 1 of the bill by striking out lines 3 and 4, and inserting in lieu thereof the following:

That the number of infantry regiments is hereby reduced to eighteen.

The question being taken, there were—ayes 22, noes 132.

So the amendment was not agreed to.

The question was next on the amendment offered by Mr. HURLBUT as a substitute for the bill; which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the President of the United States be requested and directed to appoint a commission of seven officers of the Army of distinguished service and knowledge, who shall report through the President, as soon as practicable, their opinions upon the best method of re-organizing the Army of the United States, and especially upon the best method of organizing the staff departments with a view to economy and efficiency.

Mr. KASSON. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 88, nays 113, not voting 87; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Adams, George A. Bagley, John H. Baker, William H. Baker, Ballou, Blaine, Blair, Bradley, William R. Brown, Horatio C. Burchard, Chittenden, Crapo, Crounse, Culberson, Danford, Davy, Denison, Dobbins, Dunnell, Eames, Frost, Frye, Garfield, Hancock, Haralson, Hardenbergh, Benjamin W. Wallace, John W. Wallace, Erastus Wells, G. Wiley Wells, White, Whiting, Willard, Andrew Williams, Charles G. Williams, William B. Williams, James Wilson, and Woodworth—88.

NAYS—Messrs. Ainsworth, Anderson, Atkins, John H. Bagley, jr., Banning, Beebe, Bland, Blount, Bradford, Bright, John Young Brown, Buckner, Cabell, John H. Caldwell, William P. Caldwell, Candler, Cate, Caulfield, Chapin, John B. Clarke of Kentucky, John B. Clark, jr., of Missouri, Clymer, Cochrane, Collins, Cutler, De Bolt, Dibrell, Douglas, Durand, Durham, Eden, Ellis, Ely, Felton, Finley, Forney, Franklin, Fuller, Gause, Glover, Goode, Goodin, Gunter, Robert Hamilton, Hartridge, Hartzell, Hatcher, Hereford, Goldsmith W. Hewitt, Hill, Holman, House, Hunton, Hurd, Thomas L. Jones, Knott, Lamar, Franklin Landers, Le Moyne, Lewis, Lord, Lynde, Maish, McFarland, McMahon, Metcalfe, Milliken, Money, Morrison, Neal, O'Brien, Odell, Parsons, Payne, John F. Philips, Piper, Poppleton, Randall, Rea, John Reilly, Rice, Riddle, John Robbins, Miles Ross, Savage, Sayler, Scales, Sheakley, Singleton, Siemons, William E. Smith, Southard, Springer, Stenger, Tarbox, Teese, Terry, Thomas, Thompson, Turney, Robert B. Vance, Charles C. B. Walker, Walling, Walsh, Ward, Wigginton, Wike, James Williams, Jeremiah N. Williams, Willis, Fernando Wood, Yeates, and Young—113.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. Ashe, Bagby, Banks, Bass, Bell, Blackburn, Bliss, Boone, Samuel D. Burchard, Burleigh, Campbell, Cannon, Cason, Caswell, Conger, Cook, Cowan, Cox, Darrall, Davis, Egbert, Evans, Faulkner, Fort, Foster, Freeman, Gibson, Hale, Andrew H. Hamilton, Henry R. Harris, John T. Harris, Harrison, Henkle, Abram S. Hewitt, Hoar, Hoge, Hooker, Hopkins, Hoskins, Hubbell, Hyman, Jenks, Frank Jones, George M. Landers, Lane, Lapham, Luttrell, L. A. Mackey, Meade, Mutchler, New, Oliver, Phelps, Pierce, Powell, Pratt, Purman, Rainey, Reagan, James B. Reilly, William M. Robbins, Roberts, Sobieski Ross, Schumaker, A. Herr Smith, Sparks, Strait, Stevenson, Stone, Stowell, Swann, Thornburgh, Tucker, John L. Vance, Waddell, Wait, Gilbert C. Walker, Warren, Wheeler, Whitehouse, Whitthorne, Alpheus S. Williams, James D. Williams, Wilshire, Benjamin Wilson, Alan Wood, jr., and Woodburn—87.

So the amendment was not agreed to.

During the roll-call the following announcements were made:

Mr. WIKE. My colleague, Mr. BAGBY, is absent on committee duty by order of the House.

Mr. DURAND. I desire to say that my colleagues, Mr. A. S. WILLIAMS and Mr. CONGER, are absent by order of the House. If present I think Mr. WILLIAMS would vote "no," and Mr. CONGER would vote "ay."

Mr. FOSTER. On this question I am paired with the gentleman from Virginia, Mr. TUCKER. If present he would vote "no," and I would vote "ay."

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. I am paired with General COOK, of Georgia. If present he would vote "no," and I would vote "ay."

Mr. WHITING. My colleague, Mr. FORT, is absent by leave of the House.

Mr. HOSKINS. I am paired with Mr. WALKER, of Virginia. If he were here he would vote "no," and I would vote "ay."

Mr. OLIVER. I am paired with Mr. HOPKINS, of Pennsylvania. If he were present he would vote "no," and I would vote "ay."

The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is now on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

Mr. MACDOUGALL. Pending that, I move to lay the bill on the table; and on that motion I call for the yeas and nays.

Mr. HURLBUT. Rather let us have the yeas and nays on the passage of the bill.

Mr. MACDOUGALL. Very well; I withdraw the call for the yeas and nays.

The motion to lay the bill on the table was not agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time.

Mr. MACDOUGALL. I call for the reading of the engrossed bill.

Mr. HOLMAN. Does not this call come too late?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman called in time for the reading of the engrossed bill. The bill has not been engrossed.

Mr. MACDOUGALL. I withdraw the call for the reading of the engrossed bill.

The bill was read the third time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question recurs on the passage of the bill.

Mr. HURLBUT. Upon that I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 123, nays 82, not voting 83; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Ainsworth, Anderson, Ashe, Atkins, John H. Bagley, jr., Banning, Beebe, Bland, Blount, Boone, Bradford, Bright, John Young Brown, Buckner, Cabell, John H. Caldwell, William P. Caldwell, Candler, Cate, Caulfield, Chapin, John B. Clarke of Kentucky, John B. Wallace, Walsh, Warren, Wheeler, Whitehouse, Alpheus S. Williams, Wilshire, Benjamin Wilson, James Wilson, Alan Wood, jr., and Woodburn—83.

So the bill was passed.

During the roll-call,

Mr. BAKER, of Indiana, said: My colleague, Mr. EVANS, is absent by leave of the House; if he were here he would vote "no."

Mr. DURAND. My colleagues, Mr. A. S. WILLIAMS and Mr. CONGER, are absent by order of the House; if present Mr. WILLIAMS would vote "ay," and Mr. CONGER I think would vote "no."

Mr. THROCKMORTON. My colleague, Mr. REAGAN, is absent on account of sickness.

Mr. FOSTER. I am paired upon this question with the gentleman from Virginia, Mr. TUCKER; if he were present he would vote "ay," and I would vote "no."

Mr. WALLACE, of Pennsylvania. I am paired upon this question with my colleague, Mr. EGBERT; if he were here he would vote "ay," and I would vote "no."

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. I am paired upon this question with the gentleman from Georgia, Mr. COOK; if he were present he would vote "ay," and I would vote "no."

Mr. HOSKINS. I am paired with the gentleman from Virginia, Mr. WALKER; if he were present he would vote "ay," and I would vote "no."

Mr. OLIVER. Upon this question I am paired with Mr. HOPKINS, who is absent by leave of the House; if present he would vote "ay," and I would vote "no."

Mr. VAN VORHES. I am paired with my colleague, Mr. VANCE, who is absent by leave of the House; if present he would vote "ay," and I would vote "no."

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I agreed to pair with the gentleman from North Carolina, Mr. WADDELL, upon election cases; but his friends understand that the pair was to be upon all political questions. Now, as he went home to attend to a sick member of his family, I will leave it so, and, having voted, I will withdraw my vote.

Mr. SCALES. My colleagues, Mr. DAVIS and Mr. ROBBINS, are both absent by leave of the House.

Mr. HURLBUT. My colleague, Mr. FORT, is absent by leave of the House.

The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded.

Mr. BANNING moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. SYMPSON, one of their clerks, informed the House that the Senate had passed, without amendment, joint resolution (H. R. No. 115) granting the use of artillery, blankets, &c., at the national soldiers' reunion at Caldwell, Ohio.

The message further announced that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles; in which the concurrence of the House was requested:

An act (S. No. 115) to amend sections 533, 556, 571, and 572 of the Revised Statutes of the United States relating to courts in Arkansas and other States;

An act (S. No. 599) granting a pension to Catharine A. Winslow, widow of the late Rear-Admiral John A. Winslow;

An act (S. No. 626) in relation to the Japanese indemnity fund;

An act (S. No. 779) to provide for the sale of the reservation of the confederated Otoe and Missouri Indians in the States of Kansas and Nebraska;

An act (S. No. 808) for the relief of Charles B. Varney, of Portland, Maine; and

An act (S. No. 863) to change the name of the steamship City of Brashear to Lone Star.

The message further announced that the Senate insisted on their amendments to the bill (H. R. No. 2441) authorizing the appointment of receivers of national banks, and for other purposes, and had agreed to the conference asked for by the House, and had appointed Mr. SHERMAN, Mr. LOGAN, and Mr. BAYARD as managers of said conference on the part of the Senate.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. RANDALL. I move that the rules be suspended and the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union on the Indian appropriation bill.

Mr. HOLMAN. I desire to make an inquiry as to the order of business. The bill to equalize the bounties of soldiers was made a special order for the day before yesterday and from day to day thereafter until disposed of——

Mr. HURLBUT. To what bill does the gentleman refer?

Mr. HOLMAN. To the bill for the equalization of bounties. I ask unanimous consent that that bill be taken up and disposed of immediately after the Indian appropriation bill has been disposed of.

Mr. BUCKNER. I object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman can call up the bill for consideration at that time. The question now is upon the motion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole for the consideration of the Indian appropriation bill.

Mr. HOLMAN. Then I give notice that as soon as the Indian appropriation bill is disposed of I will insist upon the special order, being the bill for the equalization of bounties.

Mr. KELLEY. I ask my colleague [Mr. RANDALL] to yield to me for a moment.

Mr. RANDALL. I will do so.

EVENING SESSION FOR TARIFF DISCUSSION.

Mr. KELLEY. I move that there be a session of the House to-morrow evening, beginning at half past seven, for debate only on the tariff bill, no business whatever to be transacted. A number of gentlemen have prepared themselves to speak upon that subject, and as they are not likely to get an opportunity to do so during the business hours of the day, I ask that to-morrow evening be set apart for discussion upon that subject.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That requires unanimous consent.

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

MERCHANT SEAMEN.

Mr. WARD. I desire to call up a privileged motion: to reconsider the vote by which the House recommitted to the Committee on Commerce the bill relating to merchant seamen. If the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] will yield to me for that purpose, I think it will not take long to dispose of the bill, and it is very important that it should reach the Senate at an early day.

Mr. RANDALL. I would prefer that the gentleman would not press his proposition for the present.

Mr. WARD. It will not take much time.

Mr. RANDALL. I would be willing to yield for twenty minutes.

Mr. WARD. I will explain the bill in as brief time as I can.

Mr. RANDALL. I will yield for thirty minutes.

Mr. WARD. Mr. Speaker, I now call up the motion to reconsider the vote by which the House recommitted to the Committee on Commerce the bill (H. R. No. 3187) to amend title 53 of the Revised Statutes, relating to merchant seamen.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That sections 4501, 4502, 4503, 4504, 4505, 4506, 4507, 4511, 4541, 4545, 4554, 4594, and tables C and E of the schedule, in title 53 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, be, and are hereby, repealed, and the following sections and tables substituted therefor:

CHAPTER 1.—SHIPPING COMMISSIONERS.

SEC. 4501. The Secretary of the Treasury shall appoint a commissioner for every port of entry which is also a port of ocean navigation, where, in his judgment, such officer may be required within any district of the United States now or hereafter to be established for the collection of revenue from customs, such officer to be named a shipping commissioner; and the said Secretary shall have power to remove from office any commissioner so appointed who he may have reason to believe does not properly discharge the duties devolved upon him by this title; and to provide for the proper performance of the duties of such offices in the case of a vacancy, by designating a substitute until such vacancy be filled; and shall regulate the mode of conducting business in the shipping offices to be established as hereinafter provided; and shall have full and complete control over the same, subject to the provisions herein contained.

SEC. 4502. Every shipping commissioner so appointed shall give bond to the United States conditioned for the faithful performance of the duties of his office for a sum, in the discretion of the Secretary of the Treasury, of not less than $5,000, with two good and sufficient sureties therefor, to be approved by such Secretary, and shall take and subscribe the following oath before entering upon the duties of his office: "I do solemnly swear (or affirm, as the case may be) that I will support the Constitution of the United States; and that I will truly and faithfully discharge the duties of a shipping commissioner to the best of my ability, and according to law." Such oath shall be indorsed on the commission or certificate of appointment, and signed by him, and certified by the officer before whom such oath shall have been taken.

SEC. 4503. In any port in which no shipping commissioner shall have been appointed, the whole or any part of the business of a shipping commissioner shall be conducted by the collector or deputy collector of customs of such port. The Secretary of the Treasury may increase the salary of such collector or deputy where the same is not fixed by law, to conform to the increased duties imposed upon him by the provisions of this title; and the collector or deputy collector shall pay all sums collected by either of them in such capacity into the Treasury of the United States; and in respect of such business, such custom-house shall be deemed a shipping office, and the collector or deputy collector of customs to whom such business shall be committed shall for all purposes be deemed a shipping commissioner within the meaning of this title.

SEC. 4504. Any person other than a commissioner under this title, who shall perform, or attempt to perform, either directly or indirectly, the duties which are by this title set forth as pertaining to a shipping commissioner, shall be liable to a penalty of not more than $500. Nothing in this title, however, shall prevent the owner, or consignee, or master of any vessel, except vessels bound from a port in the United States to any foreign port, other than vessels engaged in trade between the United States and the British North American possessions, or the West India islands, or the republic of Mexico, and vessels of the burden of seventy-five tons or upward, bound from a port on the Atlantic to a port on the Pacific, or vice versa, from performing himself, as far as his vessel is concerned, the duties of shipping commissioner under this title. Whenever the master of any vessel shall engage his crew, or any part of the same, in any collection district where no shipping commissioner shall have been appointed, or where such commissioner having been appointed shall refuse, or by absence or otherwise be unable to perform the duties of that office, or the collector or deputy collector of such collection district shall not claim the right to act in the capacity of shipping commissioner by the provisions of the preceding section, then the master may perform for himself the duties of such commissioner.

SEC. 4505. Any shipping commissioner may engage a clerk or clerks (who shall upon being so appointed take and subscribe an oath of office in like manner with the commissioners) to assist him in the transaction of the business of the shipping office. The number and salaries of such clerks shall be regulated by the Secretary of the Treasury of the United States. The shipping commissioner may, in case of necessity, depute such clerk or clerks to act for him in his official capacity; and all acts done by any such clerks, when deputized by the commissioner, shall be valid and binding as if done by the commissioner, who shall personally be liable for any penalties such clerk or clerks may incur for any violation of any of the provisions of this title. Such clerk or clerks shall be under the direction of the shipping commissioner, who shall be empowered to remove from office any clerk who, in his opinion, does not properly discharge the duties devolved upon him; and no officer or clerk appointed under this title shall retain any fees or other moneys arising from or by virtue of this title, in remuneration for any services performed by him or them, or under any pretext whatever.

SEC. 4506. Each shipping commissioner shall be provided with a seal, with which he shall authenticate all his official acts, on which seal shall be engraved the arms of the United States and the name of the sea-port or district for which he is commissioned. Any instrument, either printed or written, purporting to be the official act of a shipping commissioner, and purporting to be under the seal and signature of such shipping commissioner, shall be received as prima facie evidence of the official character of such instrument, and of the truth of the facts therein set forth.

SEC. 4507. The Secretary of the Treasury of the United States shall, at every port where a shipping commissioner is appointed, designate a certain portion of the custom-house, or shall lease, rent, or procure other suitable premises in the vicinity of such custom-house, for the transaction of the business of such commissioner, and for the preservation of the books and other documents connected therewith, and these premises shall be styled the shipping commissioner's office.

CHAPTER 2.—SHIPMENT.

SEC. 4511. The master of every vessel bound from a port in the United States to any foreign port, other than vessels engaged in trade between the United States and the British North American possessions, or the West India Islands, or the republic of Mexico, or of any vessel of the burden of seventy-five tons or upward, bound from a port on the Atlantic to a port on the Pacific, or vice versa, shall, before he proceeds on such voyage, make an agreement, in writing or in print, with every seaman whom he carries to sea as one of the crew, in the manner hereinafter mentioned; and every such agreement shall be, as near as may be, in the form given in the table marked A in the schedule annexed to this title, and shall be dated at the time of the first signature thereof, and shall be signed by the master before any seaman signs the same, and shall contain the following particulars:

First, the nature and, as far as practicable, the duration of the intended voyage or engagement, and the port or country at which the voyage is to terminate;

Second, the number and description of the crew, specifying their respective employments;

Third, the time at which each seaman is to be on board to begin work;

Fourth, the capacity in which each seaman is to serve;

Fifth, the amount of wages each seaman is to receive;

Sixth, a scale of the provisions which are to be furnished to each seaman and a guarantee that the victuals supplied to the crew shall be equivalent in quality to the United States Navy ration;

Seventh, any regulations as to conduct on board, and as to fines, short allowance of provisions, or other lawful punishments for misconduct which may be sanctioned by Congress as regulations proper to be adopted, and which the parties agree to adopt;

Eighth, any stipulations in reference to advance and allotment of wages, or other matters not contrary to law.

CHAPTER 3.—WAGES AND EFFECTS.

SEC. 4541. Whenever any such seaman or apprentice dies at any place out of the United States, leaving any money or effects not on board of his vessel, the consular officer of the United States at or nearest the place shall claim and take charge of such money and effects, and shall, if he thinks fit, sell all or any of such effects, or any effects of any deceased seaman or apprentice delivered to him under the provisions of this title, and shall quarterly remit to the district court for the district embracing the port from which such ship sailed, or the port where the voyage terminates, all moneys belonging to or arising from the sale of the effects or paid as the wages of any deceased seamen or apprentices, which have come to his hands, and shall render such accounts thereof as the district judge requires.

SEC. 4545. When no claim to the wages or effects of a deceased seaman or apprentice, received by a circuit court, is substantiated within six years after the receipt thereof by the court, it shall be in the absolute discretion of the court, if any subsequent claim is made, either to allow or refuse the same. Such court shall, on the 1st day of January, 1877, render an account to the Secretary of the Treasury of the United States of all moneys remaining in such court, and which have been arisen from such unclaimed wages and effects as aforesaid, with the date of receipt of each item, and shall annually thereafter, on the 1st day of January, render such an account of all such moneys then remaining in such court, and which have arisen as aforesaid; and all such moneys shall, if not, in the opinion of the court, necessarily retained for the purpose of satisfying claims, be, on the 1st day of January next after the expiration of six years from the time when it was received by the court, paid into the Treasury of the United States; and such money shall form a fund for and be appropriated to the relief of sick and disabled and destitute seamen belonging to the United States merchant-marine service.

CHAPTER 5.—PROTECTION AND RELIEF.

SEC. 4554. Every shipping commissioner shall hear and decide any question whatsoever between a master, consignee, agent, or owner, and any of his crew, which both parties agree in writing to submit to him; and every award so made by him shall be binding on both parties, and shall, in any legal proceedings which may be taken in the matter before any court of justice, be deemed to be prima facie evidence as to the rights of the parties; and any document under the hand and official seal of a commissioner purporting to be such submission or award shall be prima facie evidence thereof. But no commissioner shall charge or cause to be charged any fees or charges for acting as arbiter in such cases to either party to such action, other than the actual expenses incurred in securing the attendance of the necessary witnesses thereto.

CHAPTER 6.—FEES OF SHIPPING COMMISSIONERS.

SEC. 4594. In no case shall the salary of any officer appointed under this title be more than $4,000 per annum, except in the port of New York, where it shall not be more than $5,000 per annum; and all salaries of the officers appointed by virtue of this title shall be paid by the Secretary of the Treasury of the United States, and all fees or other moneys collected by the commissioners shall be by them paid into the Treasury in such manner as shall be hereafter directed by the Secretary of the Treasury of the United States.

SCHEDULE.

TABLE C.—FEES, (SEAMEN.)

Fee payable on engaging crew, for each member of the crew, (except apprentices,) $1.

Fee payable on discharging crew, for each member of crew discharged, thirty cents.

TABLE E.—REDUCTION FROM WAGES OF SEAMEN.

In partial repayment of the fees payable in table C, in respect of engagements, from the wages of each member of the crew, fifteen cents.

In respect of discharges, from the wages of each member of the crew, fifteen cents

The motion to reconsider was agreed to.

Mr. WARD. I withdraw the motion to recommit. The bill has occupied some time in reading, but the amendments to the shipping act proposed are not very many.

Before proceeding to explain the bill, I desire to offer a few additional amendments. The first amendment I propose is on page 2 of the printed bill, line 20, after the word "customs," insert "and designate and regulate the salary thereof, subject to the limitation contained in section 4594." There was an omission to give the Secretary of the Treasury power to regulate the compensation of these commissioners.

Mr. SEELYE. I do not understand whether or not this amendment is intended to take away from the circuit judge the appointment of these commissioners and to give it to the Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. HEREFORD. The bill does.

Mr. SEELYE. Then I think it a very undesirable amendment. It would seem as though these shipping commissioners ought to be quite out of the ordinary line of political appointments. The appointment of the commissioners by the circuit judge of the United States court has thus far secured this end, and it would seem very desirable that it should continue.

Mr. WARD. I think after I have made my explanation the gentleman will be satisfied that this amendment is not so objectionable as he seems to suppose. It merely gives the Secretary power to fix the amount of the salary of these commissioners, subject to the limitation contained in section 4594 of the Revised Statutes, which is, that it shall not exceed $4,000, except in New York, where it shall not exceed $5,000. That is all there is in the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WARD. I propose another amendment. On page 4 of the printed bill, in line 67, after the word "master," insert the words "or in case of the absence of the owner, consignee, or the sickness or other disability of the master, the agent." Also on the same page, in line 76, after the word "master," insert the words "or in case of sickness or other disability, the agent;" so that that portion of the section will read as follows:

Nothing in this title, however, shall prevent the owner or consignee or master, or in case of the absence of the owner or consignee, or the sickness or other disability of the master, the agent of any vessel, except vessels bound from a port in the United States to any foreign port, other than vessels engaged in trade between the United States and the British North American possessions or the West India islands or the republic of Mexico, and vessels of the burden of seventy-five tons or upward, bound from a port on the Atlantic to a port on the Pacific, or vice versa, from performing himself, as far as his vessel is concerned, the duties of shipping commissioner under this title. Whenever the master, or, in case of sickness or other disability, the agent, of any vessel shall engage his crew, or any part of the same, in any collection district where no shipping commissioner shall have been appointed, or where such commissioner having been appointed shall refuse, or by absence or otherwise be unable to perform the duties of that office, or the collector or deputy collector of such collection district shall not claim the right to act in the capacity of shipping commissioner by the provisions of the preceding section, then the master may perform for himself the duties of such commissioner.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WARD. I propose, also, the following amendment:

On page 4, in lines 71 and 72, strike out after the word "of," in line 71, the words "the burden of seventy-five tons or upward," and insert "less than seventy-five tons burden."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WARD. I also move to amend as follows:

On page 10, line 225, add the following:

And the salaries of officers and clerks appointed by this bill shall be paid out of such fees or other moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

It is already provided that the fees shall be paid into the Treasury; but there was an omission to state in the bill that the Secretary of the Treasury should pay these salaries out of such fees or other money in the Treasury.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WARD. I propose now, in order that members of the House may understand the reasons which have induced the presentation of this bill, to make some explanations, and I will do so as briefly as I can. The shipping act is a law of great importance, and the committee have been careful not to disturb its material provisions.

Mr. PAGE. Before the gentleman proceeds, I would like to inquire whether he intends to call for a vote on this bill to-day?

Mr. WARD. I do, as soon as I am through with my remarks.

Mr. Speaker, the act known as the "shipping act of 1872" relating to merchant seamen, and being title 53 of the Revised Statutes, has in many important respects fulfilled the intentions of its framers, but has been found practically deficient in some of its provisions, and thus the benefits expected from its operations have been materially abridged and serious abuses have been called into existence. It has been in operation from August, 1872, to the present time, and there has been ample opportunity to judge fairly of its merits and defects.

The well-known character of the sailor and his essentially peculiar mode of life have long ago led, in the leading maritime nations, to the enactment of laws for his protection, especially as to his shipment and discharge from service. His occupation is pursued remotely from society at large and under discipline necessarily strict and to a great extent arbitrary. Released from his customary restraints, with his pay in his pocket and a stranger among strangers, he naturally becomes liable to temptations and impositions; and the opportunities thus afforded attract a class of men who are to be found in every seaport ready to take advantage of his circumstances and make him their prey.

As the laws of other countries competing with us for the great prizes of the shipping trade secured for their seamen special advantages which our own did not enjoy, our commerce suffered from the want of enactments duly protecting our sailors, whose condition in our sea-ports was one of great injustice to themselves and other citizens, and disgraceful to our country.

It was the common habit of a large class of men who infested the sea-ports to pander to the grossest appetites of the sailor, and taking advantage of his inexperience and the exhilaration naturally produced by his being ashore, and his freedom from restraint, to keep him in a state of excitement and intoxication, so that he became powerless in their hands. He was liable not only to be cheated and robbed of his wages to an extent that could not be practiced on any other class of men, but his labor was sold and his services engaged for long voyages when he was unconscious of the nature of the agreement he was making. Sometimes, when he imagined he had contracted for a short trip, he found himself in a vessel bound for the East Indies or China. There were not a few instances where mechanics and persons of various other pursuits in the city or rural districts were drugged, carried to the ship, and passed off as good sailors, their captors pocketing their advance wages, they themselves incapable of performing duties at sea and the ships endangered by being insufficiently manned.

Extortion of the most flagrant kinds was practiced. Both sailors and ship-masters were victims. When men were abundant a large proportion of the sailor's wages was taken from him for securing shipment for him. One of the consequences of this infamous treatment and of his being frequently shipped while unconscious of what he was doing was that he worked grudgingly and under a sense of injury on board ship, that the captain found difficulty in managing him, and that he frequently deserted at the first port where he landed, taking his chance of shipping again under some different name. When there was a scarcity of sailors similar extortion was practiced on the ship-owners, but frequently there was a combination among the more powerful parties to the bargains, the sailor himself being the chief sufferer, not only from the condition to which he was reduced, but because, from the nature of his vocation, he was only a transient stranger. It could only be expected that in such a state of affairs between officers and crew, separated by a wide expanse of waters and long intervals of time from ordinary society and its laws, discipline might often degenerate into tyranny and cruelty on one side, and that, on the other, insubordination and even mutiny might arise.

The well-known existence of these evils long attracted the attention of philanthropic persons, whose exertions led to the passage of the act now under consideration. The preponderating weight of the most reliable information from the various ports shows that under its operation the wrongs already described have been checked or destroyed, and the examples made of offenders have induced a salutary fear of detection, exposure, and punishment. There has been a marked improvement in the condition of seamen, and the ship-owners, many of whom were at first opposed to the act, have found benefit from some of its provisions.

Although, for the most part, the opinion of those who have made due investigation is, in the language of a report adopted by the New York Ship-Owners' Association, after being carefully prepared by a committee of six of its members, that the act is, on the whole, beneficial to the interests of both sailors and ship-owners, if properly interpreted and administered in accordance with what the committee believe to have been the intention of its framers, the conclusion is yet more generally admitted that the law is not free from defects, but is capable of improvement. It is believed that, by judicious and much-needed amendments, many, if not all, of the objections conscientiously entertained against the act will in due time be removed.

The provisions of the act are numerous, but its main object is to provide an officer to see that no foul play is practiced on the seaman or his employer in the engagement or discharge of crews. The commissioner appointed for these purposes is, in order to execute them satisfactorily, invested with various powers which might be safely intrusted to a thoroughly just and firm man, but are liable to many perversions. In view of the crimes it was intended to prevent, the essential rule of making him duly responsible was neglected. The natural result has followed that the shipping commissioners, being actually responsible to no one particularly, often perverted the powers intrusted to them, have seldom made proper reports, and are virtually and practically "a law unto themselves."

As New York is the chief shipping-port of the United States, the merits and defects of the law and the enormity of the abuses which exist under it are most plainly visible there. In various degrees the same results may be seen in other sea-ports.

The act directs that to provide means for the payment of the commissioner and the execution of his duties, specified fees shall be paid to him on the engagement and discharge of seamen; that his compensation shall not exceed $5,000 a year; and that he shall pay the surplus into the Treasury of the United States. It does not appear that the commissioner at New York has ever paid any of the fees into the Treasury, although they have greatly exceeded the sum he was authorized to retain, but has expended them in a manner directly in violation of the provisions of the act. The first five months of its operation ended December 31, 1872. During that time the fees received amounted to $22,112, but the expenditures of the commissioner were $23,168.87, leaving an alleged balance of $1,056 87 due to him. Thus he appropriated for such uses as he arbitrarily chose the sum of $21,085.53 during the first few months of his tenure of office. In 1873 the amount of fees collected was $38,267.50, all of which was expended or retained, and a claim made of the further sum of $1,088.61, as due to him. In 1874 the number of attachés to his office was diminished, but he managed to expend the whole amount of fees, being $56,169, and claimed as due to him the further sum of $805.57. There is no satisfactory reason for this sudden increase of nearly $20,000 in the alleged expenditures of that year over the one next preceding it. In 1875 the amount of fees received was $51,718.50, and perhaps under a salutary fear of the direction of public attention, or in pursuance of the rule of spending all the money that came under his control, the expenditures reported by the commissioner were $51,440.29, including the balance due for the previous year.

An analysis of the expenditures of the commissioner shows that to a most serious extent they were made for his personal ends and in gross violation of the law. The act provides that he may "engage a clerk or clerks to assist him and to act as deputies at his own proper cost." Regardless of this direction he engaged six clerks, at a salary of $1,300 each; eleven agents and others, at salaries amounting to $10,660; a deputy, at $2,400; and paid each of four of his own sons a salary of $2,500. All these salaries were paid out of the fees, and in addition to his own salary of $5,000, although, as has been already shown, he was only authorized to engage any clerks or deputy by paying the salary "at his own proper cost."

Among these glaring violations of the law, the appointment by the commissioner of no less than four of his own sons, at salaries of $2,500 each, is not the least conspicuous and flagrant. The salary is more than that paid to his deputy, and it is obvious that fair and just decisions could not be expected from him in any of the cases where the appeal might be made to the commissioner in the interest of the seaman's or public rights against any of his sons thus favored and exorbitantly paid from the money collected from the seamen. The committee are fully satisfied that the duties of the shipping commissioner can be discharged for much less than is claimed for that purpose. The amount fixed by the act is probably inadequate, but, so long as it is thus limited, due compliance should be made with the law.

The act requires the commissioner to rent, lease, or procure, at his own cost, suitable premises for the transaction of business. But he rented as commissioner, from an association of which he was president, an office for the annual rent of $5,500, which he pays out of the fees coming into his hands as commissioner, and not, as provided by law, out of his own salary. The rent paid by him as commissioner to the association of which he is president is not far from ten times the actually fair rental of such premises as are required, he paying $5,500, while rooms more conveniently located for the performance of the duties with which he is charged could be had from $500 to $700. At Philadelphia the rent paid for such an office was $350. The office for which the exorbitant rent of $5,500 is paid, for the use of the commissioner, is at a very inconvenient distance from the custom-house. Thus much vexation and loss have arisen, and in many instances the delay has been so great that the departure of vessels for a whole day has been postponed simply for the necessity that captains should visit the office and return to the custom-house. It is regarded as a defect in the act that there is no specific provision by which parties who are aggrieved can present their cases on points requiring a strict construction of the law. All cases at New York in which such construction was asked have been presented by the commissioner himself ex parte.

In San Francisco, Boston, Philadelphia, and other sea-ports the same violation as exists at New York of the provisions of the act, so far as regards the expenditure of the fees which are paid to the commissioners, has prevailed. In Philadelphia numerous complaints have also been made in other particulars, indicating the expediency of a change in the appointing power. Applications have been made for a total repeal of the act, as well as for amendments to it. It is deemed more desirable to remedy its defects than to destroy it.

The primary and essential reform most imperatively demanded in the law is that the power of appointing the shipping commissioners shall cease to be given to the United States courts which have jurisdiction in maritime cases, and, to take the most pleasant view of the matter, whose judges, having selected their appointees from confidence in them, cannot be regarded as impartial judicial authority in matters to which the appointees are parties. It is obviously inexpedient to blend the judicial and executive or appointing power. The office of the commissioner is created and held under the law of the United States. Under these circumstances, the proposed bill provides that the power of appointing the commissioners shall be vested in the Secretary of the Treasury of the United States, and that, under certain restrictions, he shall regulate the amounts of their salaries, their modes of conducting business, and the number and salaries of the clerks and other persons in their employ. More than enough has been brought before the Committee on Commerce to prove the abuses existing under the present irresponsible and arbitrary system. It is believed that if these fundamental changes and such other amendments as are herewith submitted are made, the law will be justly and efficiently administered, and become deservedly popular among those whom it chiefly intended to benefit.

I will endeavor to present separately and as briefly as possible the various reasons for the several amendments now proposed.

Section 4501: The change removing the appointing power from the several circuit courts to the Secretary of the Treasury is the main reform proposed in this amendment. It is contrary to sound public policy to blend together the creative and judicial functions. This may be regarded as an axiom in legislation. The interests of justice demand compliance with the rule. The courts, however desirous of being impartial, can scarcely be fair judges between strangers and those appointees whom they have selected either from friendship or from confidence in their character. In fact, the greater the confidence of the courts the less impartial are they likely to be. Experience in the various ports has amply confirmed this view, and the amendment is almost universally desired by the people who are most deeply interested in the success of the title. They deem it essential that this alteration should be made in order to insure them a due measure of justice. Under the present law some commissioners have discharged their duty with fidelity, but in other instances their conduct has been arbitrary and unjust to the sailors, and public interests and money have been sacrificed to personal gain. The law as it now is left them irresponsible and practically "laws unto themselves."

Section 4502: This amendment simply carries out the changes made in the preceding section by substituting the words "Secretary of the Treasury" for "circuit judge," &c.

Section 4503: As increased duties may by the act be devolved upon the collector, the amendment to this section provides that in certain cases he shall have an increase of salary in proportion to the increase of his work; and the law previously not having been sufficiently explicit, that all fees he collects under the provisions of this act shall be paid into the national Treasury.

Section 4504: It is sometimes difficult and a cause of serious delay and injury to ship-owners that the commissioners at some small places cannot be found. The amendment is intended to obviate the difficulty by enabling the master in necessary cases to act as commissioner.

Section 4505: It being necessary in the larger sea-ports that clerks should be employed to aid the commissioners in the performance of their duties, this amendment provides for doing so at the cost of the Government; and, while it gives the commissioner the power of appointing and removing such clerks, so as to insure their subordinate co-operation with him, it makes them also sworn salaried subordinates of the United States Treasury Department, and thus directly responsible to it for the faithful performance of their duties. The commissioner being paid by a salary and prohibited from keeping fees or applying them to any purpose except paying them into the Treasury, it is necessary to provide for payment of the clerks. The regulation of the number and salaries of the clerks is intrusted to the Department in view of the gross abuses that have arisen under the present law. In some instances too many clerks have been employed, and that, too, at extravagant salaries. It is found desirable that the law should explicitly prohibit all officers and clerks appointed under this title from taking any fee, and this is done by the amendment.

Section 4506: As the office of commissioner is strictly a salaried office, it is proper that he should be provided with an official seal at the public cost. The amendment is simply to this effect, except that, it being thought advisable to make instruments purporting to be the acts of commissioners and duly authenticated by them "prima facie" instead of "presumptive" evidence, a verbal change to that effect is introduced.

Section 4507: As the office of the commissioner is by the amendments clearly and positively a salaried office only, and the amount of the salary is in each case to be determined by the Secretary of the Treasury, it is obviously proper that the premises used by the commissioner should be furnished by the Department. As a matter of economy they should, wherever practicable, be part of the custom-house, thus causing no charge for rent. But, besides this, the custom-house is the most convenient place for the masters of vessels; and if no part of it can be used as the commissioner's office, then the neighborhood is the most desirable location. These are the objects of this amendment. Considerable delay, vexation, and loss have frequently arisen from the distance in some ports existing between the custom-house and the commissioner's office, and much well-founded complaint is made by owners and masters as to the loss of time and detention occasioned by going to and fro between the buildings.

Section 4511: This amendment proposes, in accordance with the interests of seamen, that the quality of the provisions supplied to them be as far as practicable settled by law, and therefore in this respect the standard of the United States Navy ration is adopted.

Section 4541: In this amendment the word "court" is simply and for obvious reasons substituted for "judge," in order to preserve conformity with previous amendments.

Section 4545: At present there is no limit to the time the United States courts may hold the money arising from the unclaimed wages and effects of deceased seamen. This amendment requires such money, if not claimed in six years and not necessary for satisfying claims, to be paid into the United States Treasury, and as a clearly proper guard against abuses, insists that accounts of all moneys arising from unclaimed wages and effects shall be rendered to the Secretary of the Treasury every year.

Section 4554: In order to permit plain proof subsequently brought forward as to the matters named in this section to be admitted as evidence in any court of justice, this amendment provides that awards made under this section by the commissioner as arbiter shall be prima facie and not conclusive evidence. The commissioner being a salaried officer, he is prohibited from taking fees as arbiter.

Section 4594: The amendment to this section is needful to carry out the main principle of the bill, the change in the appointing power, and provides that all salaries of officers appointed by the Secretary of the Treasury under this title shall be paid by the Secretary of the Treasury, and gives him authority to direct the manner in which the fees and other money shall be paid into the Treasury. It also prescribes such limits as on consideration have been deemed best for the salaries of the commissioners.

Table C: As the present fee of $2 a man on shipment has been proved by experience to be a needlessly burdensome tax on shipping, and to yield in some ports an amount of revenue larger than is necessarily required to carry out the purposes of the act, the fee payable on engaging each member of the crew is reduced to $1, and that for each discharge to thirty cents. It is urged that the present rates tempt to evasion of the act and non-payment of fees.

Table E: Reductions from wages being authorized under this table, in partial repayment of the fees required by table C on engagements and discharges, the amount in each case is reduced from twenty-five to fifteen cents.

These are all the amendments. They are in the main very simple, although it has taken some time both to read and to explain them. I feel that I am expressing the unanimous sentiment of the Committee on Commerce in saying that these amendments are certainly called for. The only objection that I have heard raised to this bill (except in the case of one or two charitable bodies in New York City, of one of which Mr. Duncan is president,) comes from those who hold places as commissioners. We have received from different sections of the country many petitions and letters of the most urgent character in favor of these changes in the law.

I wish to say for the Committee on Commerce and for myself that we have no other object in proposing these changes than to remove the imperfections of the existing law and render it more efficient. It is believed that some central power is essential to give effect to the law. It was but the other day that I was constrained to ask this House to pass a law in order that the commissioners may be checked in libeling vessels in direct conflict with the law. They have acted in entire disregard of any authority except themselves; and their conduct has been the means of making the law very odious and very unpopular. If the House should now pass this bill, the law may hereafter require further amendment before it shall be fully perfected. When the occasion for such amendments becomes manifest, they can be made. I now move the previous question.

Mr. SEELYE. Will the gentleman from New York [Mr. WARD] yield to me?

Mr. WARD. For how long?

Mr. SEELYE. For three minutes.

Mr. WARD. Certainly.

Mr. SEELYE. Mr. Speaker, this shipping act of 1872 is certainly one of the most humane, beneficent, and judicious acts for the benefit of American seamen that the American Congress ever passed. It originated in the minds of some wise and saintly ladies of San Francisco, who saw the inhumanity to which our seamen were subjected; and, after many months and perhaps years of discussion on our eastern coast, this act was matured, presented to Congress, and passed.

The results of the act so far as the seamen are concerned have been all that was contemplated. The seamen have been protected from a treatment the like of which for barbarity could hardly be found elsewhere. No complaint, so far as I know, emanates from the seamen respecting this act. The entire difficulty comes from the sailors' boarding-house-keepers, whose profit and "blood-money" are severely interfered with, and from certain ship-owners. All the sailors' boarding-house-keepers, so far as I understand, are opposed (very naturally) to the execution of the present law. Some of the ship-owners are opposed to it, and for similar reasons.

It is very probably true that there are certain infelicities in the operation of this act which might very properly be remedied. It is certainly true, however, that some of the infelicities to which the honorable gentleman from New York has referred do not properly belong to it. For instance, I hold in my hand a recent decision of Judge Blatchford, of New York, to whom one of these very questions respecting the salary of the shipping commissioner there was referred; and, with great deference to the statements to which we have just listened, the gentleman will permit me to say that Judge Blatchford holds that the commissioner is not obliged to pay the expenses of his office out of his allowance of $5,000.

Now, Mr. Speaker, a bill of such consequence as this, coming before us in a manner to me so entirely unexpected, and I suppose to the surprise of the House, demands far larger consideration than we are able now to give it. I know of one gentleman at least who has given very special attention to the subject, and is desirous to speak upon it, but who is now absent on duties referred to him by the House. In order that the bill may have the mature consideration which it requires, I move that it lie on the table.

Mr. WARD. Will the gentleman state who is the member he referred to as absent, and as desiring to discuss the bill?

Mr. SEELYE. The gentleman from Michigan, Mr. CONGER.

Mr. WARD. I have the pleasure to state that the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CONGER] has examined the matter and is entirely satisfied with what is here proposed. The gentleman from Maine [Mr HALE] also, who is absent, is in favor of it.

Mr. SEELYE. I have great respect for the gentleman who has presented the bill and for the Committee on Commerce who have directed it to be reported, but I have not had time to read it, and it is a bill of the very gravest significance, demanding the utmost care before it passes the House.

Mr. WARD. I will not ask the gentleman the source of his information, but I will say that it is very limited. We have had one petition alone containing the names of one thousand seamen. It was presented by the Speaker pro tempore, Mr. COX.

Mr. HEREFORD. I desire to say in reply to the gentleman from Massachusetts that so far as these amendments from the Committee on Commerce are concerned, they do not in any sense affect the great objects sought to be accomplished by the present law. The interests of the seamen are not at all affected by them. The great objects sought to be injured by this bill are very few and very simple. The gentleman has just read a decision by a judge in New York, saying in terms—for it was also sent to me—that this commissioner was not restrained from paying these clerks out of these fees. The law says:

> Any shipping commissioner may engage clerks to assist him in the transaction of the business of the shipping office at his own proper cost.

How, then, would it appear to any member on this floor if a judge in the face of that express language should decide to the contrary? There is the law, plain and unmistakable. Yet in the face of that, as the testimony before our committee showed, this very commissioner in the city of New York, Mr. Duncan, had in his employ six clerks, four of them his own sons, at a salary of $2,500 each, eleven agents and a deputy, whom he paid out of the fees that he received, while the law says that he shall pay for clerical assistance out of his own pocket. These are uncontradicted facts. He had six clerks, and four of them were his own sons, and he paid them a salary of $2,500 a year out of these fees, when the law says he shall engage clerks at his own proper cost.

Furthermore, the law says in section 4507 of the Revised Statutes:

> Every shipping commissioner shall lease, rent, or procure, at his own cost, suitable premises for the transaction of business.

At his own cost he shall do this. Yet as the testimony before our committee showed, and in fact the commissioner himself admitted it—he did not deny any of these facts; all the testimony comes from the commissioner himself—he rented an office in the city of New York for $5,500 a year, and paid it out of these fees which were to be paid into the Treasury. And when I asked him the question, "From what company did you rent that building?" he mentioned the name of the New York Seamen's Association; and when I asked him who is the president of that association, he said, "I (Duncan) am the president of it." In other words, he took from these fees which should be paid into the Treasury this sum of $5,500, and paid it to himself as president of this association.

Furthermore he stated—this is all from his own statement—that he has received since he had that office from $45,000 to $50,000 a year, and had never paid one dollar into the Treasury; he never has made or pretended to have made a report to the Government as to what he has done with these moneys. He never made any report; there is no pretense that he ever did so. But he placed the money in his own pocket, paying $10,000 a year to his own sons and $5,500 to himself, making a sum of $15,500 paid to himself and to his four sons out of the fees which ought to have been paid into the Treasury of the United States.

The main salient point in this bill is to rectify these enormities, these outrages, and to take away the appointment from the circuit judges, with whom the law now fixes it, and place it in the hands of the Secretary of the Treasury. I think it would seem to any fair-minded man that the law now is plain enough that the commissioner shall pay these clerks at his own proper cost, and that he shall rent this office at his own proper cost. And yet this commissioner has not done it. He has paid these charges out of these fees collected from those poor sailors whom the gentleman from Massachusetts so much desires to-day to defend. Instead of paying them into the Treasury, he has paid them into his own pocket and into the pockets of his sons. And under these circumstances we say that a judge who would decide, in the face of the express provisions of law which I have read to you, that the commissioner was to pay this rent and this clerk hire out of these fees, and not at his own proper cost, is not the proper person to have the appointing power. We propose, therefore, to take it from the circuit judges and give it to the Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. HURLBUT. I would ask the gentleman from West Virginia what action the committee propose to take in reference to Duncan?

Mr. HEREFORD. That is a matter we shall consider hereafter.

Mr. HURLBUT. I hope so.

Mr. HEREFORD. But that has nothing to do with this bill. We propose right here, in order to stop these outrageous dispositions of the public money and to place it in the public Treasury, to give the power of appointment to the Secretary of the Treasury. These are the main objects of the bill and the main changes which it makes in the existing law. The bill, so far as regards the protection of the sailors, does not change the law in one single material point.

Mr. SEELYE. I have no disposition to criticise the amendments that are proposed. I have not had time to examine them. Certainly the judgment of the gentlemen who have spoken and their colleagues on the committee is entitled to every respect; but this much should be said in reference to the remarks to which we have just listened, that while this commissioner has carried on the office at an expense of $55,000 a year, he has done the work which under the old system cost $250,000 a year.

This, too, also, is to be said, that the precise question which the chairman of the Committee on Commerce has just brought up is exactly a question which was decided by Judge Blatchford in New York the other day, a construction of the law which declared that the commissioner had acted in every respect as the law allowed him to act.

One other remark respecting the employment of his sons by this commissioner. It was necessary, when the commissioner undertook to root out the terrible enormities which had been practiced on our seamen, that he should have men whom he could trust about him. Here was a host of sharks and shysters ready to raid upon these seamen, and he took his sons from the business in which they were engaged and engaged at larger salaries and with far more prospects of success and placed them in this office, and he took them because they were men whom he could trust. Whether it was desirable or not, that at least should be said in extenuation.

Mr. WARD. Mr. Speaker, I am very much rejoiced that the commissioner in New York has had one advocate and that the gentleman from Massachusetts has sought to vindicate that gentleman, for thus far among those who appeared before the committee his action has been an admitted wrong and evil. In regard to the antecedents of the law we have nothing to do with them. I do not mean to discuss them. But we passed the law, and its provisions have again and again been disregarded by the commissioners. It is that which has brought the law into odium. I have here a petition signed by several hundred seamen in regard to it, and the question with the committee is whether to repeal the whole act or amend it. I am myself satisfied that it is a good act, and I should be very sorry to see it repealed. But at the same time there can be no doubt that it needs the amendments now proposed.

Mr. GOODE. Mr. Speaker, I hope that the motion made by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. SEELYE] will prevail. This is an important bill. It affects materially very important interests in this country. We have had no opportunity to examine it. These amendments have been proposed to-day by the gentleman from New York for the first time, and I have had no opportunity to look into them. But I will say for the information of the House that the gentleman from New York is entirely mistaken in one statement which he made here. He says that the universal experience at all the ports of the country is that the appointing power of the shipping commissioners ought to be taken from the circuit judges and vested in the Secretary of the Treasury. Now I have to say that my information is entirely different from that of the other gentlemen on that subject. At the port of Norfolk we have a commissioner appointed by the judge of the circuit court on the recommendation of the leading merchants of the place, who up to this time has given entire satisfaction to all parties concerned.

Here is a radical change; it is proposed to take the power of appointment from the judge of the circuit court and give it to the Secretary of the Treasury; and it is fair to presume that a change would be made in the incumbent of that office. I desire to say therefore that this would be legislation entirely unacceptable to the people I represent. I would like an opportunity to look into the various amendments. The matter has been suddenly sprung upon the House, and I hope that the motion of the gentleman from Massachusetts will prevail.

Mr. HEREFORD. The bill has been pending for three months.

Mr. GOODE. But not the amendments offered by the gentleman from New York.

Mr. RANDALL. I hope the bill will not be postponed. I know that some of the people that I represent have been complaining in consequence of the present enforcement of the law. More than three months ago they applied to have the correction made, and what we most complain of is the charges. The fees are exorbitant. We think that fifty cents would be adequate, where they now have to pay $2.

The proposition to take the appointing power out of the hands of the judiciary is a proper one. It does not belong to judicial functions. I am glad to say here that this is a bill upon which we can all unite, for there is no political question connected in it. The American Steamship Company have had to pay nearly $20,000 to the commissioner in Philadelphia, and they applied to me and petitioned the House four months ago for relief, and they have been detained from time to time until during that period they have been made to pay these excessive charges.

So far as the sailors are concerned they are not interfered with by this bill. I hear no complaint from my district from that class, although from that district an enormous number of sailors are shipped. Formerly there were many impositions upon them; but that whole system of imposition on sailors has been broken up, and great benefit has accrued to them; and I feel confident that great benefit will accrue to all parties concerned in this matter by the passage of this bill.

Mr. DUNNELL. Mr. Speaker, I wish to occupy but a single moment of the time of the House. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. SEELYE] and the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. GOODE] have said that this bill has been sprung upon the House, and that they ought to have time to examine into it and investigate it. If that course were pursued with all the bills that come before the House for action, we should make very slow progress in legislation. This bill was reported, I might say, months ago, certainly many weeks ago, and was made a special order. Everybody has had presumptive notice for at least five or six weeks that this bill would come up at some time for discussion and action.

I do not wish to enter into a discussion of the details of the bill. I will simply say, as a member of the Committee on Commerce, that this bill has had a very careful examination. We had three or four hearings upon the bill; it was carefully examined in all its parts, discussed, and debated; and, if my recollection is correct, it is the unanimous expression of the Committee on Commerce. Certainly I can see no good reason why we should postpone action on the bill when the chief points of the bill have already been brought out in this discussion.

There is a change in the appointment of these commissioners, and certainly the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. GOODE] ought to admit that in point of fact the Secretary of the Treasury is the proper officer to appoint these commissioners. There is a fitness in vesting the appointing power in him, and not in the circuit judges. We all have confidence that if the Secretary finds in office to-day any good commissioner that man will be safe in his place.

I have had letters from some of these ship-commissioners very strongly in favor of the present system of appointment. Why? Simply because they desire to hold over; there is no doubt about that. We have carefully prepared this bill, and I trust we shall act on it and act now.

Mr. COX. I desire to say one word upon this bill. I introduced some three years or more ago a bill similar to this, and it had a great deal of consideration from committees and members of this House. This is not a new measure; it is desired by the shipping interest; it is desired by the sailors. Although many of the sailors may perhaps have been abused by the boarding-house people and others in the large commercial cities, yet I presented here a petition signed by thousands of sailors to get rid of this unpleasant sort of intermeddling which these commissioners, for purposes which have been explained, have always been guilty of as between the employer and employed.

One would think at the first blush that when a man wants to make a bargain with a sailor to sail on his ship he might have that right without any meddling interference on the part of others. But our Government, in order to protect this peculiar class of people, the sailors, have created these commissioners and given them a particular duty to perform. I say to this House that the commissioners who have been appointed by the judges in New York have not done their duty under the law, either with respect to placing the money in the Treasury or otherwise.

I do not propose to go into this matter any further. All I wish to say is that the general shipping interest of New York desires that this appointing power shall be given to the Secretary of the Treasury, and then we will see that there will be reform in this matter and fair treatment to both employers and employed.

Mr. GOODE. I would like to inquire of the gentleman [Mr. WARD] if any complaint on this subject has come from any quarter of the country except New York?

Mr. RANDALL. Yes; from Philadelphia.

Mr. WARD. It has come from several sections of the country.

Mr. SEELYE. The reasons for keeping this appointing power in the hands of the circuit judges are, in the first place, that they are near the theater of operations and can see that the duties are faithfully performed, and, in the second place, the appointments will be removed from the ordinary line of political trickery.

Mr. HEREFORD. I desire to ask the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. SEELYE] one question.

Mr. SEELYE. Certainly.

Mr. HEREFORD. I would ask the gentleman whether he believes it proper that a person should have the appointing power of another to an office when it will become his duty to pass upon the legality of the acts of that very appointee? In this very case Judge Blatchford had to pass upon the legality of the acts of his own appointee. I ask the gentleman from Massachusetts if he does not think it is a great deal better that the appointment should be made by one who is not called on to pass upon the acts of the present appointee?

Mr. SEELYE. I am quite willing to leave the appointing power where it now is, even with this supposed difficulty, to which I attach very little significance.

Mr. WARD. I now call the previous question on the bill as amended.

Mr. O'NEILL. I ask the gentleman from New York [Mr. WARD] to yield to me to offer an amendment to make the fee for engaging a crew fifty cents each and for discharging twenty-five cents each, and also to offer some other amendments.

Mr. RANDALL. O no; let us vote on the bill.

Mr. WARD. I cannot yield for an amendment.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered; and under the operation thereof the bill, as amended, was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. WARD moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

JAMES CALER.

The SPEAKER pro tempore, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting the papers in the case of James Caler, and a report thereon by the Engineer Department; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted Mr. McDILL till next Monday on account of important business; to Mr. DOBBINS for four days on account of important business; to Mr. TURNEY for four days; and to Mr. BANKS for one week.

STEAMSHIP SERVICE BETWEEN UNITED STATES AND BRAZIL.

Mr. ELLIS, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3630) to authorize the establishment of ocean mail-steamship service between the United States and the Empire of Brazil; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads, and ordered to be printed.

PUBLIC GROUNDS IN CHICAGO.

Mr. HARRISON, by unanimous consent, reported from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, as a substitute for House bill No. 2850, a bill (H. R. No. 3631) to confirm to the city of Chicago, Illinois, the title to certain public lands; which was read a first and second time, recommitted, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

Mr. HARRISON. I enter a motion to reconsider the vote by which this bill has been recommitted.

CURRENCY.

Mr. TOWNSEND, of Pennsylvania, by unanimous consent, reported from the Committee on Banking and Currency, as a substitute for House bill No. 3532, a bill (H. R. No. 3632) amendatory of the act entitled "An act fixing the amount of United States notes, providing for a redistribution of national-bank currency, and for other purposes," approved June 20, 1874; which was read a first and second time, recommitted, and ordered to be printed.

MILITARY WAGON-ROAD IN TERRITORIES.

Mr. JOHN REILLY, by unanimous consent, from the Committee on Military Affairs, reported back, with a recommendation that it pass, the bill (H. R. No. 180) for the location and construction of a military wagon-road from Green River City, Wyoming Territory, to the Yellowstone National Park and to Fort Ellis, Montana Territory; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

ADVERSE REPORTS.

Mr. JOHN REILLY also, from the same committee, reported back adversely the bill (H. R. No. 480) for the relief of Patrick J. O'Rourke; which was laid on the table, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

He also, by unanimous consent, from the same committee, reported back adversely the bill (H. R. No. 1769) for the relief of George A. Miller; which was laid on the table, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

He also, from the same committee, reported back adversely the bill (H. R. No. 2369) for the relief of John McCormick, late first lieutenant of volunteers, United States Army; which was laid on the table, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

AMENDMENT OF REVISED STATUTES.

Mr. PARSONS, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3633) to amend chapter 5 of title 15 of the Revised Statutes; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

CHANGES OF REFERENCE.

Mr. EDEN, by unanimous consent, moved that the Committee on War Claims be discharged from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 3538) for the relief of Joseph Hartman, and moved that the same be referred to the Committee of Claims.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. EDEN also, by unanimous consent, moved that the Committee on War Claims be discharged from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 3539) granting a pension to Margaret Cahill, widow of James Cahill, of United States Cavalry, and moved that the same be referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. EDEN also, by unanimous consent, moved that the Committee on War Claims be discharged from the further consideration of the petition of John C. Hawley, and that the same be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. SINGLETON, by unanimous consent, moved that the Committee on Appropriations be discharged from the further consideration of the memorial of H. B. Rolfe, relating to an appropriation for the extradition of William Johnson, and that the same be referred to the Committee of Accounts.

The motion was agreed to.

COMMITTEE ON EXPENDITURES ON PUBLIC BUILDINGS.

Mr. METCALFE, by unanimous consent, submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Rules:

Resolved, That the Committee on Expenditures on the Public Buildings be increased by the addition of two members, to be appointed by the Speaker.

GEORGE A. ARMES.

Mr. GLOVER, by unanimous consent, from the Committee on Military Affairs, reported, as a substitute for House bill No. 906, a bill (H. R. No. 3634) to authorize the restoration of George A. Armes to the rank of captain; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

RECONSIDERATION OF REFERENCES.

Mr. RANDALL. I move to reconsider the votes by which these various bills, &c., have been referred and recommitted; and also move that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

OLD DOMINION STEAMSHIP COMPANY.

Mr. DUNNELL, by unanimous consent, from the Committee on Commerce, reported back, with a favorable recommendation, the bill (H. R. No. 3198) for the relief of the Old Dominion Steamship Company; and it was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

CLAIM OF WILLIAM WEBSTER IN NEW ZEALAND.

Mr. THOMPSON, by unanimous consent, submitted the following resolution; which was read, considered, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary of State be directed, if not inconsistent with the interests of the public service, to furnish the House copies of the correspondence between the State Department and the government of Great Britain in relation to the sequestration of the lands and property in New Zealand claimed by William Webster, an American citizen, by purchase of the native chiefs of that country before its cession to and occupation by the British government.

Mr. MacDOUGALL. I move that the House adjourn, but yield for a moment to the gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. BAKER.]

Mr. BAKER, of Indiana. I ask unanimous consent to offer a resolution of inquiry asking information from the Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. HOLMAN. I call for the regular order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The regular order is the motion to adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and accordingly (at five o'clock and fifteen minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

PETITIONS, ETC.

The following memorials, petitions, and other papers were presented at the Clerk's desk under the rule, and referred as stated:

By Mr. BURCHARD, of Illinois: The petition of citizens of Washington City, to have refunded to them taxes paid for the construction of a pavement on I street, Washington City, they having twice paid for said work, to the Committee for the District of Columbia.

By Mr. DOUGLAS: The petition of J. D. Gressit, for compensation for property destroyed by United States troops in 1863, to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. ELLIS: The petition of A. L. H. Crenshaw, for compensation for property taken by the United States authorities, to the same committee.

By Mr. FINLEY: The petition of John Van Riswick and others, for the improvement of the channel of the Potomac, to the Committee on Commerce.

By Mr. PIPER: The petition of Calhoun Benham, for compensation for professional services rendered relative to the marine hospital at San Francisco, California, to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. SAVAGE: Papers relating to the case of T. Worthington, to the Committee on Expenditures in the Treasury Department.

By Mr. WALKER, of New York: The petition of Arcalous Wyckoff, for an extension of a patent for an improved boring-machine, to the Committee on Patents.

By Mr. WALLACE, of Pennsylvania: Petitions for the acknowledgment of God and Christianity in the Constitution of the United States, signed by 4,202 citizens of Pennsylvania, to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. WALLACE, of South Carolina: The petition of J. L. Young, for compensation for carrying the mail over the Union and Spartanburgh Railroad, South Carolina, in 1860 and 1861, to the Committee of Claims.

IN SENATE.

FRIDAY, June 2, 1876.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. BYRON SUNDERLAND, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. CONKLING presented the petition of Arcalous Wyckoff, of Elmira, New York, praying for the passage of a law authorizing the Commissioner of Patents to hear and determine his application for an extension of his letters-patent for an improved boring-machine; which was referred to the Committee on Patents.

Mr. ROBERTSON presented two memorials of citizens of South Carolina, remonstrating against the ratification of that portion of the treaty with the Hawaiian government admitting the importation of rice into the United States free of duty; which were referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

WILLIAM H. NESSLE.

Mr. SHERMAN. Upon the recommendation of the Committee on Claims, the bill (H. R. No. 37) for the relief of William H. Nessle was indefinitely postponed the other day. I have papers relating to the claim which I will furnish to the committee. These additional papers cover the point of objection made by the committee, I am told. I move that the action of the Senate indefinitely postponing the bill be reconsidered, and that it be recommitted to the Committee on Claims with the additional papers.

The motion was agreed to.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. WRIGHT, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the petition of Michael Mayers, of Sebastian, Arkansas, praying compensation for drugs and medicines furnished the Army of the United States during the late war, submitted an adverse report thereon; which was agreed to, and ordered to be printed.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the petition of John S. Logan and W. L. Shadwick, of Missouri, asking for the payment of the sum of $1,000 advanced by the Western Bank of Missouri for the use and benefit of United States troops under the command of Colonel John Edwards in 1861, of which claim they show that they are the owners, submitted a report thereon, accompanied by a bill (S. No. 890) for the relief of John S. Logan and W. L. Shadwick.

The bill was read and passed to the second reading, and the report was ordered to be printed.

FOURTH UNITED STATES JUDICIAL CIRCUIT.

Mr. THURMAN. The Committee on the Judiciary, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 769) to alter and appoint the times for holding the circuit court of the United States for the fourth judicial circuit, and for other purposes, have instructed me to report it back with two amendments, and to ask for its immediate consideration, there being reasons stated in the letter of the judge of that circuit to us to show the necessity for passing this bill immediately. Indeed it should have been acted on before this. It can occupy no time. All the Senators from the States composing that circuit are in favor of the bill and all the judges within the circuit. I ask that it may be put upon its passage.

By unanimous consent, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It provides that a term of the circuit court for the district of South Carolina shall be held at Charleston on the first Monday in April, and in Columbia on the first Monday in November in each year; and, so far as the circuit court is concerned, the State of South Carolina shall constitute but one district.

A term of the circuit court for the eastern district of North Carolina shall be held at Raleigh on the third Monday in April and November in each year.

A term of the circuit court for the western district of North Carolina shall be held at Greensborough on the first Monday of May and the second Monday of December in each year.

A term of the circuit court for the eastern district of Virginia shall be held at Richmond on the last Monday in May and the first Monday in January in each year.

A term of the circuit court for the western district of Virginia shall be held at Lynchburgh on the third Monday in January in each year, and at such places and times as the district court is now required to be held in that district.

A term of the circuit court for the district of West Virginia shall be held at Parkersburgh on the first Monday in February in each year.

A term of the circuit court for the district of Maryland shall be held at Baltimore on the first Monday in June and the first Monday in October in each year.

All cases now pending in the circuit courts for these districts shall stand for trial at the term next ensuing after the passage of the act.

The first amendment of the Committee on the Judiciary was to insert after the enacting clause the following:

That instead of the regular terms now provided for by law the circuit court of the United States for the fourth judicial circuit shall be held as follows.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to insert at the end of the sixth section the following:

But the term of the circuit court for said district to be held at Parkersburgh on the first Monday of August, 1876, shall be held at that time.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. PATTERSON asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 891) for the relief of Robert Small; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN (by request) asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 892) to encourage and promote telegraphic communication between America and Asia; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, and ordered to be printed.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

On motion of Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin, it was Ordered, That W. H. Dempsey have leave to withdraw his petition and papers from the files of the Senate.

PUBLICATION OF DISTRICT TAX-LIST.

Mr. EATON submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the commissioners of the District of Columbia be, and they are hereby, directed to furnish the Senate with a copy of the contract entered into with the National Republican newspaper for the publication of the list of delinquent tax-payers for the present year and inform the Senate whether the collector of taxes of said District has charged delinquent tax-payers for the publication of such list in excess of the price paid said newspaper; and, if so, by what authority the same has been done.

AMENDMENTS TO APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. CHRISTIANCY and Mr. HOWE submitted amendments intended to be proposed by them to the bill (H. R. No. 2571) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1877, and for other purposes; which were referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

E. D. FRANZ.

Mr. WRIGHT. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 339) for the relief of E. D. Franz. I will state that if the Senate will consider this bill I shall move to take up the next bill on the Calendar also, as they both stand upon precisely the same facts. There is no trouble about either of them; they take no money out of the Treasury, but only provide for the issuing of a warrant in place of one that has been lost.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It authorizes the Secretary of the Treasury to pay to E. D. Franz $2,019.82, in lieu of check numbered 2510, drawn on the United States assistant treasurer at San Francisco, California, payable to the order of one Daniel Hazard, and indorsed by Hazard to L. & H. Huning, and by L. & H. Huning to E. D. Franz, the check being signed by J. J. Dana, major and quartermaster United States Army, which check, it is claimed, was lost on being sent by L. & H. Huning to E. D. Franz, and was never received by him. But before the payment thus authorized Franz shall execute a bond of indemnity to the United States, with sufficient sureties, against the claim of the payee in the draft, or the claim of any person in possession of or claiming the same, and also to fully indemnify the United States against all loss and damages in the premises.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Claims with an amendment, to insert after the word "authorized," in line 15, the words:

The Secretary of the Treasury shall be satisfied that said check has not been paid, and further that.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

LOUIS ROSENBAUM.

Mr. WRIGHT. I now move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 341) for the relief of Louis Rosenbaum.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It authorizes the Secretary of the Treasury to pay to Louis Rosenbaum $1,424.37, in lieu of check numbered A 27018, on the assistant treasurer of the United States at New York, dated the 5th of January, 1874, payable to the order of Rosenbaum, and signed by M. P. Small, brevet brigadier-general and commissary of subsistence; which check, it is claimed, has been lost, and was never received by Rosenbaum. But before the payment thus authorized, Rosenbaum shall execute a bond of indemnity to the United States, with sufficient sureties, against the claim of the payee in the draft, or the claim of any person or persons in possession of or claiming the same, and also to fully indemnify the United States against all loss and damages in the premises.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Claims with an amendment, in line 14 after the word "authorized" to insert:

The Secretary of the Treasury shall be satisfied that said check has not been paid, and further that.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

NEVILLE ISLAND CAUSEWAY.

Mr. BAYARD. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill No. 1400.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. No. 1400) authorizing the residents and property-owners of Neville Township, county of Allegheny, and State of Pennsylvania, to close the channel of the Ohio River on the south side of Neville Island by the construction of an embankment or causeway from the head of said island to the southern shore of said river. It provides that the Government of the United States shall not be liable for any expenses incurred in the performance of the work or by reason thereof.

Mr. SHERMAN. Where is this?

Mr. BAYARD. This is a small island in the river Ohio upon the border of the county of Allegheny, in the State of Pennsylvania. The owners of the island are residents of the State of Pennsylvania, and are separated from their county and State by a branch of the river that runs between the mainland and the island. Upon their petition that they might be allowed to have access to the mainland of their State and county by means of a causeway thrown across this branch, the matter was referred to the Chief of Engineers, General Humphreys. He in turn committed it to Colonel Merrill, the engineer in charge, who has reported that this work will be no disadvantage whatever to travel upon the Ohio River, but will be an enormous convenience to the parties owning this small island. It is a small branch of the river, and this causeway will not in any way affect the navigation of the Ohio.

Mr. SHERMAN. I have no objection to the bill if it does not interfere with the navigation of the river.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CLAIMS OF SOUTHERN RAILROADS.

Mr. GORDON. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. No. 177) to authorize the Secretary of War to adjust and settle claims of the State of Georgia against the Government on account of the Western and Atlantic Railroad.

Mr. INGALLS. Before the Senate proceeds to the consideration of the bill I would ask the Senator from Georgia if this is the bill upon which the Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS] requested information from the Secretary of War; and if so, whether that information has been received and laid before the Senate?

Mr. GORDON. Yes, sir; and the report has been here for nearly a month, I think.

Mr. INGALLS. Has it been printed?

Mr. GORDON. It has been in print since the 4th of May.

Mr. SHERMAN rose.

Mr. GORDON. If the Senator from Ohio will allow me one moment; it will be remembered that I gave way time and again to allow abundant time for this information, and I trust that now the bill will receive consideration.

Mr. SHERMAN. I was about to submit to the Senator from Georgia whether it would not be right to wait until the Senator from Vermont returns? It was announced that he would be absent two or three days. I am informed that he is in New York. Perhaps the time has already expired when his return was expected. I have no knowledge of the contents of the bill; but I think as the Senator from Vermont gave it attention we ought at least to wait until he returns.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. SHERMAN. I object until the Senator from Vermont returns.

Mr. GORDON. I will only say that while I think some consideration is due me in the matter, I also recognize the position taken by the Senator from Ohio, and I am perfectly willing that the bill should lie over, provided it can be understood by the Senate that at the very earliest moment I shall have it considered. I do not want to press the bill in the absence of the Senator from Vermont; but I can see no good reason, I must confess, for delay, as the whole information is here and everything connected with the bill, both the report of the Secretary of War and the report of the Quartermaster-General.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Georgia defers his motion to proceed to the consideration of the bill.

PORT OF APPRAISAL AT SAINT PAUL, MINNESOTA.

Mr. McMILLAN. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. No. 413) establishing the port of Saint Paul, Minnesota, as a port of appraisal.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to the consideration of the bill. It provides that the provisions contained in, and the privileges accorded by, sections 2990, 2991, 2992, 2993, 2994, 2995, 2996, and 2997 of the Revised Statutes shall be extended to, and held to include, the port of Saint Paul in the collection district of Minnesota; and that the appraiser at the port of Saint Paul shall receive the same amount of salary that the deputy collector of that port now receives.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LIEUTENANT JAMES B. SINCLAIR.

Mr. CLAYTON. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 1071) for the relief of Lieutenant James B. Sinclair, United States Army.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. By it the President is directed to restore James B. Sinclair, first lieutenant United States Army, retired, to the rank of captain of infantry, as held by him December 31, 1870, and to place his name upon the retired-list of the Army as of the rank he held at that date.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with an amendment in line 4, to strike out the word "directed" and insert the word "authorized."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

JOHN T. KING AND L. B. CUTLER.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. I move to take up the bill (S. No. 872) for the relief of the family of the late John T. King and of L. B. Cutler.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill was read the second time and considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The preamble recites that John T. King, lately employed as a carpenter and cabinet-maker about the Capitol, while in the discharge of his duties, was killed by an explosion of gas in the closet under the eastern stairway of the Senate, leaving a wife, three children, two grandchildren, and a mother-in-law without any means of support; and that L. B. Cutler, principal assistant in the folding-room of the Senate, was so injured, at the same time and under the same circumstances, as to be disabled for life, having a wife without means of support, and a mother to whose support he has partly contributed. The bill therefore appropriates the sum of $3,000 for the aid and support of the family of the late John T. King, and the further sum of $3,000 for the aid and support of L. B. Cutler, to be paid to the Secretary of the Interior in trust for the above-mentioned purposes, who may, at his discretion, pay the same to the respective parties in annual installments, or all in one payment, or invest the same for their benefit, as he may think most expedient. And a further sum equal to the amount of the previous regular compensation of King and Cutler from the 19th of May to the 30th of June, inclusive, is appropriated, to be expended immediately by the Secretary of the Interior in the manner before stated.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. Mr. King was about fifty years of age, and a carpenter and cabinet-maker of the first class. He has left a family of four children, three of whom were dependent upon him for support, and two grandchildren and a mother-in-law, seven in all. The other party, chief assistant in the folding-room, is L. B. Cutler, who is about forty years of age, with a wife and no children, but a mother who has partly been dependent upon him. He is very much disabled; I understand will be so for life; that is, his hands will be bent up so that it will be impossible for him to perform manual labor of any sort.

Under the circumstances the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, by which the resolution directing them to consider and report, by bill or otherwise, upon this subject has been considered, concluded, as there were so many dependent parties interested, that it would be better to appropriate a specific sum and leave it in trust in the hands of some proper person to be distributed, either in purchasing a home, or paid out for the use and benefit of the family in annual installments as it might seem best, or that it might be invested in United States funds, so as to allow them to have an annual installment for their use and benefit, as the Secretary of the Interior should deem proper.

While I am up I desire to say that the accident was not perhaps the fault of these men who were engaged at the time in this closet, and certainly was not the fault of the engineer in charge of the Senate gas-fixtures. It is supposed to have been caused by some person who left the room with the burner partly open, which permitted the upper portion of the closet to be filled with gas, and when the proper explosive mixture had been made of the gas and air, upon lighting the gas it exploded. That it arose from this cause is quite evident because there has been no leakage there of the gas-pipes since, and all that has been done has been to take off the bracket. It is supposed that some party using the closet the day before or early that morning, in turning off the gas turned it too far or left it burning, and the closing of the door extinguished the flame, and afterward there was an escape of gas, so that when the burner came to be lighted again it caused the explosion.

I think under the circumstances, considering that these men left their families entirely destitute, there will be no hesitation on the part of the Senate to make this appropriation.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. I move that the words "use and" be inserted in the eleventh line before "benefit;" so as to read "for their use and benefit."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed unanimously.

JUDSON S. POST.

Mr. COCKRELL. I ask for the present consideration of Senate bill No. 770, for the relief of Judson S. Post, of Missouri, which was reported favorably from the Committee on Claims, and is for a very just claim.

There being no objection, the bill (S. No. 770) for the relief of Judson S. Post, of Missouri, late disbursing officer of the United States Navy, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It is a direction to the Secretary of the Treasury to refund to Judson S. Post, late a disbursing officer of the United States Navy, $202.59, being the amount of interest on a principal amounting to $450.24, and which latter amount was a portion of $784.14, claimed to have been due from him to the United States, and paid by him upon the final settlement of his accounts as a disbursing officer of the United States Navy; and upon which sum of $450.24 he also paid interest to the United States, amounting to $202.59.

The committee proposed to amend the bill in line 21 by striking out the word "be" and inserting "he."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SHERMAN. I call for the reading of the report.

Mr. COCKRELL. I can state in a moment all there is in the report. Judson S. Post was a paymaster; and after he resigned and left the service, a claim was presented against him by the Treasury Department. Suits were threatened, and he paid the amount claimed with interest, not having his accounts to refer to. When he got his accounts, he went to the Treasury Department, made a settlement, and they found that he had already paid that amount which they had claimed. They paid him back the principal which he had paid, but the interest which he had paid on that was covered into the Treasury, and it takes an act of Congress to get it out. There is a letter of the Secretary of the Treasury which explains the matter fully.

Mr. SHERMAN. When a man pays over money voluntarily under the threat of a lawsuit, he ought not under the common principles of law to be paid at all, because the presumption of the law is that he would not pay unless it was due; and the threat of a lawsuit is not a legal compulsion. That is not either the act of God or of a public enemy that would justify him in paying over money illegally; and certainly we ought not to pay interest on that interest.

Mr. COCKRELL. He is not asking for interest on interest; he is only asking for the interest which he paid on what the Government claimed, and which he did not owe; he paid interest to the Government, and asks it back.

Mr. SHERMAN. I should like to hear the report of the committee; it seems to me we are setting a dangerous example.

The Chief Clerk read the following report, submitted by Mr. CAPERTON from the Committee on Claims on the 26th of April last:

The Committee on Claims, to whom was referred, with accompanying papers, the bill (S. No. 770) for the relief of Judson S. Post, late disbursing officer of the United States Navy, having had the same under consideration, submit the following report:

It appears from the papers in the case that on the final settlement of the accounts of claimant, as disbursing officer of the United States Navy, he was charged with, and compelled to pay, the sum of $784.14 as principal and $52.84 as interest on the same from the 8th of April, 1868, at the rate of 6 per cent. per annum.

On subsequent investigation it was found by the Department that of this principal sum of $784.14, $450.24 had been wrongfully charged against claimant, and that amount was refunded to him; but his application for repayment of the interest already paid into the Treasury by claimant, amounting to $202.59, was rejected, for the reason that said interest had been covered into the Treasury, and could not be refunded except by special act of Congress.

It would seem that under this state of facts claimant is clearly entitled to have this interest refunded to him, and the committee therefore recommend the passage of this bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

WILBUR F. M'DANIELS.

Mr. SHERMAN. I offer the following resolution, which I think will meet the general acceptance of the Senate:

Resolved, That there be paid out of the contingent fund to Wilbur F. McDaniels, a page of the Senate, seriously hurt while in the employ of the Senate, the amount of his pay during the residue of this session.

The resolution was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to unanimously.

ADJUSTMENT OF ACCOUNTS.

Mr. BOUTWELL. I move to proceed to consider Senate bill No. 825.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill (S. No. 825) to provide for the more speedy adjustment of the accounts of the Treasurer of the United States was read the second time, and considered as in Committee of the Whole. It directs the proper accounting officers of the Treasury, upon the recommendation of the Secretary of the Treasury, to cause such settlements to be made as may be necessary from time to time for the proper and speedy adjustment of the accounts of the Treasurer of the United States and of United States disbursing officers, agents, and clerks, crediting any of these parties from the appropriation for "losses by default," which is hereby created, with the amount or amounts of any deficiency which may have arisen in their respective accounts from the failure of any assistant treasurer, designated or national-bank depositary of the United States to pay over, as required by law, the amount of public moneys deposited therewith for safe-keeping and disbursement, and charging such amount or amounts to the defaulting assistant treasurer, designated or national-bank depositary on account of the appropriation. All payments made by such defaulting parties, and all sums recovered from them or their sureties on this account, are to be paid into the Treasury and carried by warrant to the respective credits of the parties defaulting and to the credit of the appropriation hereby created.

Mr. BOUTWELL. I move to amend in the tenth line by inserting the word "postmasters" after "disbursing officers."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

F. M. BLOUNT.

Mr. LOGAN. I move to take up House bill No. 915.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill (H. R. No. 915) for the relief of F. M. Blount, of Chicago, Illinois, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It provides for the payment to F. M. Blount, a clerk in the office of the assistant treasurer of the United States at Chicago, Illinois, of $500, to re-imburse him for a like sum paid by him into the Treasury of the United States out of his own private means, and so paid by him to make good a loss to the Treasury caused by his having taken, in the discharge of his duties as such clerk, a counterfeit $500 United States Treasury note.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

NOTARIES PUBLIC.

Mr. CONKLING. I ask the Senate to consider House bill No. 1803 in reference to notaries public.

There being no objection, the bill (H. R. No. 1803) to provide for the appointment of commissioners for taking affidavits, and so forth, for the courts of the United States, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The Committee on the Judiciary proposed to amend the bill by striking out all after the enacting clause and in lieu thereof inserting:

That notaries public of the several States, Territories, and the District of Columbia be, and they are hereby, authorized to take depositions and do all other acts in relation to taking testimony to be used in the courts of the United States, take acknowledgments and affidavits, in the same manner and with the same effect as commissioners of the United States circuit court may now lawfully take or do.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. CONKLING, the title was amended so as to read: A bill to authorize notaries public to take affidavits and the like in the courts of the United States.

SWAMP AND OVERFLOWED LANDS IN FLORIDA.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. I move for the consideration of Senate bill No. 49.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill (S. No. 49) to confirm to the State of Florida the swamp and overflowed lands granted under the act of September 28, 1850, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The Committee on Public Lands reported the bill, with an amendment to strike out the second and third sections, as follows:

SEC. 2. That all lands in the State of Florida which have been returned as impracticable to survey by reason of being swamp or overflowed shall be certified to said State as swamp and overflowed lands by the Commissioner of the General Land Office: Provided, however, That said Commissioner may require the governor of said State to furnish additional evidence with respect to the character of said lands before certifying the same as aforesaid.

SEC. 3. That in such townships in the State of Florida as are notoriously swamp or overflowed, or where satisfactory evidence shall be furnished to the Commissioner of the General Land Office that such townships are entirely swamp and overflowed, it shall not be necessary to subdivide such townships, but to run only the exterior lines; and where large quantities of land are notoriously swamp or overflowed, or are shown to be such by satisfactory evidence as aforesaid, the Commissioner may direct the surveyor-general to make segregation surveys thereof, running only the exterior lines, upon application to the surveyor-general by the governor of said State. And when surveys are made as herein authorized, the surveyor-general shall report the same, with maps thereof, to the General Land Office, representing and describing what land was swamp and overflowed according to the best evidence he can obtain. And it shall be the duty of the Commissioner of the General Land Office to certify over to the State of Florida, as swamp and overflowed, all the lands represented as such upon the maps or in the returns of the surveyor-general, or which shall be determined to be such upon the testimony taken before the surveyor-general, the decision of the surveyor-general thereon to be subject to the approval of the Commissioner of the General Land Office.

So as to leave the first section as follows:

That the Commissioner of the General Land Office is hereby authorized and required to receive and examine the selections of swamp lands in the State of Florida heretofore presented to the surveyor-general of said State, and allow or disallow said selections, according to the provisions of the act of Congress approved September 28, 1850, entitled "An act to enable the State of Arkansas and other States to reclaim the swamp lands within their limits," without prejudice to legal entries or the rights of bona fide settlers under the homestead laws of the United States prior to the date of this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WRIGHT. I should like to ask the Senator from Florida what is the necessity for this special legislation? Why did not the State obtain these lands under prior legislation? Was it because of any fault on the part of the State officers or because of fault on the part of the officers here? What is the occasion of the passage of this bill?

Mr. JONES, of Florida. I regret that the Senator from Indiana [Mr. McDONALD] who reported this bill is not now in his seat, but I think I can give the Senator the information desired.

Owing to the action of the Interior Department this bill is deemed necessary. Under the act of 1850 the State of Florida became entitled to the swamp and overflowed lands in that State. It was made the duty of the Secretary of the Interior to certify those lands to the State. In 1860 an act was passed limiting the period for making the selections to two years or the following Legislature in each State after the passage of the act. In the mean time the war broke out; there was no Legislature. The selections had all been made, but the Secretary of the Interior would not receive them because this limitation had expired. The matter was investigated by the Committee on Public Lands and this bill reported.

I think the decision of the Supreme Court in the case of the Railroad Company vs. Smith covers the point; but the Land Office has taken a different view of it, and has refused to accept these lands unless an act of this kind be passed.

Mr. WRIGHT. May I inquire of the Senator whether this matter has been referred to the Land Department, and whether there is any communication from the Commissioner of the General Land Office on the subject approving the proposed legislation?

Mr. JONES, of Florida. I see that the Senator who reported the bill is not now in his seat, and I do not know what communication he may have had with that Department; but I know that that Department has persistently refused to certify those lands in accordance with the law of 1850 and the decision of the Supreme Court in the case of the Railroad Company vs. Smith, in which they held that the title to the lands vested in the State by the act and could not be divested or lost by any omission or act of the Secretary of the Interior. It is merely to make the Secretary of the Interior accept those lists that this bill is asked to be passed.

Mr. WRIGHT. In view of the importance of this measure, and as the Senator from Indiana is not present, I should like to make some inquiry into the question as to what action has been taken by the Department. Will the Senator have any objection to let the bill be passed over for the present?

Mr. JONES, of Florida. Certainly not.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over if there be no objection.

JOSEPH WILSON.

Mr. McCREERY. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill No. 2836.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill (H. R. No. 2836) for the relief of Joseph Wilson, of Bourbon County, Kentucky, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It provides for paying to Joseph Wilson, of Bourbon County, Kentucky, $15,300, in full compensation for ninety mules captured from him by rebels at Beltsville, Maryland, in the year 1864, which mules were presented at the picket-lines of the defenses around Washington in part fulfillment of a contract to deliver in that city five hundred mules.

Mr. INGALLS. Is there a report in that case?

Mr. COCKRELL. The House report was adopted by the Senate Committee on Claims.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The report will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the following report, submitted by Mr. DAVIS, from the Committee on Claims, on the 12th of June, 1874:

The Committee on Claims, to whom were referred the papers and petition of Joseph Wilson, of Kentucky, asking to have his contract for delivery of mules in 1864 referred to the Court of Claims, report as follows:

On the 2d of July, 1864, Joseph Wilson, of Paris, Kentucky, made a contract, by order of Major-General Meigs, with General D. H. Rucker, for the delivery of five hundred mules of the usual size, age, &c., and to be inspected by the Government inspectors, at $170 each; two hundred to be delivered at Washington in five days from date of contract, and three hundred within twenty-five days. The two hundred were delivered and accepted within the five days named in the contract. On July 12, ten days after date of contract, Wilson's men drove to the picket-lines of United States troops near Bladensburgh one hundred and seventy mules. Owing to the rebels being in force near and around Washington, Secretary Stanton had caused an order to be given allowing no one to pass in or out of the Federal lines. After some delay and effort to get the mules within the United States lines, they were driven back a short distance and put into a field. Two of the men in charge staid with the mules. One of the men attempted to get into the city but failed to do so that day. Next morning, by taking the railroad-cars, he did get in, and after some delay succeeded in getting an order to bring in the mules; but before his return the rebels had captured and driven off the one hundred and seventy mules. Wilson, the contractor and owner, was not with the mules at the time they were refused entrance into Washington or when captured, but came the next day, when he and his men followed the route of the captured mules until they crossed into Virginia, succeeded in picking up eighty of the one hundred and seventy mules, leaving ninety lost or taken. There were also five horses taken, but for them Wilson clearly has no claim whatever against the Government, as he had no contract to deliver horses.

The facts as to coming to pickets with mules and being refused entrance into Washington; the capture of the mules by the rebels, and the following to recover mules; also the number taken and regained, are sworn to by Elias J. Kennedy and Thomas Dowden; also, circumstances show the facts. There is no doubt of the contract having been made by Wilson, and that the one hundred and seventy mules would have been delivered in Washington, July 12, but for the order not to let anybody pass in or out.

The claim has been in Congress or the Quartermaster's Department until this Congress. Wilson asks to have his claim under contract referred to the Court of Claims, to be tried by the rules of said court. His excuse for not going to the court within the six years allowed by law is that his claim was before Congress, and he expected it to be allowed there, and did not know he could go to the Court of Claims until it was too late. He now prays that his claim be referred to Court of Claims, to be acted upon by that court.

The committee recommend that the claim be referred to the Court of Claims, to be passed upon by them, and report a bill accordingly.

Mr. CONKLING. I did not hear the whole of the report. May I inquire if there is any evidence that this claimant asked for a guard, or in any way put the authorities in condition to furnish him a guard for any of this property?

Mr. SHERMAN. Or notified anybody that these were mules belonging to the Government—the commandant, or anybody else?

Mr. INGALLS. It is very evident that that cannot be the report referred to by the Senator from Missouri, because the bill provides for the payment of a certain amount of money out of the Treasury, whereas the report just read recommends that the claim be referred to the Court of Claims for consideration.

Mr. COCKRELL. I will state to the Senator from Kansas that that is not the report which was adopted by the Committee on Claims and submitted. I have sent for it. That report is in the hands of the printer, and it has been sent for. It is a very full report, and I think explains the objections made by the Senator from New York and the Senator from Ohio. I think if that report were here and read, it would be satisfactory. It covers those points, I think, definitely.

Mr. CONKLING. Would it not be better to let the bill lie until we have the report? I do not object at all; but I ask the Senator whether it would not be better?

Mr. COCKRELL. The Senator from Kentucky called up the bill.

Mr. McCREERY. I think it very likely the report will be here in the course of a few minutes.

Mr. SHERMAN. Time is passing.

Mr. McMILLAN. If the Senator will yield to me, I will move to proceed to the consideration of another bill, which will not require discussion.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The morning hour has expired.

Mr. McMILLAN. I ask for the consideration of Senate bill No. 369.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. If it is likely to occupy time, I cannot consent.

MISSISSIPPI RIVER NAVIGATION.

Mr. McMILLAN. I think there will be no discussion whatever on the bill and it will pass without delay. It is a matter which has received the consideration of the Committee on Commerce, and the report is unanimous. It is a bill to exempt vessels engaged in the Mississippi navigation from entry and clearance. It is done with the full concurrence and knowledge of the Secretary of the Treasury, between whom and myself last fall there was some correspondence in regard to the matter, and it has had full consideration there.

There being no objection, the bill (S. No. 369) to exempt all vessels engaged in the navigation of the Mississippi River and its tributaries above the port of New Orleans from entries and clearances, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The Committee on Commerce proposed to amend the bill by striking out of line 5 the word "and," and inserting after the words "4352" the words "4353, 4354, 4355, and 4356;" and in line 13, after the word "also," striking out the word "procuring," and inserting "to procure;" so as to make the bill read:

That the provisions of sections 4349, 4350, 4351, 4352, 4353, 4354, 4355, and 4356 of the Revised Statutes, requiring the master of every vessel licensed to carry on the coasting trade, laden in part with foreign merchandise or distilled spirits, to procure a permit from the customs officer of the port at which his vessel was laden, authorizing him to proceed to his port of destination, and also to procure a permit from the port of destination for the unlading of his cargo, shall not be held to include vessels engaged in the navigation of the Mississippi River or tributaries above the port of New Orleans.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, was read the third time, and passed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. G. M. ADAMS, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed the following bills and joint resolution; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (H. R. No. 2935) to promote the efficiency of the Army of the United States, to provide for its gradual reduction, and to consolidate certain of its staff departments, and for other purposes;

A bill (H. R. No. 3156) to perfect the revision of the Statutes of the United States; and to loan to the authorities of Steubenville, Ohio, two pieces of artillery, to be used in celebrating July 4, 1876.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills; and they were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore:

A bill (S. No. 3) for the relief of Alvis Smith;

A bill (S. No. 43) granting a pension to Urial Bundy;

A bill (S. No. 121) granting a pension to John Pierson;

A bill (S. No. 165) for the relief of Michael W. Brock, of Meigs County, Tennessee, late a private in Company D, Tenth Tennessee Volunteers;

A bill (S. No. 545) granting a pension to Abraham Ellis; and

A bill (S. No. 641) granting a pension to Julia Scroggin.

AMENDMENTS TO APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. JONES, of Nevada, submitted four amendments from the Committee on Contingent Expenses intended to be proposed to the bill (H. R. No. 2571) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1877, and for other purposes; which were referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

BILLS BECOME LAWS.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. U. S. GRANT, jr., his Secretary, announced that the following bills, having been received by him on the 20th of May last, and not having been returned by him to the Senate, wherein they originated, within ten days, (Sundays excepted,) as prescribed by the Constitution, have become laws without his signature:

An act (S. No. 168) for the relief of the legal representatives of George Schwartz, deceased, late a private in Company F, Fifth Regiment Wisconsin Volunteer Infantry; and

An act (S. No. 384) for the relief of Mrs. Eliza Potter, widow of Lorenzo T. Potter, deceased, late of Charleston, South Carolina.

WILLIAM BATTERSBY.

Mr. NORWOOD. I desire to enter a motion to reconsider a report of a committee made the day before yesterday on the bill (S. No. 848) for the relief of Willam Battersby, on which the Committee on Claims made an adverse report. I enter a motion for reconsideration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The motion will be entered.

PAPERS WITHDRAWN AND REFERRED.

On motion of Mr. STEVENSON, it was Ordered, That the petition and papers of Brittania W. Kennon, widow of Commodore Beverly Kennon, be taken from the files of the Senate and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The following bill and joint resolution from the House of Representatives were severally read twice by their titles, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs:

A bill (H. R. No. 2935) to promote the efficiency of the Army of the United States, to provide for its gradual reduction, and to consolidate certain of its staff departments, and for other purposes; and

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 119) authorizing the Secretary of War to loan to the authorities of Steubenville, Ohio, two pieces of artillery to be used in celebrating July 4, 1876.

The bill (H. R. No. 3156) to perfect the Revision of the Statutes of the United States was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Revision of the Laws.

LEGISLATIVE, ETC., APPROPRIATION BILL.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will now call up the unfinished business of yesterday, being the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. No. 2571) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1877, and for other purposes.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. Mr. President, I shall ask the indulgence of the Senate in considering the bill to consider the amendments reported by the committee as the reading progresses. I hope there will be no objection. And contrary to my usage, Mr. President, I feel constrained to make some observations to the Senate touching the character of this bill. The departures from the usages of Congress in making the appropriations for this service, as the bill comes to the Senate, are of such a character as to properly arouse the attention of the Senate.

I wish to draw an obvious distinction on which, perhaps, very much will depend as to the action of the Senate. This bill is in its title "an act making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1877." The emphasis which I would make rests on two words, "making appropriations" for the expenses of three departments of the Government, legislative, executive, and judicial.

Mr. President, we are accustomed, I think, to treat the civil service, sometimes called the civil list, as if it were a thing that is and is not, may be, or may not be, according to our fancies, our whims, or our caprices. No greater mistake can possibly take place in regard to the duties that such an apprehension would devolve on the Senate now in considering this appropriation bill. What we want to know is the service, what it is, what relation it has to the country, and our duty in regard to it. It is our duty to make an appropriation for the civil service; and it is for the civil service as distinguished from the Government. Now, the Government of the United States is a mere abstraction, as provided by the Constitution, independent of the civil service. It is a proposition for a Government without any vitality or force in it independent of the civil service. From this statement it will be seen that our devotion to the civil service must be as our obligation is, precisely what it is to the Government of the United States. Congress is authorized by the Constitution to provide for the civil service. When that civil service is provided it is the hands of the Government of the United States by which all things are done in the name of the Government of the United States; and therefore any one will see that our obligations to it are to maintain it, support it, defend it, provide for it annually as for the Government of the United States.

Then another idea. It is an established service which forces an obligation upon every man in office and out of office to regard it and respect and provide for it. That is the nature of this measure. It is not an act so much to determine what the public service ought to be; it is not a provision to establish the public service. That was established as long ago as 1789, has been revised by sundry statutes from that time down; but it is a matter of solemn fact, a service provided by law; and when we know what it is and are called upon to appropriate for it, the obligation of the law is the rule, and no speculation about what it ought to be and is not is at all admissible on a question of appropriations. Senators will see at a glance that an attempt to determine what the appropriations ought to be on a bill that appropriates for the entire civil service of the country $20,000,000, to distribute that and undertake here on the floor of the Senate to tell what each man ought to have, would be absurd. Therefore I present this bill to you under the obligations of the law to do precisely what is implied in the title of the bill, to appropriate for the expenses of these Departments of the Government and for the civil service as established by law.

So much by way of preface as to the character of this bill and the obligation that arises from it; and the pertinency of these remarks will appear when I say that the committee have come to the conclusion that these obligations of the law have not been fully met; this duty has not been performed so far as appears by the bill as it comes to the Senate; and I will state to the Senate the particulars in which it has not been done.

In the first place, the bill does not provide for the salaries as established by law.

In the second place, it does not provide for the civil list as established by law, but has greatly reduced it.

In the third place, it does not provide for various substantive divisions or branches of the public service as established by law.

To these three particulars, in the brief words I shall address to the Senate, I desire to invite your attention. It reduces the compensation from 10 to 20 per cent., and that upon what I should call a horizontal rule, applicable to a diverse service which the Senate will see at once would be an impossible thing without danger of great injustice to those connected with the service. It reduces the civil list, by which I mean the numerical force of the Departments, about $22\frac{6}{10}$ per cent., (nearly one-fourth of the entire force,) and it omits all provision for several Bureaus and distinct divisions of the public service; for instance, the Indian Bureau, the Signal Service, the surveyors-general of the Territories, the Bureau of Military Justice, and several other minor and less important divisions.

Now allow me to invite your attention to the question of the salaries. The reduction of the salaries is, as I have said, averaging from 10 to 20 per cent. That applies to a civil list embracing in these Departments over five thousand persons. It applies principally to clerks of the second, third, and fourth classes. These constitute the great body of that force. It does not apply to those under the first class. The salaries of these classes, as the Senate know, are, naming them in the order in which I have named the classes, $1,400, $1,600, and $1,800.

Now, let us consider for a moment the reasons for any reduction of these salaries. They were established in 1853 and 1854, and from that time down to the present they have not been touched. They remain, and have remained from that day to this as established in those years. The supposition on the part of the committee is this, if these salaries were properly established in those times at those rates, are they unreasonable at the present time? The presumption seems to be against it. Then all our information from the Departments is precisely on that line. They are not too high; they are not high enough, it is said in the Departments, and verily believed, to command that kind of talent which the public service really demands.

The committee, therefore, content themselves with the inferences which would be drawn from the fact that these salaries were established in 1853 and 1854, have remained to the present time, the character of the times then, and the fact that they have been sustained all this time, and the additional fact that the expenses of living here in the city of Washington now over the expenses at the time when these salaries were established must be very great; it is said nearly double.

But, Mr. President, in addition to all that, the committee felt that they were not at liberty to exercise any discretion in regard to the salaries. The committee are acting as an appropriation committee to provide for the salaries and the expenses of the Government as established by the law. They have remained without complaint, except that they were too low, from that time down to the present; and if the committee had been inclined to believe that they were too high, the only thing the committee could do would be to refer that question to the Senate. But under the obligations of the law to appropriate for the expenses as they are found to exist, the committee recommend non-concurrence with the House in all these questions of salaries, and they amended the bill accordingly.

Mr. COCKRELL. When were these salaries fixed did the Senator say?

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. In 1853 and 1854.

Mr. COCKRELL. The majority of them?

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. The large majority of them; the great bulk of them.

Now, Mr. President, I come to the reduction in the civil list; and I will state to the Senate what the reduction has been as the bill comes to the Senate and what it is as reported from the committee of the Senate.

The number in the civil list in the Departments is 5,308, as provided for in this bill. Twenty-two and six-tenths per cent. of that is the reduction, which amounts to 1,203, nearly one-fourth of the entire force. These and other reductions and omissions in the bill would reduce the expenses $5,739,440.39. The reduction of the civil list, it will be seen, is one-fourth of the entire service. On the face of it, who that is at all acquainted with the necessities which every public man knows have pressed upon Congress since 1867 for reduction and retrenchment, and the reductions that have been made from year to year, believes that a condition of things exists to-day that will admit of reducing the service in these Executive Departments one-fourth? The very statement of the proposition shows that there must be some mistake about it, that it cannot be so, is not so. I say that is the probability.

This bill in the aggregate, as I have said, proposes to reduce the expenses $5,739,440.39. That is just about one-third of the entire expenditures of the civil service of the country as it has been appropriated for the last four or five years.

The committee of the Senate propose to make a reduction of $2,130,398, which is just about one-half of the reduction proposed by the House. The Senate committee's reduction of the civil list is 318 as against 1,203 on the part of the House, which is a reduction of between 6 and 7 per cent. of the numerical force. This is a reduction from the estimates of this year of $2,130,398, reducing the estimated appropriations from $19,138,678 to $17,010,876.

For 1874 the amount of appropriations for this service was $20,758,255.50; for 1875, $18,734,422.20. The present bill, as I have already stated, amended as the committee propose, is $17,010,876.

In confirmation of what I observed a few moments ago as to the gradual reduction in this service in the interest of public economy the last few years, whoever examines these bills will find that this reduction has been gradual and uniform through these years. It will be seen that in the year 1875 the appropriations were two millions and more less than for 1874, and that the bill for 1876–'77, as contemplated by the report of your committee, is $1,700,000 below that of last year. This is shown by the following table:

Here, Mr. President, the question arises whether we can sustain a lower reduction than is recommended by the committee; and upon this point I desire to say that the committee have taken the utmost pains with a view of ascertaining the lowest point to which the civil-list could be reduced numerically so as not to cripple the public service, and to this end we put ourselves in communication with the heads of the Departments, enjoined upon them to make personal investigation into the public service through the Departments, the Bureaus, the divisions, and upon such investigation to present to the committee the figures giving the lowest reduction practicable to be made consistent with the public service.

I submit a table to be published in the RECORD, showing specifically the reduction contemplated:

* Reduction made by House, 22.6 per cent.; reduction made by Senate committee, 6 per cent.

The committee have come to the conclusion, resting on the judgment of the Departments and the information from the Departments, that as low as the public service can go is a reduction of between 6 and 7 per cent., which is a numerical reduction of three hundred and eighteen.

Mr. President, we are now several years from the close of the war, and it is a marvel in the eyes of some people that the public service is still so large as it is; but we ought not to forget that although peace has come, although the armies have disbanded, we are still dealing with the consequences of the war. The incidents of the war are still with us and still felt in these Departments. Now to the end that the Senate may see precisely whether this force is all employed, I have procured tables which I think will tend very strongly to show that the force they have in these Departments is no greater than is needed. Here is a comparative statement of work performed in the several Bureaus of the Treasury Department specified—which I will send to the Chair and would be glad to have go into the RECORD—in these Departments and several Bureaus and Divisions as compared with a year previous to the year 1861.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. ANTHONY in the chair.) The Secretary will read the paper.

The Secretary began to read the following table:

Having read some of the items——

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. Perhaps that will suffice.

Whoever takes pains to examine this table will be astonished, I think, at the disparity in the work and the service of these years. Going back to the year 1860, the work in these Departments was comparatively nominal. Coming to 1875, it is immense. In 1860 in the First Auditor's Office there were nineteen hundred and eighty-one subjects examined against seven thousand and sixty-five in 1875. In 1860 the accounts involved $157,000,000, against $1,144,000,000 in 1875.

The expenses in that Bureau for 1860 were $42,340; in 1875, $76,780; whereas the work performed is more than fourfold, and with this relative expense: in 1860, $4.10 per account, as against $3.06 in 1875. That is true of the entire service in this Department, as I believe. This is the Treasury Department I am speaking of, and it illustrates this general fact, that the civil service as it exists to-day numerically is justified by the work done and by the demands of the public service for labor to be performed.

The impression is abroad undoubtedly in the country that the service might be greatly reduced and that it is really excessive and extravagant. When we look at the figures and see, for instance, that in 1860 the ordinary civil expenses of the Government are said to have been $69,000,000, and when last year we know that they were $274,000,000, it puts every intelligent man, of course, upon his inquiry whence this disparity? I present the tables which will explain it.

It must be remembered that we have passed through since 1860 a very extraordinary period in our history requiring a very great expenditure of money. These tables which I hold in my hand institute a comparison of expenditures for the years 1859 and 1875. In 1859 the expenditures were $68,984,690.09; in 1875 they were $274,623,392.84; making a difference it will be seen of $205,638,702.75. It will be seen that the business of the committee is to account for that two hundred and five and odd million dollars which is in excess of the service of 1859. That is accounted for in this way: Three constituent elements enter into it: first, the war and the expenses incident to the war; second, the natural growth of the service through the natural growth of the country; and third, that new service which has been ingrafted upon the public service since 1859 and 1860.

This increase will be found in the expenses of Congress; the executive; the judiciary; miscellaneous civil; the foreign intercourse; miscellaneous; Interior; military establishment; naval establishment; public debt. The public debt, $100,455,080.60, entered into these $205,000,000 last year. Six million dollars and more were to the naval establishment; military establishment, $19,000,000; Interior Department, $33,000,000—I speak in round numbers only—miscellaneous, $32 000,000; foreign intercourse, $2,000,000; miscellaneous civil, $1,000,000; judiciary, $2,454,780; executive, $4,000,000; and Congress, $2,203,000.

I send the tables to the Reporter and ask that they may be printed with my remarks.

Mr. EATON. I should like to say to my friend from Maine that he has seen the tables and has to his own satisfaction, doubtless, given good reason for the large increase in the expenditures of the Government; but there ought not to be a final vote asked on the question now before the Senate until the tables can be printed, so that we may see precisely the various items. I have thought myself, having spent a good deal of time in the study of this subject, that the great difference could not be satisfactorily explained. I am well aware of the $100,000,000 in regard to the public-debt interest, and the $29,000,000 in regard to the additional pensions, but there are one hundred and fifty other millions that I am not so well satisfied of; and therefore I should like to see this matter in print before I vote.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. My honorable friend will have the satisfaction, I hope, of being enlightened on this subject; for here are the tables giving the items of increase.

Mr. EATON. I have not the advantage my friend from Maine has; I have not seen the tables.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. The Senator will find one thing, if he examines it carefully, as I am sure he will, that the civil service of the country is conducted at the present time in such a manner as that all sorts of expenditures and appropriations come to the surface. There is a specific accountability in the public service that never existed in the history of the Government up to 1870. If the Senator will take pains to look at the estimates which are annually made, he will see an account-current, which is an accurate statement of every branch of the public service, of every dollar appropriated to it and every dollar expended; and unless there is some great inaccuracy about it, in some way overlooked, each Senator may be as well informed in regard to the expenditures and receipts of the Government, so far as shown through appropriations and expenditures, as he is of the statements of his own county.

Mr. President, I was about to conclude this part of the subject by saying that it is apparent first, that we appropriate for these legislative, executive, and judicial expenses according to law.

Mr. BAYARD. Will the Senator allow me to make a suggestion?

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. Certainly.

Mr. BAYARD. I am disposed to concur with the honorable Senator from Maine in his definition of an appropriation bill, and that its object and its tenor simply should be to provide money to carry into effect existing laws. This is what may be termed the generic description of an appropriation bill; but I wish to submit to the honorable Senator and the majority of the Senate whether that definition has not been so overlooked by the invariable practice of this body for the last fifteen or eighteen years, that to establish it now and adhere to it strictly, when we stand in the closing weeks of the session, would simply be saying to the co-ordinate branch of Congress: "You have, according to the accepted idea and invariable custom of legislation of these two Houses of Congress for the past eighteen years, proceeded to economize by changing the salaries of existing offices in the way of amendments to appropriation bills; we recognize this as the practice; we have not objected to it; we have accepted it as proper in practice, although perhaps not in theory; and yet, now, without notice to you, having suffered you to go on, prepare these bills with great elaboration, at great cost of time and pains, we tell you now that we propose suddenly to shut down upon you with this new, this technical, but perfectly unaccustomed theory, that an appropriation bill shall not be suffered to change the provisions of existing law either in respect to the existence of an office, or in respect of the salary allowed by law for performing its duties."

Mr. President, I do not think this can be sustained. I do not think it either practical or just that it should be proposed now. I will agree with the honorable Senator—and when I agree with him I am always better satisfied with my own judgment—that it would be well that it should be understood by each House of Congress that we will not amend existing laws under color of making appropriations to carry them into effect. But let us know that in advance; do not say to the co-ordinate branch of Congress, "Your labors for the last six months shall go for naught. We know that you have proceeded as your predecessors in office did; we know that you have been carrying out simply a custom which has almost hardened into law by acquiescence in both branches of Congress, and now suddenly you are to be informed that this practice is at an end, and therefore, instead of abolishing an office confessedly useless by a law for that purpose, you shall not reach the same result by withholding compensation for that office; and, there being no compensation, the office necessarily falls." It has been done. I would appeal to no man's experience more confidently than to that of the honorable Senator from Maine to show that where at times we have thought an office was illy paid we have increased the salary, to show that we thought the office was overpaid we diminished the salary, or where we thought the office was useless we simply dropped it by making no appropriation of money to execute it. The last has been very frequent. Sometimes we have created an office by simply passing an appropriation for the performance of certain duties, the office not having existed before in form of law.

Is it just, wise, practicable, that those who are carrying on in their place their appropriate share of this Government's duty, suddenly to tell them the practice so long concurred in by the Senate is suddenly to be reversed and an appropriation bill is to be treated by the Senate strictissimi juris; that you are simply to appropriate money according to law as it exists, and you are to remedy no defects, accede to no reforms, carry out no economies however needed by the times, in a mode of legislation that we have admitted by frequent practice to have been right and proper for fifteen years past or more? It does seem to me that such action would not be marked by that comity, by that sense of justice to the people we represent, or to our co-laborers in the other branch of the Legislature which is their due. No, sir; the question as to all these amendments, of all these proposed reforms, must be judged by us, not merely as to the method in which they come to us from the House but as to their merits. Therefore, where the House of Representatives has attempted an economy which I think wise, I shall give them my aid in sustaining it; where my judgment does not concur with theirs, I shall oppose their judgment; and where the judgments of the two Houses shall be found to be in conflict, then I trust the usual and ordinary methods of attempted reconciliation of variant views will be made through means of committees of conference, in which we cannot expect that our ideas will wholly prevail, nor can the other House expect that its ideas will be accepted without some concessions on their part. We must consider carefully their proposed reforms, and if they be actual and useful, accept them in a deferential and proper spirit, and not reject them because they do not come to us in the shape of repealing laws, but rather in the shape of modified appropriations; which, as I have said, is in accordance with the unquestioned practice of the two Houses for the past fifteen years.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. Mr. President, I doubt very much whether I shall disagree with my honorable friend, or whether there be any disagreement between us, when we understand each other as to what is meant by appropriating according to the law. The Senator speaks of a usage by which salaries have been changed upon appropriation bills. The Senator knows that that is exceptional. My honorable friend must know that it has not been the usage of the Senate to change salaries; that never was done in an appropriation bill by applying a rule to the whole body of salaries; that never was attempted before, never was attempted——

Mr. BAYARD. To what salaries does the Senator refer?

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. To all the salaries in the Departments above those of twelve-hundred-dollar clerks.

Mr. BAYARD. I am very sure that I have served with my friend on committees of conference where there was a very great alteration in the pay of various officers.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. Yes, sir; but my honorable friend will understand me when I finish my remark. Was it ever known before in the history of legislation that an appropriation committee undertook to change the entire salaries of the whole force in the Executive Departments by applying a rule of a certain per cent. reduction to the whole body of salaries?

Mr. BAYARD. I do not know that it was.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. Of course it never was.

Mr. BAYARD. I merely mean to say that I do not see any difference in principle whether you apply it to one or many. I see no difference in principle between making what you call a horizontal reduction of such a per cent. on all salaries and taking the salary of one man at $1,500 and raising it to $2,000, or reducing it from $2,000 to $1,500.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. If my honorable friend was receiving a salary of $1,400, and a horizontal rule of 20 per cent. was applied to him and not to others, I think he would see the difference in the principle; at any rate he would see the difference in the result, and he would feel probably the effect of it. What I am commenting upon here is the fact that instead of appropriating for the salaries as provided by law a general horizontal rule is applied to the whole body of salaries, reducing them according to a certain per cent. That is unprecedented.

Mr. BAYARD. It is not unprecedented in principle.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. That cannot be done with a diverse service without manifest injustice. As to the rule to which my honorable friend refers, it has not been the practice, although almost every year some change has been made in somebody's salary. As a general proposition, such a change has been made with reference to those salaries which had no existence except by an appropriation. We sometimes make a service by an appropriation. That is a flexible thing.

Mr. BAYARD. Are not appropriation bills almost always the accustomed machinery by which these results are accomplished?

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. In those cases; but does not my honorable friend know that the salaries of first, second, third, and fourth class clerks, established in 1854, have never been changed, neither on an appropriation bill nor any other bill, and they constitute the great body of the force? They have never been changed at all, but are precisely what they were as established in 1854. That shows conclusively that Congress has not been in the habit on appropriation bills or anywhere else of changing salaries. That is precisely the thing that the committee recommend they shall not do on this bill, and that is all there is of it. When you come to the question whether any salary can be changed, the committee agree to that because they have done it. There are exceptional cases, and there are instances in this very bill as reported. I do not understand that there is any question of the propriety or fitness of the duty of the Committee on Appropriations involved in the case.

On the question of the reduction of the numerical force we have endeavored to meet the House of Representatives on the most liberal terms, and we have no difficulty with them except as to the question of how much the service can be reduced. That must always be a flexible service, and it is precisely what we have been doing these many years since the close of the war, cutting down the numerical force year by year. It has been done, as we think and as the committee report, a little too strongly on the other side of the Capitol, and therefore the Senate committee recommend a lower figure. That is all there is of that question.

Therefore on principle I think I should not disagree with the Senator from Delaware as to what should be done. The whole case, then, on the question involved in the bill is, will the Senate of the United States appropriate according to law, as a general proposition, the salaries which were fixed in 1853 and 1854? Will they adhere to that law and so non-concur with the House of Representatives? If that is done, then all the labor which relates to the amendment of the salaries becomes a mere nominal affair, and of course the Senate will have to settle that question on the very first line where an amendment occurs.

On the other proposition, the reduction of the salaries, the same thing does not occur, but Senators must vote in regard to that question as their judgment dictates. On the other proposition I think they should vote on the obligations of the law.

I wish to direct the attention of the Senate to two or three other things which have a general bearing on this particular subject, as a matter of general interest, possibly more than anything else. I mean the revenues and expenditures of the Government. I give a comparative estimate of the expenditures of certain periods.

March 4, 1861, the national debt was $90,580,873.73; on the 4th of March, 1875, the national debt was $2,232,284,531.92. The totality of this national debt of the first period at the close of a continuous administration of twenty years in the same hands was quite inconsequential; but the fact of its existence at all at that juncture and under the circumstances was an apparent violation of the traditional policy of the Government, as well as of every sound principle of just public economy. It had been created in a period of profound peace and by a resort to loans and at extraordinary rates. The totality of the debt of 1875 was indeed truly appalling; but it had been incurred in the defense of the Union and Constitution and by practice not unusual in the exigency of war. During the period while civil war was raging, from 1861 to 1865, "the last man and the last dollar" was the only limit upon the nation's endurance and expenditure, and by the truly patriotic no account-current of expenses of that period will be sharply demanded of the cost in blood and treasure. The possessions of the present and the promises of the future are cheap at any sacrifice; but a rigid accountability may be required of the period that lies this side of 1865, after the close of the war—the surrender, the mustering out of the national forces, when it had become possible to inspect, reduce, and retrench the public expenditures. Consider the financial situation of 1866, when Congress was left to deal with the results, consequences, and incidents of the war; an appalling public debt, funded and unfunded; a greatly extended public service, and a large section of the country divided, disordered, revolutionized, and unreconstructed.

The net ordinary expenses of the year 1866 were $385,954,731.43, while the gross expenditures of that year reached $1,139,344,081.91. Of the net ordinary expenses of that year, those of the War Department were $283,154,676.06. A large force was still retained and necessary under the disordered condition of the South and the Indian country. The Navy, although rapidly reduced, was still above its ordinary maximum, and it would require time to bring it to its former condition. The expenses of that Department were $43,285,662. The Indian service had been much demoralized during the prevalent disorder, treaties broken and disregarded by both parties, amounting in all to $3,295,729.39. Pensions had risen from $1,600,802 in 1860 to $15,605,589 in 1865. The civil service proper had increased from $27,000,000 in 1860 to $40,000,000 in 1866. In 1875 the net ordinary expenditures had been reduced from $385,954,731.43 to $171,529,847.27, a reduction in the civil branch of the service between the years 1865 and 1875 of $214,424,882.16.

To realize the significance and pertinency of this statement it will be necessary to consider that this reduction took place in the branch of the civil service which we are now to appropriate for as the ordinary expenditures of the Government; and it was a reduction of a little less than two-thirds.

An analysis of this general reduction of expenditures may be itemized thus: On the Army the reduction was $242,000,000 in round numbers; Navy, $22,264,000. In the Indian service the increase has been $4,000,000; in Pensions, $14,000,000; and the Departments and all other branches of the public service, $31,000,000. The increase in the Indian service arises from various considerations which it is hardly worth while for me in this connection to speak of; but particularly it grows out of the fact of the acquisition from the Indians of the whole plains country lying between the Missouri River and the Rocky Mountains; and such provision is made for their present and future support as would naturally grow out of so large a transaction.

The net ordinary receipts from all sources in 1866 were $519,949,564.38. In 1875 they were $348,020,771.41, a reduction in the revenues of $235,928,792.67. In 1866 the national debt, funded and unfunded, was $2,773,236,173.69. In 1875 it had been reduced to $2,232,284,531.95, being an aggregate reduction of $540,951,641.74.

The financial policy enforced since 1866 in the interests of public economy and the national faith gives the country in 1875 as its result a reduction of the national debt of $540,951,641.74, and the relief of public burdens by the way of a reduction of the taxes in the years 1866, 1867, 1868, and 1870 of $319,000,000.

During the war the political policy seemed to be to "tax, fight, and emancipate." The war over, the financial policy has been the protection of public credit, the redemption of the national obligations, and the retrenchment of the public expenditures. Under this policy the public faith has been kept, the national obligations have been performed, the public debt dissolving and disappearing, the burden of taxation counted by hundreds of millions has been removed from the industries of the people, and the net ordinary expenditures of the Government have been reduced other hundreds of millions, until at the present time these expenditures closely approximate the period of peace before the war.

Just one other consideration, Mr. President, upon this general topic, and then I shall have done. An impression doubtless prevails somewhat that the civil service is redundant and needs vigorous pruning, and that the public expenditures are excessive and unjust. I may be allowed to glance at the general financial revenues and expenditures both in the present and in the past by way of comparison. The civil service of the country, in its necessity, is a growth, and increases with its progress and the development of its institutions, and is a fair index to these characteristics of its life. In the beginning of the Government in 1789 the civil list embraced the President of the United States, the Vice-President, the legislative and judicial departments, and the public offices, namely, the Treasury, the State Department, the commissioners for settling with the States and governments of the Territories northwest and southwest. This was the sum-total of the civil service in 1789. It must be a matter of great curiosity to contemplate the comparative insignificance, the nominal character of the civil service as it existed in 1789. I have it here before me, [holding up a thin octavo volume.] The whole civil service which we are now providing for was summed up in substantially what I have stated. The entire receipts of that year from imposts were but $4,000,000, and the balance was simply from fines and forfeitures, a nominal amount. The whole expenditure from 1789 down to 1791, two years, was $706,720.29. By 1865 the civil list had been re-enforced by the creation of five executive departments, many bureaus, numerous divisions, and innumerable clerks, something over five thousand in all, at an expense for the two years 1864 and 1865 of more than $40,000,000 as against $706,000 in 1789 and 1790. The gross receipts for the early period from all sources were $10,457,492, of which $4,542,949.41 were from customs and fines and forfeitures, the balance chiefly raised by loans. The ordinary expenditures for the later period were $1,621,109,000. The gross receipts of the corresponding period, 1874 and 1875, were $1,420,222,908.62 and the gross expenditures $1,406,699,326.31.

While these figures not inaptly signify by their magnitude the grandeur and power of the Government in 1875, compared with its small beginnings, they do not necessarily or truly mark the general progress of the nation, as so large a proportion of these receipts and expenditures are extraordinary in their character and spring from the incidents of the civil war, still felt in these years. The receipts and expenditures by decades are the better index of the national progress. Let me present that statement:

Comparative statement of the expenditures of the Government by decades.

	Net ordinary expenditures.	Gross expenditures
First decade, 1791 to 1800	$41,403,440 22	$86,965,371 78
Second decade, 1801 to 1810	53,826,543 10	133,269,683 19
Third decade, 1811 to 1820	190,657,278 15	322,667,211 57
Fourth decade, 1821 to 1830	122,038,078 92	229,414,961 48
Fifth decade, 1831 to 1840	241,632,544 51	304,257,676 17
Sixth decade, 1841 to 1850	306,907,179 53	390,784,350 10
Seventh decade, 1851 to 1860	568,363,368 00	678,290,605 84
Eighth decade, 1861 to 1870	4,420,205,388 32	9,347,329,336 28
Five years of ninth decade, 1871 to 1875	856,923,153 94	3,304,950,546 33
Total	6,801,956,954 69	14,797,839,742 74

Increase per cent. second over first decade	30	53.2
Increase per cent. third over second decade	254.2	142.1
Decrease per cent. fourth over third decade	35.9	23.9
Increase per cent. fifth over fourth decade	97.9	32.6
Increase per cent. sixth over fifth decade	27	28.4
Increase per cent. seventh over sixth decade	85.1	73.6
Increase per cent. eighth over seventh decade	677.6	1278.2
Decrease per cent. ninth over eighth decade*	61.2	29.2

* Estimating the expenditures of the last half of decade to be the same as for the first half.

By the tables which I submit it will be seen that the ratio of increase bears marked relation to each, except in those periods of extraordinary expenditures by war or other public exigency. Of this, the first, second, fourth, fifth, sixth, and seventh periods, it will be seen, are examples; the third and eighth are exceptions to the rule, and embrace two periods of war which mark our national history. The growth of the nation, measured by this rule, in the second decade should exceed the first by 30 per cent.; the fourth (the third being exceptional) should have been 35 per cent. over third; the fifth 97 per cent. over the fourth; the sixth 27 per cent. over the fifth; the seventh 85 per cent. over the sixth; and, the eighth being exceptional, the ninth should be 121 per cent. over the seventh.

The gross receipts of the Government from March 4, 1789, to June 30, 1875, inclusive, were $14,973,305,670.59. Of this sum, $12,709,645,059.91, equivalent to $84\frac{9}{10}$ per cent. of the whole sum, has been received by the present party administration since 1861. The gross expenditures during this period have been $14,797,839,742.74, of which $84\frac{9}{10}$ per cent. has been expended since 1861. Thus, of the $20,771,145,413.33 received and disbursed by the National Government, $84\frac{9}{10}$ per cent. has been received and disbursed in the last fifteen years, while $15\frac{1}{10}$ per cent. alone was disbursed in former years.

It must indeed be conceded that the national expenditures in the last fifteen years, since the republican party came into power, have been upon a scale quite unprecedented in this, perhaps in any, country. The public exigencies in this remarkable period of our history, which seemed to demand them, alone can justify or palliate them.

Whatever diversity of opinion there may be as to the character of these exigencies and the method of dealing with them, one thing must be admitted, that the financial achievements of this period—the vast revenues and expenditures raised and disbursed whereby the nation was enabled to wage successful war and at the same time maintain the public credit and keep the public faith—are scarcely less signal than its triumphs in the field.

Mr. EATON. I desire to ask my friend from Maine a question. I have not had time to make a synopsis of the bill up to this time, but I understood the Senator to say that the committee had agreed measurably with the House in the reduction of the number of officers. Am I correct in that?

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I do not think I quite comprehend the Senator's question.

Mr. EATON. I may have misunderstood the Senator from Maine;

but I did understand him to say that the committee had agreed with the House measurably in the reduction of the number of officers.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. No; not quite that. What I meant to say was that on the principle of reducing the numerical force the committee proposed to agree with the House in reducing the service to such a point as in their judgment would be consistent with the public service; but we do differ as to where that point is. The committee do not recommend the same reduction in numerical force.

Mr. EATON. I would ask the Senator, then, if he has it so arranged that he can answer me what reduction of the force has been made in the Treasury Department from last year, if any?

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I do not think I can state it precisely.

Mr. EATON. Can the Senator state, then, what the whole reduction is?

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. The whole reduction numerically is three hundred and eighteen.

Mr. EATON. Three hundred and eighteen employés?

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. Yes, sir, and clerks.

Mr. EATON. In all the Departments?

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. Yes, sir; between 6 and 7 per cent. of the entire force.

Mr. EATON. I desire to state one fact here. Whether it has been brought to the attention of the honorable Senator from Maine or not I do not know. A committee was appointed, which has not yet reported, of which the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. BOUTWELL] was the chairman—I have the honor to be upon that committee—whose duty it was to examine into the various Departments and suggest if possible any re-organization of any of them. It was suggested by one or two members of that committee that it was wrong as a matter of principle that the employés of the various Departments should be required to work but six hours a day. Taking into consideration the number of hours of labor which are performed by all the various industries of the country and demanded by them, it was suggested that the labor of these Government employés should be increased one hour. I am informed that their labor has been increased from six to seven hours, or at least various employés have stated to me that they had been so notified. I would suggest that as there are three or four thousand employés in the various Departments of the Government—and I suppose I understate it—if their term of duty is increased an hour a day, it would be just so many thousand hours a day additional. If there be four thousand, it would be four thousand hours; and a very little exercise of arithmetic would show how much reduction of force that would take from the various Departments.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I will say to my honorable friend that the estimates which I have submitted here to-day from the heads of the Departments will be found to have been based upon that consideration already, and that that principle has been applied.

Mr. EATON. So I supposed.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. The reduction recommended by the head of the Treasury Department is based in part upon the consideration of additional hours, or that consideration enters into the estimate. With additional hours he submits that the public service can be carried on with the force he recommends.

Mr. EATON. Certainly that consideration does not enter far enough into his estimate. If you add an additional hour the reduction will be more than three hundred or four hundred. An hour a day, if there be four thousand employés, is four thousand hours a day to be added to the service of the employés. The reduction—I have not my pencil in my hand—would be more than five hundred clerks. I submit that this matter should be looked into with some care. I do not wish to take up the time of the Senate now upon that point.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. ANTHONY in the chair.) The Secretary will proceed with the reading of the bill. The Chair understands it to be the sense of the Senate that the amendments of the Committee on Appropriations shall be acted upon as they are reached.

The Chief Clerk proceeded to read the bill. The first amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was in lines 10 and 11, to increase the appropriation for compensation of Senators from $333,000 to $370,000, and in line 11 after the word "dollars" to strike out the words:

And from and after the 30th of June next, the compensation of said Senators shall be $4,500 per annum.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President, I am very sorry that the Senate is so thin when a question so important as the pay of its own members is involved; but a question far more important is the probable effect upon the appropriation bills of the wide differences between the two Houses upon the many questions presented by each of their vital bills. I had made up my mind for one, until within the last few hours, that I would vote in deference to the judgment of the House of Representatives for a decrease in the pay of Senators, upon the ground that the House had fixed their own pay at $4,500, and as they probably would not be willing that Senators should have $5,000 and they $4,500, I was willing for the sake of economy to agree with them at their own valuation of their own services. I am rather inclined to do it now; but the considerations presented by the Senator from Maine ought to be considered by a full Senate. It seems to me that the vote on this first proposition ought to settle the fate of the entire bill. I have read it with a good deal of care. The House of Representatives have greatly changed the civil service of the Government. They have not only reduced the number of employés and reduced the pay, but they have imported and grafted upon the bill very important legislative provisions. Among others there is a page or two of amendments to the revenue law which I am sure I have not considered, and I know the Committee on Finance have not had an opportunity to examine and to consult the proper authorities of the Government about to ascertain whether they are right or not. I notice through the bill other important legislative provisions.

The Senate of the United States cannot deny that the House of Representatives have the power to propose amendments to an appropriation bill, because we have done it time out of mind. Therefore we are precluded from making any point of order upon them. Nor is it possible to make any such objection, because by the Constitution itself each House must prescribe its own rules of procedure and its own mode of legislation. Hence we have no right to object to their mode of proceeding or to the changes proposed to existing law. We are precluded from even a criticism upon their amendments to appropriation bills, from the fact that the House is the sole judge of its own bills, and the Senate has since the foundation of the Government passed many and important legislative amendments to appropriation bills.

I therefore leave that point out of the view; but it is perfectly manifest that this bill is to be the subject of contest between the two Houses, and now at the outset of the controversy we ought to be careful that we are right, that we do nothing but what is right, that we assent to everything that is reasonable, and then stand upon our position until the end of this Congress, if necessary. It is manifest there is to be a contest over this and other appropriation bills, and at the beginning of the discussion to-day we should take our stand upon the ground we intend to occupy as to this bill with a full vote, so that every Senator, after full investigation, may say that "I know I am right and here I mean to stand."

The first question presented is, shall we consent to a reduction of our pay of $500 a year? I repeat that, if this was left to me, I would say "yes" at once; if the House of Representatives thinks the condition of the country is so bad, that our finances are so bad, that it is necessary to reduce the pay of members of Congress, well and good; and, as they propose to reduce their own pay, we might very fairly and properly, without any demagogism, with the utmost desire to promote the public good, say, "Very well; we are certainly willing to submit to that sacrifice, if you are." But, if we adopt that principle as to Senators and Members, we cannot then refuse to carry out the logic of the argument and apply it to other officers of the Government. Who are the officers of the Government affected by this bill? In the first place, there is the President of the United States. It is proposed to force the reduction of the salary of the President of the United States from $50,000, what the law is now, to $25,000 a year.

I did not happen to be present the other day when the vote was taken upon the bill to lower the President's salary. If I had been here I would have voted against that proposition on the ground that the salary of $25,000 was fixed at the beginning of the Government, when money was more valuable than now, when the responsibilities of the President were greatly less, when his duties and labors were infinitely less. Therefore, I would not vote to reduce the salary of the President. This bill also operates, as I understand it, upon the salaries of the judges of all the courts of the United States to be hereafter appointed. We cannot reduce the salaries of those judges during their life-time. All we could do now would be to make our reductions apply to those judges who might come into office hereafter as others died or their terms lapsed; so that we should have two sets or two classes of pay in the payment of our judges. It seems to me that would not be wise.

Another class of officers more numerous than all the rest—yes, ten in number to one of any other kind—are the clerks of the various Executive Departments of the Government. I do not know how many there are, but there must be three thousand at least; consequently they are more than ten to one probably of all the executive officers of the Government here in Washington. Their pay was fixed in 1853 and 1854. It was fixed at $1,200, $1,400, $1,600, and $1,800 a year, according to grade. We know very well from our own observation of these clerks that they can scarcely get along in the expensive life at Washington, where hotel-keepers and boarding-house-keepers expect to make a year's living within three months, where marketing is high, much higher than it ought to be, and all the expenses of a family are far greater than they ought to be. I know very well that, although we should have everything here as cheaply as in Ohio, yet as a rule every such article of necessity for a household, like marketing, is at least one-third more than it is in Ohio.

Under the circumstances I do not see how any Senator, with the responsibilities that rest upon him, can vote knowingly to reduce from 10 to 20 per cent. the salaries of these officers, clerks, employés, the great body of the official life of Washington. I cannot do it. I will not do it. Their pay was fixed at a time when money was more valuable than it is now; when it was gold. A clerk might very easily in 1854 and 1855, when I first came here, lay aside three or four or five hundred dollars a year, when now he cannot by the utmost economy do so.

Therefore I say I will not vote for this general decrease; but if we apply the reduction to our own salary, the logic of the argument will be to apply it to all others, and to adopt the policy proposed by the House. If we, however, agree to the reduction of our own salaries, and apply the reduction proposed by them only to those officials whose salaries have been raised since or during the war, there would be some logic in that. Perhaps some such proposition as that might be advocated and maintained; but when it is proposed to apply this reduction to all officers in the Government, including those most poorly paid, I simply say we cannot do it.

Therefore, I have come to the conclusion that for the present at least I will follow the action of the committee, to restore the appropriations to precisely what the law now requires. If then hereafter the House should insist upon an entire revolution of our Government, the wholesale reduction not only in the number of our employés and in the salaries of our employés, including the President of the United States, including all branches of official life except the judges who are protected by the Constitution, I will stand against that reduction as being unwise and unjust to those men personally, and injurious to the public service. But, if they are willing to apply that reduction only to those officers whose salaries have been increased since or during the war, including that of members of Congress, even to a lower figure than they now propose, I will join with them heartily and agree to their amendments. For the present, I propose to stand by the existing law.

I passed through a contest of this kind before. I remained here one year until September, I think it was. It was in 1856 that we remained here until September, and the contest I refer to was in 1859 and 1860. I passed through a contest just like this at that time. I remember it very well. We had a republican House of Representatives and a democratic Senate. The House proposed amendments to which the Senate disagreed. The Senate piled upon our appropriation bills all sorts of amendments, amounting to millions of dollars. In the last days of the session the bills came to us loaded down with amendments; and then the House took a position which was the logical sequence of the constitutional rule which requires the concurrence of two Houses of Congress to pass bills. We took our position, and stood by it, and compelled the Senate to yield to it. Our position was that whenever the law authorizes and requires a specific sum for a specific purpose that we would give such sum without abatement or reduction. We did it. Although, at that time, the disposition on the part of the House, the parties then being exactly reversed, was to cut down all appropriations, we carried out the law. Wherever the law fixed a sum or fixed the amount of a salary, we gave the full amount. We did not seek to force the Senate to change a law, and placed our action on the ground that it was not the right or duty of the House to coerce the Senate to agree to any change of existing law by an appropriation bill that the Senate did not and could not fairly and honestly assent to.

Then, on the other hand, we said to them, "We will not agree to any appropriation proposed by you, either of an indefinite character or where the amount was entirely at the will of both Houses of Congress, unless the House freely votes it without regard to your desire;" that is, you shall not coerce us to change the law or to appropriate money unless the law demands it, and we will not coerce you to change the law or to vary the law unless you agree with us that the law should be changed. Where changes could be made by the mutual assent of both Houses freely given, without any coercion, moral or physical, those ought to be made; but neither House has a right to coerce the other to adopt an amendment to a law unless by its own free will and accord. That is the rule, and that will be the result of this controversy. There is no doubt of it whatever.

As a matter of course I think the Committee on Appropriations ought now to have the deliberate sense of the Senate on these amendments. If we take our position that these amendments to the existing law do not agree with our sense of what is right and say we will not agree to them, the House of Representatives must recede from those amendments. There is no other logic. On the other hand, if the Senate committee or the Senate propose any appropriations of any character whatever, not provided for by law, and ask the House to pass them, and the House decline to pass them, the Senate committee and the Senate ought to recede from the appropriation without question or hesitation. As I understand, that is the rule under which the Committee on Appropriations have generally acted.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. The committee undoubtedly acted upon the rule submitted by the Senator, and no appropriation bill is possible without the prevalence of such a rule. The controversies of the two Houses would be endless upon any other supposition than that. In the end the proposition of law is to control the difference between the two Houses. I wish to make one suggestion to my honorable friend. He speaks about a willingness to reduce the compensation of Senators. The committee of course express no opinion about that. That comes within the general rule. That falls under the obligation to appropriate according to law. The salary of the President and the salary of Senators and Representatives was fixed by the acts of 1874. The Senator will find by looking at the act that all the salaries touched by it were to remain as fixed by law until further changed. What I wish to say is that if the Senate makes an exception in this instance the logic applies to the whole service.

Mr. SHERMAN. I stated that that was the only reason why I could not vote for the reduction; that my disposition at first was to accept the proposition of the House as to salaries of members of Congress, but that we could not do that without carrying the logic through the whole of these salaries and doing injustice to individuals who cannot afford the reduction. There is no objection to the two Houses of Congress either enlarging or reducing salaries on appropriation bills if they both agree to it, but neither body can force the other to do it.

There was another case in 1856 still more striking. Then the House of Representatives, in a high party time, undertook to direct that certain moneys appropriated for the support of the Army should not be applied to the enforcement of the bogus laws of Kansas. I believe I had the honor to submit the motion—and I was dead in earnest about it—that no part of the money appropriated in the bill should be applied to enforcing the so-called laws of Kansas, the border-ruffian laws, as we called them. We put the amendment on the Army appropriation bill and sent it to the Senate. They disagreed, and we were held here until October or September; the latter part of September I know, for it was just before the election. We were finally compelled, although we were as dead in earnest as any House could be, to recede on the very ground and principle which I have stated, that we could not force the Senate to agree to a legislative provision in an appropriation bill unless they freely agreed to it. They said they would not agree to it, and so we remained here and finally had to recede.

Mr. BOGY. If I understand the Senator aright, he was willing to do then what he condemns now.

Mr. SHERMAN. Yes; I offered the amendment myself.

Mr. BOGY. And you were supported by your party at that time in Congress?

Mr. SHERMAN. Yes, sir; and we had to recede, just as everybody else will have to recede under the same circumstances.

Mr. EATON. I should like to ask the Senator from Ohio why he receded?

Mr. SHERMAN. Because we were compelled to do so.

Mr. EATON. Because you got tired? Was that the reason?

Mr. SHERMAN. Yes, my political friends would not stand by the position taken. Now let me say if there ever was a case in the history of mankind which justified a legislative body in putting on such a provision and standing by it, it was that case, for of all the infamy that ever was committed by a political party none ever exceeded the attempt that was made in 1856 to force upon the people of Kansas laws not of their making, and my friend from Missouri and all other Senators know it. There never was a case which justified resistance more strongly than that.

Mr. BOGY. I think the reverse is the fact, that you attempted to force upon the people of Kansas laws which the people did not want. That is my understanding.

Mr. SHERMAN. I will not go into that now. At any rate the House of Representatives, I being one of the party and two or three others around me—I see my friend from New Hampshire [Mr. CRAGIN] who was with us then—attempted to do what the House attempt to do now. We had to back out then, although we were supported by a strong political feeling, and were engaged in as honest a cause as ever man undertook to advocate. We took the wrong measure to enforce it; that was all.

There is another aspect of our condition that is not pleasant and makes it our duty to meet the House of Representatives in all reasonable measures of economy. I am sorry to say that our receipts have fallen short of the estimates about fourteen or fifteen million dollars this year. Our customs have fallen off about $10,000,000 and our internal revenue has fallen off about $4,000,000. The increase of the tax on whisky and tobacco has, as I expected, caused a decrease of the estimated revenue to the amount of about $4,000,000, and perhaps other causes have operated to bring about this deficit.

Mr. EATON. How much in all?

Mr. SHERMAN. About fourteen or fifteen million. At the same time it is to be said that our expenses have been reduced. The action of the last Congress, through the Committees on Appropriations of the two Houses, considerably reduced our expenses; so that, while our revenues are falling off, our expenses have been considerably less than they were last year. The balance of the account is not so much against us as one would suppose. It is about $6,000,000, my friend from Maine [Mr. MORRILL] tells me. Therefore, under the operation of the laws of the last session, our expenditures have been reduced, and the deficit, compared with the estimate made at the beginning of this session, my friend from Maine tells me, is to the extent of $6,000,000, and we ought to curtail our appropriation bills enough more to make up our sinking fund to the full amount required by law. As I understand my friend from Maine, the present Congress will do that and more. We can reduce, or even defeat, several appropriation bills which contain large sums of money, entirely at our discretion. For instance, there is the river and harbor bill, which may be raised or lowered, according to the amount of money in the Treasury. There are the appropriations for public buildings and public grounds and various works of internal improvement which may be made a graduating scale, to be raised or lowered at pleasure. There is no question, therefore, that in bills which do not affect the ordinary operations of the Government there are "ample room and verge enough" to save even the $15,000,000 of the deficiency of estimated revenue without affecting anything that is vital or necessary to the great functions of the Government.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I wish to say in this connection that the Senate committee have already concurred with the House of Representatives on the question of appropriations for the exterior defenses, which are estimated at something over $3,000,000 on a bill appropriating but $300,000, so that in the line of the Senator's argument there would be a reduction of the expenditures from the estimates in that branch. It is undoubtedly true that, in regard to other branches of the service not fixed and established by laws as to salaries like the one we are considering, a very large reduction may be made. A reduction has already been made by the House of Representatives in the bill referred to by the Senator in regard to internal improvements which, I fancy, may be without any great detriment to the public service very largely reduced here. But that is not a matter for the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. SHERMAN. I have said all that I desire to say, and perhaps I ought to apologize for saying this much now, but the Committee on Finance and the Committee on Appropriations are necessarily kindred committees. One has to deal with revenue, the other has to deal with expenditures, and it is absolutely necessary for the Committee on Finance to understand what sum is to be appropriated before they can judge how much tax is to be raised and how much money must be provided. And therefore it has been the duty of these two committees to act in co-operation. If the Committee on Appropriations should make large appropriations, we should have to make large provisions in the way of taxes. One great error committed at the last session of Congress was that the appropriations were made so large that just at the heel of the session we were compelled to pass a very illy-considered tax bill. There is no necessity for that now; because I believe the spirit of both Houses of Congress, not only of the House of Representatives, which has shown it by largely reducing expenses, but of the Senate itself, is in favor of large and wise economy; a great reduction of expenditure; and if this is done to anything like the extent that is promised by the Committee on Appropriations of the Senate, I have no doubt we shall not only have the ordinary surplus of revenue and enough for the sinking fund, but something over, perhaps. To accomplish it we must accept from the House of Representatives every wise measure of economy proposed by them; but they have no right to force upon us any measure in the name of economy that the Senate does not consider to be wise and proper. If we only act on that rule, to yield to them to the utmost extent that we can do it without affecting the public service, and then stand where we believe the law ought not to be changed, there ought to be and can be no conflict between the two Houses to prevent the adjournment of Congress within the present fiscal year, or shortly after.

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. President, is not the logic of this bill a little different from the way in which the Senator from Ohio states it with regard to the compensation of members of Congress and the compensation of the great body of the officials at Washington—that is, the clerks in the Departments? When the salaries of the clerks were fixed at twelve, fourteen, sixteen, and eighteen hundred dollars, the salary of members of Congress was $3,000. The salary of members of Congress has been raised from three to five thousand dollars; the salaries of the clerks remain where they were fixed in 1853. Now, if we are to take the bill logically, it seems to me that the reduction of the compensation of clerks above $1,200—I think the bill cuts down 10 per cent. those above $1,200—then our own compensation should be 10 per cent. below what it was when these salaries were fixed. That would make it $2,700. If the other House desire to fix the compensation of members of Congress at $4,500, although I think it is too low; if they put that value on their own services and on ours also, I do not see why we may not consistently agree to that part of the bill while we resist the reduction of these salaries which are the same now as they were when ours were only three-fifths of what they are.

Mr. SHERMAN. I for one say to my friend that, if the House of Representatives insist on the reduction of the pay of members of Congress, at the next stage of this bill it will be within the power of any Senator to move to recede from this amendment, and I for one will vote to do so. If the House insists on reducing the salaries of members of Congress, at the next stage of this bill I certainly will vote to recede from our amendment restoring the amount.

Mr. HOWE. Allow me to ask the Senator if there is not a constitutional difficulty in the way of that?

Mr. SHERMAN. What is it?

Mr. HOWE. Cruel and unusual punishments shall not be inflicted. [Laughter.]

Mr. SHERMAN. They administer the punishment and we have to suffer from it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. INGALLS in the chair.) The question is on the amendment which has been read.

Mr. ANTHONY. I am reminded of an error I made. I said that at the time when the compensation of clerks was fixed at $1,200, $1,400, $1,600, and $1,800, the compensation of members of Congress was $3,000. I am informed that it was only $8 a day then.

Mr. SHERMAN. Eight dollars a day. It was changed in the summer of 1856 to $3,000 a year.

Mr. ANTHONY. Admitting the justice of reducing the compensation of clerks above $1,200, the logic of the bill requires that our compensation should be put at $7.20 a day. I do not know but that the $8 per day of members of Congress was below $1,200 a year, and they might escape in that way, but not otherwise.

Mr. SARGENT. Eight dollars a day during the session, I believe.

Mr. ANTHONY. During the session only, and the pay did not commence until the Senator or Member appeared in his seat.

Mr. WITHERS. Mr. President, I will say a word or two on the proposed amendment. While I am disposed to go as far as any man in the direction of economy and reducing the expenses of the Government, yet with regard to these salaries I do not think here is the line in which reduction can be most effectively consummated. I believe the extravagance with which this Government is administered, and which is made the subject of complaint by the people, arises not so much from the amount of salaries regularly paid to the officials as from the speculations and abuses which have crept into the Government, and which are very far in excess of its legitimate expenses. I believe that it is the duty of the Government to pay its employés, whether in the Senate Chamber or at the Clerk's table, a sufficient amount to support them. I believe that the salary of $5,000 per annum is not more than sufficient to support a member of Congress in the sphere in which he is expected to move; and, if I may be pardoned for making a personal allusion, I will say that I have thus found it in my experience. I have a large family; I am blessed, I am happy to say, with a large family. I am not blessed with a large portion of this world's goods. I am not extravagant in my personal habits, and yet I have found it just as much as I can do to support my family decently upon $5,000 per annum. I have no hesitancy in making that declaration to the Senate and to the country, and let it go for what it is worth. I shall vote, therefore, for putting the salary back to what it was before. I have no fears or apprehensions that my people will complain of it or that they will regard it as more than my services in this body are worth to them. I have nothing more to say, sir, on the subject.

Mr. ANTHONY. I suggest to the Senator in charge of this bill that the sections relating to compensation of members of Congress be passed over until we fix the compensation of the other officers of the Government and then treat all alike. If we leave the law as it is as to them, let our compensation stand; if we cut it down, let us cut ours down also.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. It will be very easy to come back to it if we shall commit that error.

Mr. SARGENT. We can make the change in the Senate.

Mr. MAXEY. Mr. President, I have always believed, and throughout life have acted upon the principle, that "the laborer is worthy of his hire." In the course of my life I have employed many people; I have always believed that it was right to pay them a fair and just compensation for the services rendered. In my professional duties as a lawyer, when at home, I have invariably charged what I believed to be a fair and just compensation for services rendered to my clients. I do not base that fee upon the footing or level of what probably would be charged by a young man who had just commenced his professional career, but I am governed by what I believe my services are worth. Now, while I may not be as valuable in the Senate Chamber as some other and more distinguished men, yet I believe that I am worth to the State of Texas, in a careful attention to the interests of the State—and no one will say that I am inattentive—the sum of $5,000 a year. I know the fact, and it is well known to the people of Texas, that when at home my income from my profession is more than double that money. I am losing money by being here, but I agreed to come here for that amount. While I would not vote for an increase of the salary of a member of Congress, I would not vote for a decrease of it. I have never yet heard throughout the length and breadth of the State of Texas, which I represent in part, the slightest objection to paying a member of Congress $5,000 a year, because that State is magnanimous and generous and her people expect and believe that a man should be paid according to the value of his services; and if a man is worth being in the Senate, if he ought to be here at all, he is worth $5,000 to his State; and if he is not worth $5,000 he had better step down and out, and let somebody come here that is worth $5,000. That is my view of it.

In short, the sentiment of the State that I represent is to act honorably toward public officers, those engaged in the public service, and not pay them a niggardly salary. Neither am I in favor of paying a large salary. Every one who has ever served here—and, as was said by the Senator from Virginia, I speak by experience—every one who has served in Congress with a family knows that it is impossible, if he is an honest man, to save money here at $5,000 a year. A thief can get rich at a dollar a day, if he will sell out his vote; but an honest man cannot possibly do more than support himself as a gentleman should live and as his State expects him to live at $5,000 a year. What principle may have been adopted in arriving at this 10 per cent. idea, this horizontal figure of 10 per cent., I do not know, because I have not investigated it. This particular item I do know about, and I shall vote on the amendments as they come up, one by one. I believe that the amendment made by the Senate Committee on Appropriations in putting the pay back to what it was is right, and I have yet to see the day or hour that I would not say by vote what I believed to be right. I have never been a demagogue in my life. I hope and trust in the Lord I never shall be.

Now, Mr. President, I know the fact that the country is suffering terribly by the depressed condition of financial affairs all through the land. We all know that. We know that since the panic of 1873 poverty has been knocking at the door of very, very many of the homes of this land; and I will go as far as the farthest in doing what

I believe to be right in the way of just retrenchment and just economy. But, sir, let us be just and right to ourselves and to everybody else. It is only a day or two ago that $750,000, more than double the amount here appropriated for this entire Senate, was voted out of the Treasury of the United States by us upon what I then believed and yet believe to be a sickly sentimentality. And yet here, when the pay of the embassadors of the States, representing thirty-seven States of the American Union, is to be fixed, the whole of our pay is fixed at a sum not one-half the amount that was given away upon a mere sickly sentimentality. I have some little knowledge of affairs. I would like to be controlled by what I regard as business in business transactions. I did not think that business, and I voted against it. I did not think it was right to the Government, and therefore I voted against it. I do think this is right, and I shall vote for it.

Mr. COCKRELL. Mr. President, the Senator from Iowa [Mr. WRIGHT] is quite indisposed to-day, and I have paired with him upon this bill. If he were here he would vote against the amendment restoring the President's salary to $50,000 and for adhering to the bill as reported from the House in that respect. In that I should concur with him. Upon other portions of the bill, so far as I have had time to examine it, I would vote against the amendments offered by the committee of the Senate, and he would vote for them.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported by the Committee on Appropriations, which has been read, in lines 10, 11, 12, and 13, striking out "thirty-three" and inserting "seventy," and striking out all after the word "dollars."

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The reading of the bill will be proceeded with.

The Chief Clerk continued the reading of the bill. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was in lines 18 and 19, to increase the appropriation for salary of "Secretary of the Senate, including compensation as disbursing officer," from $4,500 to $4,896.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 19, to strike out "horse" and insert "horses;" in line 20, to strike out "wagon" and insert "wagons;" and after the word "for" to strike out the words "his use, 500," and insert "the Secretary's office 1,200;" so as to read:

And for hire of horses and wagons for the Secretary's office, $1,200.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in lines 21 and 22, to increase the appropriation for salary of the Chief Clerk of the Senate from $2,500 to $3,000; and after the word "dollars," in line 22, to add:

And the additional sum of $1,000 while the said office is held by the present incumbent, and no longer.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 25, before the word "minute," to strike out the word "and;" in line 26, after the word "clerk," to strike out the words "at $2,250 each" and insert "and;" in line 28, after the word "thousand," to insert "five hundred and ninety-two;" and after the word "dollars" to insert the word "each;" so as to read:

Principal clerk, principal executive clerk, minute and journal clerk, and financial clerk in the office of the Secretary of the Senate, $2,592 each.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 29, after the word "librarian," to strike out the words "$1,800;" in line 30, before "clerks," to strike out "five" and insert "seven;" and in line 31, after the word "thousand," to insert the words "two hundred and twenty;" so as to read:

Librarian and seven clerks in the office of the Secretary of the Senate, at $2,220 each.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 32, to increase the appropriation for salary of clerk of printing records from $1,600 to $2,220.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in lines 33 and 34, to increase the appropriation for salary of five clerks in the office of the Secretary of the Senate from $1,800 each to $2,100 each.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 35, to increase the appropriation for salary of keeper of the stationery of the Senate from $1,500 to $2,102.40.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 37, to increase the appropriation for salary of one messenger in the office of the Secretary of the Senate from $1,200 to $1,296.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to insert after line 37 the words:

Four laborers in the office of the Secretary of the Senate.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to insert after line 38 the words:

One special policeman, $1,296.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 41, to increase the appropriation for salary of secretary to the Vice-President from $1,800 to $2,102.40.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 44, to increase the appropriation for salary of clerk to the Committee on Finance from $2,200 to $2,220.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 45, to increase the appropriation for salary of clerk to the Committee on Claims from $2,000 to $2,220.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to insert after the word "dollars," in line 47, the words:

Clerk to the Committee on Commerce, $2,220; clerk to the Committee on the Judiciary, $2,220; clerk to the Committee on Private Land Claims, $2,220.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 52, to increase the appropriation for salary of assistant keeper of the stationery from $1,200 to $1,800.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 54, to increase the appropriation for salary of Sergeant-at-Arms and Doorkeeper from $4,000 to $4,320.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 55, to increase the appropriation for salary of assistant doorkeeper from $2,000 to $2,592.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in lines 56 and 57, to increase the appropriation for salary of acting assistant doorkeeper from $1,800 to $2,592.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was after the word "dollars," in line 57, to strike out the words:

Chief messenger assisting Doorkeeper, $1,800.

And in lieu thereof to insert:

Three messengers, acting as assistant doorkeepers, at $1,800 each.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 61, to increase the appropriation for salary of Postmaster to the Senate from $2,000 to $2,100.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 62, to increase the appropriation for salary of assistant postmaster and mail-carrier from $1,800 to $2,088.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in lines 63 and 64, to increase the appropriation for salary of two mail-carriers from "$125 per month during the session," to "$1,200 each."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 66, to increase the appropriation for salary of superintendent of the document-room from $1,800 to $2,160.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 67, before the word "assistant" to strike out "one" and insert "two," and to strike out "assistant" and insert "assistants;" and in line 68, to strike out "$200" and insert "$440 each;" so as to read:

Two assistants in document-room, at $1,440 each.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in lines 69 and 70, to increase the appropriation for salary of superintendent of the folding-room from $1,800 to $2,160.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 71, after the word "one" to strike out "clerk" and insert "assistant;" so as to read:

One assistant in the folding-room, $1,200.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 72, before the word "messengers" to strike out "23" and insert "20," and to strike out the words "hundred and twenty-five dollars per month each during the session" and insert "thousand four hundred and forty dollars each;" so as to read:

Twenty messengers, at $1,440 each.

Mr. ANTHONY. I move to amend the amendment of the committee after line 72, by making the "twenty" read "twenty-one," and after the word "messengers" inserting "one of whom shall act as upholsterer under direction of the Sergeant-at-Arms."

That is to retain in service here a messenger who acts as upholsterer, which is very necessary in this large number of rooms, for carpeting and for chairs, &c. The Sergeant-at-Arms, whom I have consulted on the subject, has no doubt it will be an economy. Otherwise the same service will have to be obtained from without at much greater expense.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment, as amended, was agreed to.

The Chief Clerk continued the reading of the bill.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was in line 76, to increase the appropriation for salary of chief engineer of the Senate from $1,800 to $2,160.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 77 before the word "assistant" to strike out "two" and insert "three;" and in line 78, after "thousand," to strike out "two hundred" and insert "four hundred and forty;" so as to read:

Three assistant engineers, at $1,440 each.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 80, to increase the appropriation for salary of assistant engineer in charge of the Senate elevator from $1,200 to $1,440.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 81, to increase the appropriation for salary of two firemen from $900 each to $1,095 each.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 82, after the word "each" to insert the words:

Three skilled laborers, at $1,000 each.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 83, before the word "laborers" to strike out "seven" and insert "ten;" so as to read:

Ten laborers, at $720 each.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 84, to strike out the words "and one female" and insert "to pay Kate Dodson;" and in line 85, to strike out "600" and insert "720;" so as to read:

To pay Kate Dodson, in charge of the ladies' retiring-room, $720.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 86, after the words "telegraph operator" to strike out the words "at the rate of $100 per month;" so as to read:

Telegraph operator, during the session, $400.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 87, before the word "laborers" to strike out "ten" and insert "seventeen;" in lines 89 and 90, to strike out "2,400" and insert "4,080;" so as to read:

And seventeen laborers at the rate of $720 per annum during the session of the Senate, $4,080.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair calls the attention of the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ANTHONY] to the fact that his amendment will require an addition to the total footing in lines 91 and 92, which is the subject-matter of the next amendment.

Mr. ANTHONY. The Senator from Louisiana [Mr. WEST] will take charge of amending the aggregate to meet my amendment.

Mr. WEST. As there will evidently be a necessity to amend the total amount by the addition $1,440 according to the amendment offered by the Senator from Rhode Island, which was conceded by the Senate, I call the attention of the Senator in charge of the bill to the fact that there is an omission at the bottom of page 2, line 38, requiring an additional amount; and then we should make the alteration in lines 92 and 93 to correspond. It is an oversight in the bill. What amount is necessary to insert for the four laborers provided for in line 38?

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. Seven hundred and twenty dollars each.

Mr. WEST. Then I move to amend, after line 38, by adding the words "at $720 each."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WEST. Now I move to amend by changing the amount of "$161,682.80" to "$166,002.80," in lines 92 and 93, being the aggregate of all the items from line 15 to that point.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. The Senator is in error about that. Although the amendment in line 38 did not specify the sum, the computation was upon that basis.

Mr. WEST. Very good. I see where the error is. Then I withdraw the last amendment and make it embrace simply the amount as amended on motion of the Senator from Rhode Island and make it $163,120.80.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. That would be right.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Louisiana.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. I suggest that the Secretary read this bill by paragraphs, so that each paragraph be read through as it will read when amended. I think it would facilitate the consideration of the bill to adopt that course. I know it has been adopted elsewhere, and it would save much labor to the Secretary.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. By consent that order can be observed. If no objection is made, the bill will be read in that order.

The Chief Clerk continued the reading of the bill.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was in line 100, after the word "for," to strike out "twenty-one" and insert "twenty-eight," and, after the word "at," to strike out "5" and insert "6;" and in line 101, after the word "session," to strike out "12,600" and insert "20,328;" so as to read:

For twenty-eight clerks to committees, at $6 per day during the session, $20,328.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 103, after the words "Senate Chamber," to strike out the word "including;" and in line 107, after the word "employed," to strike out "four thousand two" and insert "five thousand four;" so as to read:

For fourteen pages for the Senate Chamber, two riding pages, one page for the Vice-President's room, and one page for the office of the Secretary of the Senate, at the rate of $2.50 per day while actually employed, $5,400.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 110, to increase the appropriation for hire of horses and mail-wagons for carrying the mails from $2,000 to $3,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was after the word "dollars" in line 110, to strike out the words:

And the Sergeant-at-Arms of the Senate is hereby directed to advertise in one of the daily papers in Washington, District of Columbia, for one week, for proposals for furnishing horses and wagons for carrying the mails, books, and other documents between the city post-office and the Departments and residences of members and the Senate post-office and folding-room and document room; said proposals to include for the carrying of said mails, books, boxes, and documents the use of three horses and wagons during the session of Congress, one of which shall be in use during the year; and he shall contract with the lowest responsible bidder for such service for the term of one year.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DAVIS. I suggest to the Clerk, if there is no objection—of course we can stop at any time—to read the bill as it would read if amended.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is the course now being pursued.

Mr. DAVIS. It will save time.

The Chief Clerk resumed the reading of the bill.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was in line 123, after the word "folding," to strike out "books;" so as to read:

For materials for folding, $4,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in lines 125 and 126, to strike out the words:

For labor in folding books, speeches, and pamphlets, $3,000.

And in lieu thereof to insert:

For four folders, at not exceeding $3 per day, under the direction of the superintendent of the folding-room, $3,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in lines 133, 134, and 135, in the item as to the price paid for folding the daily RECORD and speeches in the folding-room of the Senate, from not exceeding $2.50 to not exceeding $2 per thousand, and speeches from not exceeding $1.50 to not exceeding $1 per thousand.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 143, to increase the appropriation for reporting the debates and proceedings of the Senate from $22,500 to $25,000, and after the word "dollars" to insert "payable in equal monthly installments."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 152, before the word "lieutenants," to strike out "two" and insert "three," and, after the word "thousand," to strike out "two" and insert "six;" so as to read:

Three lieutenants at $1,600 each.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 153, before the word "privates," to strike out "twenty-one" and insert "twenty-four;" and in line 154, after the word "thousand" to insert "400;" so as to read:

Twenty-four privates, at $1,400 each.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 154, before the word "watchmen," to strike out "four" and insert "eight;" and in line 155 after the word "at" to strike out "900" and insert "1,000;" so as to read:

And eight watchmen, at $1,000 each.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 156, to increase the total appropriation for the Capitol police from $28,600 to $48,400.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in lines 162 and 163, to increase the appropriation for salary of Members of the House of Representatives and Delegates from Territories from $1,359,000 to $1,550,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 164, after the word "dollars," to strike out the words:

And from and after the 30th of June next, the compensation of said Members and Delegates shall be $4,500 per annum.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 171, after the word "Representatives," to strike out the words "4,700" and insert:

Including compensation as disbursing-officer of the contingent fund, $4,896.

So as to read:

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 174, to strike out "horse" and insert "horses," and to strike out "wagon" and insert "wagons;" and after "the" to strike out "Clerk, five hundred" and insert "clerk's office, one thousand two hundred;" so as to read:

And for hire of horses and wagons for use of the Clerk's office, $1,200.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 176, after the word "clerk" to

;nsert the word "and;" and after "journal clerk" to insert "$3,000 each;" so as to read:

Chief Clerk and journal clerk, $3,000 each.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 177, after "reading clerks" to strike out the word "and," and after "tally clerk" to strike out the words "five in all, at $2,250 each; for;" in line 179, after "enrolling clerk," to strike out "four" and insert "seven;" and in line 180, after the word "thousand," to insert "five hundred and ninety-two;" so as to read:

Two reading clerks, tally clerk, disbursing clerk, file clerk, printing and bill clerk, and enrolling clerk, seven in all, at $2,592 each.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in lines 182 and 183, after "newspaper clerk" to strike out the words "superintendent of document-room;" in line 184 to strike out the word "engineer" and insert "assistant librarian;" and after the word "at" to strike out "1,800" and insert "2,160;" so as to read:

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in lines 284, 285, and 286, in the items as to folding in the folding-room of the House of Representatives, to reduce the price for folding the daily RECORD from not exceeding $2.50 per thousand to not exceeding $2 per thousand, and for folding speeches from not exceeding $1.50 per thousand to not exceeding $1 per thousand.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. On page 12, line 270, it strikes me that the word "current" should be stricken out in the clause—

And the fourteen messengers on the soldiers' roll shall be employed during the current year.

That should read "the next fiscal year," undoubtedly. We cannot be appropriating for this year. That has already been appropriated for. I therefore move to strike out "current" and insert "next fiscal."

Mr. DAVIS. This is a House item. I am inclined to think they meant this to be just as it is.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. For this year?

Mr. DAVIS. Yes, sir.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. We have already appropriated for that. We can amend it and arrange it in conference.

Mr. DAVIS. Looking at it in that light, if there should be an error either way it can be arranged in conference.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. Or in the Senate when the bill shall come out of committee.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. ALLISON in the chair.) The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Maine.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Chief Clerk resumed the reading of the bill.

The next amendment was to strike out after the word "dollars," in line 290, the words:

And the Postmaster of the House of Representatives is hereby directed to advertise in one of the daily papers in Washington, District of Columbia, for one week, for proposals for furnishing horses and wagons for carrying the mails, books, and other documents between the city post-office and the House post-office and folding-room and document-room, and the Departments and residences of members; said proposals to include for carrying of said mails, books, boxes, and documents the use of seven horses and wagons during the session of Congress, two of which shall be in use during the year; and he shall contract with the lowest responsible bidder for such service for the term of one year.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to insert after line 321 the following clauses:

Public printing:

For compensation of the Congressional Printer, and the clerks and messengers in his office, $15,114.

For contingent expenses of his office, namely: For stationery, postage, advertising, traveling expenses, horses and wagons, and miscellaneous items, $2,500.

Mr. EATON. I do not quite understand this. On looking at the bill I discover that it is not an alteration of the text in the House bill, but an addition by the committee of the Senate. I see here no alteration, no change in a sum, but new matter entirely.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. It is new matter entirely; that is to say, new in this particular bill; but it was left out and is restored.

Mr. EATON. And under the same great claim of law!

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. Precisely. It is one of the branches of the service which is entirely omitted by the House bill.

Mr. EATON. There is so much talk about this congressional printing that I am very sorry to see this back here.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. The Senator will see that, whatever question may arise, we have the establishment and must provide for it. Whatever may be done, the establishment is there to be maintained.

Mr. EATON. Will the committee inform us why this was left out in the House?

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I am not advised about it. If I am right in my inference, I should say they are investigating the subject; and I have seen in the papers—not to speak of anything that transpires in the House—that there was a proposition somewhere to contract for the printing, but nothing has transpired in the House yet, I believe, on that topic. Of course, when we had before us a bill to appropriate for all the service established by law, we presented this as a service not provided for in the House appropriation bill. If the law is changed, this will go out as a matter of course; but, as at present advised, it seemed to the committee that there was nothing to be done but to make this appropriation.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Chief Clerk resumed the reading of the bill.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was in lines 331 and 332, in the appropriation for the Library of Congress, to increase the appropriation for salary of the Librarian from $3,600 to $4,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 332, before the word "assistants," to strike out "thirteen" and insert "sixteen;" in line 333, after "thousand," to strike out "two hundred and fifty" and insert "five hundred;" in line 334, after "thousand," to strike out "six" and insert "eight;" in line 335, after "each," to strike out "two" and insert "three;" in line 336, after "thousand," to strike out "four hundred and fifty" and insert "six hundred;" in line 337, after "thousand," to strike out "three hundred" and insert "four hundred and forty;" in line 338, after the word "each," to strike out "two" and insert "three;" in line 339, after the word "each," to strike out "one" and insert "two;" and in lines 340 and 341, after the word "all," to strike out "23,410," and insert "29,340;" so as to read:

And for sixteen assistant librarians, three at $2,500 each, two at $1,800 each, three at $1,600 each, two at $1,440 each, three at $1,200 each, two at $1,000, and one at $960 per annum; in all, $29,340.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 359, before the word "assistants," to insert the word "for;" and in line 361, after the word "Congress," to insert the words "$6,000;" so as to read:

For assistants in Botanic Garden and green houses and two additional laborers, under the direction of the Library Committee of Congress, $6,000.

Mr. HOWE. On this part of the bill I desire at some time, when it shall suit the convenience of the Senator in charge of the bill, to propose several amendments.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. If it is agreeable to the Senator to allow the bill to be read through, it will then be open for amendments from all quarters.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair would suggest to the Senator from Wisconsin to present his amendments and have them printed.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. That has already been don

Mr. HOWE. Here is an amendment moved by the Committee on Appropriations. If it is agreed to, will it be subject to amendment hereafter?

Mr. SHERMAN. Certainly.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. When we are in the Senate.

Mr. HOWE. But in Committee of the Whole?

Mr. SHERMAN. Not as to amount.

Mr. HOWE. The committee proposed to fix the sum at $6,000. It ought to be about $8,000.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. What is the point?

Mr. HOWE. In line 361 you propose to fix that appropriation at $6,000. We are of the opinion that it should be about $8,000. I have not the figures before me, but they are before the Committee on Appropriations. The question is, if this amendment is agreed to now can it be changed in committee?

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. The Senator has proposed an amendment which amends that paragraph in several particulars. I suggest to him to allow it to go.

Mr. HOWE. Be passed over?

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. Yes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Chair understand the Senator from Wisconsin to offer an amendment striking out "six" and inserting "eight."

Mr. HOWE. No, sir; I accept the suggestion of the Senator from Maine that this paragraph be passed over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understands the whole paragraph is to be reserved from line 358 to line 365.

The Chief Clerk resumed the reading of the bill.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was in line 368, to increase the appropriation for salary of clerk in the office of public buildings and grounds from $1,300 to $1,400.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 371, before the word "gardener," to strike out "public" and insert "landscape;" and after the word "thousand," to strike out "2" and insert "8;" so as to read:

For landscape gardener, $1,800.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 376, to increase the appropriation for "a foreman and laborers employed in the public grounds" from $13,256 to $21,456.

Mr. EATON. I should like to ask the chairman of the committee how this large difference comes between his committee and the committee of the House? I see "for a foreman and laborers employed in the public grounds $13,256" in the House bill, and the amendment is $21,456. Is that a matter of law? Are there just so many men to be employed at just such a price?

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. That is a matter of discretion entirely.

Mr. EATON. The discretion is larger when exercised by the committee of the Senate.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. The answer to that is, that this is the usual appropriation. All that can be said about an appropriation of that kind is that of course the Senate committee have no means of knowing precisely what number of laborers are required; but it has been found in years of experience that that number or about that number is required, and so, acting upon former appropriations and the supposition arising from the service as established in that way, the committee propose the amendment.

Mr. EATON. I would suggest to my honorable friend that while I am very ready to vote to keep as many men in employment as are necessary for the public good, as well as for the interests of the individual laborers, labor is not as high as it was two years ago and the same amount of money will hire more laborers to-day than could have been hired for it two or three years ago or even last year. The price of labor, I know, is reduced.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. If the Senator will look at the bill carefully, with the estimates and appropriations of last year, he will see that the Committee on Appropriations, as to all these contingent expenses and as to the employment of laborers, have been disposed to meet the views expressed by the bill from the House just as far as was practicable. In regard to this particular measure, all I have to say is that this sum is precisely what was appropriated for the same purpose last year. It may be when it comes to a committee of conference that we shall have to take off half of it.

Mr. EATON. I would rather increase the contingent expenses than the fixed salaries for such a purpose, so as to employ labor.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. The House of Representatives may say "that is one of the questions where we have a discretion," and we may have to recognize that fact.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was to insert after line 385:

Provided, That the architect of the Capitol shall have the care and superintendence of the Capitol, including lighting, heating, and ventilating, and repairs; and shall submit, through the Secretary of the Interior, estimates thereof: And provided further, That all the duties relative to the Capitol building, heretofore performed by the officer in charge of public buildings and grounds, shall hereafter be performed by the architect of the Capitol, whose office shall be in the Capitol building, and who shall have the appointment and direction of the employés connected therewith.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. I ask the chairman of the committee to allow this amendment to be passed over. I am not sure that the phraseology is quite right. I think the purpose of the amendment is correct, but that some of the duties are performed by other officers of the Capitol intended to be embraced now in this amendment which would not be included. It would be therefore just and proper that this amendment should be revised a little hereafter.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. It may be passed over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be passed over.

The next amendment was in line 398, in the appropriations for employés at the Executive Mansion, before the word "night," to strike out "two" and insert "one;" to strike out the word "watchmen" and insert "watchman;" and after "at" to strike out the words "$1,000 each" and insert "$900;" so as to read:

One night watchman, at $900.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was after the word "dollars," in line 399, to insert:

One night usher, at $1,200.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 400, to strike out the word "policemen" and insert the word "day ushers;" and in line 401 after the word "thousand" to insert the words "two hundred;" so as to read:

Two day ushers at $1,200 each.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 403, to increase the total appropriation for employés at the Executive Mansion from $7,264 to $7,764.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 417, after the word "States," to strike out the words:

Up to the 4th of March 1877, at the rate of.

In line 418, after the word "dollars," to strike out the words:

Per annum, $33,611.11; and from said day to the 30th of June, 1877, both days inclusive, at the rate of $25,000 per annum, $8,135; in all $41,746.11; and on and after the 4th day of March, 1877, the salary of the President of the United States shall be $25,000 per annum;

So as to read:

For compensation of the President of the United States, $50,000.

Mr. McCREERY. Mr. President, it is a source of profound regret that those who are disposed to curtail the expenditures of the Government by a reduction of the salaries of its officers have had the misfortune in each and every instance to begin in the wrong way or at the wrong place. What that good and perfect way may be, or where the precise starting-point could have been made in order to meet the individual views of the members of this body, it is difficult to determine; nor is it material, according to my understanding, since it is contemplated that there should be a general reduction of salaries, from the highest to the lowest position under this Government, wherever the joint action of the two Houses of Congress can bring about that result. If officials shall ascertain that their salaries are less than a fair compensation for their services, their resignation at any moment will relieve them of their responsibility and stop their unrequited toil.

It has been often and strenuously contended in behalf of high salaries that they are necessary to secure the best talent in the country. They have been frequently and largely augmented, but there are few who will seriously assert that the standard of integrity and capacity has been elevated in consequence. Have we not reason to apprehend that the truth will be found in the reverse of the proposition? There are some too who, like the President, have such reverence for exalted position that they would appropriate large amounts of public money to enable the incumbents to maintain the dignity of their places. Dignity is a very fine thing and comprises the stock in trade of very many worthy and respectable gentlemen; but fine as it is, the powers of analysis have never been able to assign its market value. Dignity is so apt to degenerate into pomposity, pride, and vanity, that it might be a dangerous experiment to offer very large premiums for its successful cultivation. Besides, the faithful discharge of the duty pertaining to any of the Departments of this Government will be sufficient to engross the time and attention of any man; and the gratification of his personal tastes had as well be postponed to his retirement, when he may wear as much dignity as he pleases without detriment to the public service.

It is believed as a general proposition that the decay of public virtue and the undermining of public liberty in all countries may be dated from the exact period at which the salaries of their officials had reached the highest point. Liberty is endangered when power, privilege, patronage, and wealth are monopolized by the few, while the multitude drift into poverty and neglect. Public employment may be so remunerative as to become entirely incompatible with the freedom of elections, and that freedom may be achieved by a reduction of salaries with far greater certainty than by the enactment of penal statutes.

One of the objections to high salaries is that the incumbent occupies too much of his time in devising plans for spending his money, and if his expenditures are lavish the influence is hurtful to all around him. The vice of extravagance is as contagious as the small-pox, and more destructive than the Asiatic cholera. Give the President $140 a day for pocket-money, and half as much more in the shape of perquisites, besides house rent, furniture, and fuel, and you will preach in vain to his subordinates of economy and simplicity. The laws of fashion are inexorable, and men, women, and children will plunge into the vortex even though ruin and death should be the consequence.

It has been truly said that we are imitative beings, and it is one of the peculiarities of our nature that we copy the follies, the defects, and even the misfortunes of others, in preference to imitating their virtues. A tree fell upon Ben Hardin when he was a young man, crushing his right hand so that he was never able afterward to touch his thumb with his fingers. When he became distinguished it was painful to witness the performance of his more enthusiastic admirers whose right hands formed a backward curve even more unnatural than his own.

In view, then, of the weakness of human nature, let us not offer the temptation of high salaries to lead our officials into the frivolities of fashion. But, on the contrary, let us make an effort at the inculcation of lessons and habits of republican simplicity and republican economy. The Senate has given the right vote already, a vote which will receive the sanction of nine-tenths of your constituencies. Let us neither be persuaded nor driven to retreat from the strong position which we have deliberately taken. Let us make no compromise with the salary grab, which has been rebuked and denounced by the American people from one end of this Union to the other.

I hope the amendment will be voted down.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. McCREERY. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I wish to say a single word about this proposition. Of course we can make no change which will affect the President's salary now. Obviously my friend from Kentucky does not expect to reduce the salary of the President of the United States at the present time. The principle upon which we have been acting is to provide the salaries according to law and wait for future consideration to change the law which is to affect salaries in the future. I suggest, therefore, that the Senator's proposition at best would not be very effectual. It could not by any possibility be effective on the President's salary until after the 4th of March next, and we should only be legislating at any event for the residue of the time from the 4th of March until the 30th of June. Therefore, it strikes me that my honorable friend must see that the amendment is immaterial. As Congress convenes again next year, of course it can fix such salary at that time as it chooses; but from the 1st of July, when this bill takes effect, until the 4th of March we can do nothing toward affecting by legislation the salary of the President of the United States. I suggest to my honorable friend that he ought not to urge any opposition to the amendment of the committee.

Mr. SARGENT. Mr. President, a bill has passed both Houses by the ordinary majority, I believe in neither House reaching two-thirds, certainly not in the Senate, reducing the President's salary after next March to $25,000. That bill in the ordinary course of legislative proceeding went to the President, and the President has returned it with his objections. It is now pending in this body, having been reported back from the Committee on Civil Service and Retrenchment with the recommendation that it pass notwithstanding the veto. A two-thirds vote of the Senate and of the House will make that bill a law; and if it becomes a law, of course after the 4th of March next the salary of the President will be but $25,000. The Constitution plainly points out this method by which it may become a law notwithstanding the objections of the President, and it seems to me it would be more in consonance with the dignity of the Senate to take the direct question upon the passage of that bill notwithstanding the veto of the President, rather than to incorporate a provision in this bill to the surprise of the Executive, which would compel him either to veto a bill necessary to the whole civil service of the Government or yield the objection which he has signified to us, as was his right under the Constitution of the United States.

Therefore it seems to me, whatever might be the private and individual opinions of Senators upon that bill, and however they might vote upon the question of passing it notwithstanding the objections of the President, that this is hardly fair to the executive office and hardly recognizing the constitutional right of the President to pass upon that question when presented to him in the proper form.

This consideration certainly has very great weight in my mind, and I suggest to the Senator from Kentucky whether we ought not to refrain from bringing coercion to bear upon the President of the United States after he has constitutionally and fairly presented his objection to this particular legislation. For that reason I think the amendment of the Committee on Appropriations should be adopted, irrespective of what individual Senators may think should be the fate of the other bill when it comes up for action.

Mr. MORTON. Mr. President, when the bill reducing the salary of the Executive to $25,000 was before the Senate I voted for it for satisfactory reasons, and I will do so again should it be presented. When the diplomatic appropriation bill was before the Senate the question came up in regard to the amendments reducing the salaries of foreign ministers, consuls, &c. I took the ground then that the office of the Committee on Appropriations and the office of an appropriation bill was to make appropriations to meet the demands then provided for by law; that it was not the office of an appropriation committee to consider whether an officer should have a certain salary, but it was the office of that committee to make appropriations to meet what the law demanded already for his salary; that if the law gave to a foreign minister a certain amount as his salary, the office of the appropriation committee was to make an appropriation to meet that, and not to consider the question whether his salary ought to be cut down one-fourth or one-half; that that was a question which should go to the Committee on Foreign Relations and be the subject of a distinct and separate act; that if it was competent for the Appropriation Committees to consider the amount of salaries due to officers of the United States, it would draw to those committees nearly the entire business of the Government, and one committee in each House could not attend to it; that it was utterly impossible.

Therefore I think the duty of this committee is to make the appropriation for the President's salary and for other salaries according to the law as it now stands. If those salaries are too high, the law ought to be changed; but as to what changes should be made in salaries in regard to the office of President or foreign ministers or consuls or judges or matters of that kind, these are things for separate legislation, to be considered by the committees to which they naturally belong, and should be properly and fully considered. It is not in the capacity of the Committee on Appropriations, however able it may be, to consider and understand all these questions, and thus virtually to absorb to itself the whole administration of the Government.

Mr. LOGAN. I merely wish to say a word in reference to this amendment. When the bill was before the Senate reducing the President's salary after the 4th of March next, I gave the same vote that has been mentioned by the Senator from Indiana, in favor of the bill, but this is a very different proposition. This is a proposition by the Committee on Appropriations, as I understand it, to appropriate the money now that the law says is the amount the President shall receive. By striking out that amendment we should say in an appropriation bill that the President shall not have that amount of money which the law gives him, but that he may have a claim against the Government for it, and therefore may go to the courts or wherever he has a right to go in order to obtain his salary. I do not suppose there is any Senator—and I listened with a great deal of pleasure to my friend from Kentucky, as I always do—who desires to put himself in the position of antagonizing the law itself. As was well said by the Senator from California, if the law is wrong we should repeal it, but as long as it is the law we should conform to it. We made the law ourselves. This very Senate passed the bill.

Mr. BOGY. Will the Senator permit me to ask him a question? Does the present bill only appropriate $25,000 as the salary of the President when the law allows him $50,000 a year?

Mr. LOGAN. Yes, sir; that is the proposition of the House. The House bill appropriates but $25,000 when the law allows him $50,000. The committee of the Senate move to strike out the $25,000 and allow the appropriation to stand as the law does. That is the way I understand it. As the bill came from the House it reads:

> For compensation of the President of the United States up to the 4th of March, 1877, at the rate of $50,000 per annum, $33,611.11; and from said day to the 30th of June, 1877, both days inclusive, at the rate of $25,000 per annum, $8,135.

Mr. INGALLS. To commence at the expiration of the present term. It gives the President at the rate of $50,000 to the end of the term.

Mr. BOGY. Yes; I understand the bill appropriates at the rate of $50,000 until the next 4th of March.

Mr. LOGAN. Certainly; and after that it appropriates at the rate of $25,000. That is correct, is it not?

Mr. SHERMAN. It changes the salary after the 4th of March.

Mr. LOGAN. It changes the salary, but the committee of the Senate move to strike out the words which change it, leaving it at $50,000, as fixed by law.

Mr. INGALLS. It does not change the salary of the incumbent.

Mr. LOGAN. Not at all. I understand that. Of course it does not change the salary of the incumbent. I am not speaking of that. That we have no right to do under the Constitution. I am speaking of the law as it exists, applying to the present incumbent and to his successor.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. If the Senator will allow me, the bill as it came from the House provides at the rate of $50,000, as established by law, up to the 4th of March.

Mr. LOGAN. Certainly, up to 1877; and then after that at the rate of $25,000.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. Of course, that does two things. It repeals the present salary, and contemplates establishing another salary. That is a question not within the jurisdiction of the committee. It is impossible for us to consider that question any way. We could concur in it blindly; but in doing that we should not perform our duty in regard to it. It is our duty to appropriate the salaries as fixed by law extending to a certain period.

Mr. LOGAN. It goes beyond the 4th of March.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. It goes beyond the 4th of March, so that there was nothing left in the world to the committee, obeying the obligations of the law, but to strike out the provision and appropriate at the rate of $50,000, which they have done.

Mr. LOGAN. That is the way I understood it precisely, although the Senator from Missouri perhaps misunderstood me. I said that the law as it exists now allows $50,000 per annum for the President; that this bill appropriates $50,000 up to the 4th of March next, and that after that it appropriates $25,000, according to the House; and the recommendation of the Committee on Appropriations of the Senate is to strike out $25,000 after the 4th of March, as I understand the chairman of the committee, leaving it as the law now stands.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. Yes, sir.

Mr. LOGAN. That is exactly what I was saying. Otherwise we should be undertaking here in the Senate, by refusing to appropriate money under the law, to reduce the salary, a thing we have no right to do. As long as the bill runs beyond the 4th of March next—as long as it carries the appropriations—it must conform to the law, or else it is no appropriation bill under the law; that is, it does not comply with the law.

In reference to another point, I desire to say in answer to my friend from Kentucky that this seems to me to be—I will not use the word "dare"—but it seems to me to be thrusting in the face of the President, to force him to do that which he has told us he will not do. That is to say, the President has said by his veto of what is called the salary bill for the President that he will not agree that the salary shall be reduced, and that is a question for us to determine on his veto. It is now proposed to say to him, "Although we have not acted on your veto, yet we will thrust the same thing in your face in an appropriation bill, and we will see whether you will veto that or not." That is the meaning of this provision, and nothing else. You can soften the term as much as you choose; you may talk about salaries just as you please, and about their being too high or too low, but that is not the question. The question is, Shall the Congress of the United States appropriate money according to the law as the law exists at the time the appropriation is made?

Mr. MCCREERY. If my friend will allow me a word, I will say that I thrust nothing in the President's face offensively. I come here to discharge my duty as a legislator.

Mr. LOGAN. The Senator will not understand me as saying that he individually thrusts anything in the President's face. I say that this bill itself is thrusting into the President's face a direct proposition to him to go back on what he has already done by forcing him to sign this bill. I do not say that the Senator himself intends any such thing. I only mean that that is what the bill does, without any intention perhaps; but that is the meaning of it. I do not claim that any one intends it. I only say that if the Senator himself, or any other Senator entertaining the same views that he does in reference to the reduction of salaries, had as President sent a veto to the House or Senate in reference to a bill, and if an appropriation bill coming up as this does before the action of Congress on that veto message, the two Houses should put the very same proposition in that appropriation bill without acting on his veto message and should send it to him, my judgment is that the Senator himself would say, "Gentlemen, you have got to act on my veto message; I cannot sign your bill." Therefore I say it is thrusting in the face of the President a proposition which we have not acted on. That is the meaning of the bill.

As I said, I voted for the bill reducing the salary when it passed the Senate. I do not know whether I shall vote for it or not again. That is a matter which I shall act in reference to according to my judgment at the time; but the right way to do is to bring the bill up and see how we shall vote.

We took the ground on the first appropriation bill presented to the Senate at this session that we would appropriate in accordance with the law. That was the ground the Senate took, looking on that as being the office of an appropriation bill, the function that the Appropriation Committee was to discharge. We have stood by it. If we were right then, we are right now. Hence, I say, we ought to appropriate money in accordance with the law requiring the money. If the law is wrong, we ought to repeal the law, but not reduce appropriations when the law requires the amount of money allowed to the persons, no matter whether officers, contractors, or others, entitled to it. Their personality makes no difference. You leave the amount in excess of the appropriation as a claim against the Government, to produce litigation and trouble; and that is all that it amounts to.

Mr. MCMILLAN. Mr. President, I think this is a very striking illustration of the vice of introducing positive legislation into an appropriation bill. This bill as it comes from the House appropriates, as I understand, at the rate of $50,000 for the President's salary during the present year, and subsequent to that reduces the appropriation to the rate of $25,000, and in the same clause of the appropriation bill is a positive legislative provision that on and after the 4th of March, 1877, the salary of the President shall be $25,000 per annum.

We have here affirmative legislation upon a matter distinct from the appropriation bill. We have pending in the Senate now the veto of the President of the United States upon a bill embracing the subject-matter of the President's salary, and that is to come up before the Senate for its action. This same provision now is introduced into this appropriation bill, and if it is retained there, a majority of the Senate can pass this provision, and the President will be required either to approve that law or to veto the whole appropriation bill. There is an instance of coercion brought to bear upon the Executive which never should be tolerated by the legislative body of the Government; and, for one, it would be astonishing to me if the Senate of the United States should ever consent to such a provision as that.

I voted against the reduction of the President's salary when that bill was here before. I shall vote in favor of sustaining the veto of the President upon that bill. I have no doubt upon what the policy of the Government should be in regard to the salary of the President; and so far as I am concerned I act upon what I consider to be sound judgment in fixing that salary. But independent of that question, it seems to me that this is a striking instance of the viciousness of this kind of legislation, and I do hope that it will not meet with approbation in the Senate.

Mr. MAXEY. When the bill reducing the President's salary to $25,000 was before the Senate, I voted for the reduction. Among the reasons which I had, and which I believe I gave, was that the increase was tacked to an appropriation bill, and that the Congress of the United States had swept off as far as was within its power all the back-salary law. Here we had the opportunity of bringing the law back to what it was aforetime by making it operate on the President from and after the 4th of March next. I voted then in that way because I thought it right, and I shall vote again in the same way.

The Appropriation Committee of the House, it occurs to me, made the appropriation correctly, making the appropriation, as will be seen by reference to the part proposed to be stricken out, at the rate of $50,000 per annum up to and including the 4th day of March, and from and after that date at the rate of $25,000 per annum. It will be borne in mind that the bill reducing the President's salary to $25,000 passed both Houses of Congress, went to the President, was returned to the House where it originated with his objections. The bill, then, is simply held in abeyance for the action of Congress, which has a right to pass the bill over that veto by the vote of two-thirds of each House. Now suppose that bill does receive the vote of two-thirds of each House, then the President's salary from and after the 4th of March will be only $25,000; and yet this bill, as amended, would make an appropriation of $50,000 to meet the $25,000 salary in that case. That does not look to me very reasonable. Suppose, however, that the appropriation shall be made at the rate of $25,000 per annum and that the two Houses shall fail to sustain the other bill by a vote of two-thirds. That bill would therefore fall and the law would remain as it was aforetime. It would be entirely proper for those who entertain the opinion I do about it to vote then to increase the appropriation to what the law required; but, as I do believe the $25,000 is right, that the bill as it passed before is right, and that it is only held in abeyance for the action of the two Houses, as they have the constitutional right to act notwithstanding the President's veto, I shall vote for the $25,000, or rather I shall vote against the amendment of the Senate committee and sustain the same vote that I gave before, reducing the salary to $25,000.

Now it is said (and the Senator from Minnesota makes that point) that a portion of the clause stricken out proposes original, substantive legislation, that from and after the 4th day of March, 1877, the salary shall be only $25,000. In so far as that part of it is concerned, I do not think it ought to be there, because a proper bill was passed in both Houses and sent to the President for his signature, vetoed by him, and that bill does settle the question as an original, substantive bill in and of itself properly coming before the two Houses for their action; and that is the way the question should be settled.

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. President, we have just decided, and I think properly, that our compensation shall be $5,000 a year, which is one-fifth of the compensation of the President of the United States. When the compensation of the President was fixed at $25,000 the compensation of members of Congress, I think, was less than $1,500 a year. The Senator from Ohio can tell me.

Mr. SHERMAN. Six dollars a day.

Mr. ANTHONY. Then certainly the original relation between the President and members of Congress as to salary was fixed at about ten to one, and now we propose to make it five to one.

Mr. KELLY. Mr. President, on the 3d of March, 1873, in an appropriation bill, the salary of the President of the United States was increased from $25,000 to $50,000; the pay of Senators and members of Congress was increased from $5,000 to $7,500. I suppose that every member of the Senate has a very vivid recollection of the condemnation of that portion of that appropriation bill. It was so severely condemned that two or three bills were introduced into the Senate and I suppose half a dozen into the other House on the very first day of the next session, to repeal that portion of the law which increased the salary of members of Congress. Nothing was said about that clause which increased the salary of the President, for the simple reason that it could not be constitutionally decreased, the Constitution providing that the salary of the President shall be neither increased nor diminished during his term of office. If it could have been repealed in toto, unquestionably it would have been done.

This, now, is the first opportunity we have had, excepting the bill that passed a few days ago and which has been vetoed, of restoring the law to what it was formerly as to the President, of going back to the law as it existed before the condemnation of the act increasing these salaries. It is true that our bill has been vetoed, but for the life of me I cannot see why the simple fact that the President has vetoed it should make a change in the opinion of any Senator who voted for that bill. I voted for the decrease of salary. I voted for it for the simple reason that I considered that that whole act was condemned by the voice of the people, and I cannot see the reason why we should not repeal the other objectionable portion when we have the opportunity. That opportunity came a few days ago. I voted for the reduction of the salary, and I cannot see now why I should change my vote. If it was right then, I think I ought to give the same vote now. When that bill shall be presented for action which has been vetoed, I will vote to pass the bill notwithstanding the veto, and for the same reason I shall vote now as I would vote on that occasion and as I voted before.

Mr. HAMLIN. Mr. President, I gave my vote, which was in accordance with my judgment, against the bill reducing the salary of the President of the United States; and it was a matter of gratification to myself when his objections to that bill were received here in this body. I felt thankful that the President had the independence to veto that bill, and to state, in the manly, straightforward manner in which he did, the reasons for his objections. I have read the newspapers, sir; they furnish us a variety of information in these days upon all subjects, and they teach a high code of morals, as they say; but I have not seen in any press of any authority a single word that has not commended the veto message of the President of the United States. I have seen in many democratic papers—I do not see so much of those as I do of those who harmonize with my own opinions—but I have seen no objection anywhere; and, broadcast over the land, there has come to be, so far as anything can be universal, a universal approbation of that veto message; and why? Because $50,000 is a paltry sum for the Chief Executive of this country. He is the man to bestow the hospitalities of your nation; and there is running through the minds of all our good people a respect for the Government; and they want to see those hospitalities in a moderate degree bestowed. They produce their impression upon the foreigner who comes here; he knows what are the hospitalities of other governments; and the sum you afford your Executive to bestow those hospitalities, which are right and appropriate, and which commend themselves to the good judgment of all men, can be discharged but in a very humble degree by the limited sum of $50,000.

Now, to come to this question, there are some reasons why this amendment ought to be adopted, and I will state those: In looking around and in casting ahead, I see that we must all exercise the Christian virtue of patience; we have got to live here in this hot atmosphere through the long summer months, and it may be a very good reason that this clause should remain in the bill, because we know every one of us that it will share the same fate with the Executive that the bill separately did—reducing that salary; and in that patient virtue which we all must cultivate we shall have a severe test of it perhaps. It will not take us more than two or three weeks longer to originate another appropriation bill and pass it through this body after this shall have been vetoed by the President. I assume he would do it; he cannot do otherwise. We may as well see that and look it in the face.

Upon a bill which contains nothing but the express provision of reducing that salary, I can see no reason why a man who voted for that bill should vote to sustain the veto; but when we see the reasons which the Executive has given, and the reasons which will compel him to do the same thing with this bill, I ask if it is wise, I ask if it is statesman-like, I ask if it is of any earthly use to pursue this course? It may be gratifying to individuals to put this clause here. But for what good? Cui bono? I should like very well to know what good it can do. It can do no earthly possible good. It does seem to me, therefore, when I come to the reasons which would control my vote not to put it in, that, for the reasons which I have stated, I would not vote for the provision, because I do not believe in it, and therefore I shall vote to strike it out. But if I held the opinion which other Senators do and were in favor of reducing the salary, I would not vote for it here, but I would vote for it and meet it in a distinct proposition by itself. I would do so because we are admonished of what must necessarily be the result if it is put in here.

I hope the Senate will have the wisdom not to load this bill in this way.

Mr. CLAYTON. When the proposition to reduce the President's salary was before the Senate originally, I voted for it; and when that proposition comes before the Senate again to be considered in connection with the President's veto, with the lights now before me, I shall vote again for the proposition to reduce the salary. But it seems to me that the proposition is one which now requires a two-thirds vote of this body. Until that two-thirds vote is had and the proposition is disposed of, I should regard it as an improper thing to anticipate what the Senate may do or may not do by a clause in an appropriation bill. I say that I shall, when that proposition comes up in its proper shape, vote to decrease this salary; but until it is determined by a two-thirds vote of the Senate that the salary shall be reduced to $25,000, I cannot vote for a proposition of this character in an appropriation bill.

Mr. WEST. The Senate has now been in continuous and diligent session for five hours, and has made more than ordinary progress on an appropriation bill of this character. The weather is warm, and there is a proposition now pending here upon which I presume many of our colleagues, not anticipating it to-day, would be glad to put themselves on record. I move, therefore, with a view to give them an opportunity to do so, that the Senate do now adjourn.

Mr. HOWE. I want an executive session.

Mr. WEST. I will change my motion and move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After six minutes spent in executive session the doors were re-opened, and (at five o'clock and two minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

FRIDAY, June 2, 1876.

The House met at twelve o'clock m. Prayer by Rev. J. G. BUTLER, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

CONSULAR AND DIPLOMATIC APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. SINGLETON. I rise to a privileged question. When I made some days ago the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses upon the bill making appropriations for the consular and diplomatic service of the Government it should have appeared on the Journal that the committee was discharged. I ask that that may be done.

Mr. RANDALL. I would suggest that the gentleman should move that the committee be now discharged.

Mr. SINGLETON. I make that motion.

The motion was agreed to.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. HAMILTON, of Indiana, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that the committee had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

An act (S. No. 3) for the relief of Alvis Smith;

An act (S. No. 43) granting a pension to Urial Bundy;

An act (S. No. 121) granting a pension to John Pierson;

An act (S. No. 165) for the relief of Michael W. Brock, of Meigs County, Tennessee, late a private in Company D, Tenth Tennessee Volunteers;

An act (S. No. 545) granting a pension to Abraham Ellis; and

An act (S. No. 641) granting a pension to Julia Scroggin.

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. RANDALL. I move that the rules be suspended and that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole for the consideration of the Indian appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole, (Mr. SPRINGER in the chair,) and resumed the consideration of the special order, the bill (H. R. No. 3478) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department, and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes, for the year ending June 30, 1877, and for other purposes.

The CHAIRMAN. By order of the House, general debate on this bill has been closed; and the Clerk will proceed to read it by paragraphs for amendment.

Mr. RANDALL. I desire to make a statement. When this bill was sent to the Committee of the Whole, it was agreed that general debate should be closed in one hour and a half. One gentleman spoke over half an hour. The gentleman from Texas, [Mr. MILLS,] to whom the other half hour had been promised, was unavoidably absent, and I moved to proceed to consider the bill by paragraphs. I hope the gentleman from Texas will not be cut off from the privilege promised him by reason of his inability to be present on that occasion. I therefore ask unanimous consent that he have thirty minutes on this bill, as originally arranged.

There was no objection.

Mr. MILLS. I do not propose to consume half of the time given me by the committee; and I would not claim any of the valuable time of the House at this late day but that matters involved in this Indian appropriation bill are of local interest to the people whom I represent. I shall consume but a few moments of the time of the committee and will yield the remainder of my time to my colleague, Governor THROCKMORTON.

I desire to call the attention of the committee to the condition of Texas in regard to the reservation at Fort Sill. There is an Indian reservation immediately upon the confines of our State. The boundary that divides that reservation from the people of Texas is Red River. On the northern side of Red River is a reservation on which the Kiowas and Comanches and other tribes of Indians hostile to our people are placed and on the south side are the people of Texas, against whom they have entertained a long hostility.

The selection of that reservation, Mr. Chairman, was most unfortunate; unfortunate for the people of Texas and unfortunate for the good of the Indians, if they were to be benefited by the selection. As stated by the officers of the United States Army who have been placed in contact with these Indians on our frontiers, the Comanches have had for long years a feud; indeed it has become traditionary with them that there is a feud between them and the people of Texas as irreconcilable as were the feuds between the ancient Carthagenians and Romans. The officers of the Government have so reported this fact to the Army. It stands upon the record of our Government; and General Pope himself, who is particularly friendly to the peace policy, states the selection of the Fort Sill reservation, immediately on the confines of Texas, where the Comanche Indians would be tempted to strike those whom they regard their hereditary foes, was most unwise.

Now, sir, I shall ask when this bill comes to be amended, when we come to discuss it by paragraphs, the Comanche and Kiowa Indians shall be removed from the Fort Sill reservation to the Baxter Springs reservation, in the northeastern portion of the Indian Territory.

There were a portion of the Comanche Indians who still remained upon the plains when these were taken to the Fort Sill reservation, and on the invitation of the Government made their homes there. The Government finally induced the wild Indians still remaining on the plains to go to the Indian Territory; but, instead of carrying these additional Comanches to the Fort Sill reservation, they carried them to the reservation in the northeastern portion of the Indian Territory known as the Baxter Springs reservation. The Indian Commissioner is at the present time negotiating with the Kiowas and Comanches to induce them to consent to leave the Fort Sill reservation and go to the other. It is, however, very difficult to get these savages to consent to leave a field that invites them to indulge their sanguinary appetites upon our people. It is very difficult to induce them to abandon the advantages presented by contact with our people and their rich herds. They know if they go to the Baxter Springs reservation they must be content to be fed by the Government; they must be content to follow the methods of peace; they must be content to lay down their scalping-knives; they must be content to abandon the pursuits of war and the enjoyment of its booty.

It is expecting too much from him when you suppose that by any act of diplomacy—and he is the master of that art as well as you are—he will consent to place in your hands the surrender of these advantages. We have to control the Indian; control him for his own good; control him against his own inclination; and I propose that the Government of the United States, while it has undertaken to feed and clothe and educate and Christianize him, shall also exert its moral and physical power to compel him to cease waging this warfare upon our people. Take him where the distance itself interposes an insuperable barrier against his invasions of our territory and the plunder of our people. Situated at Baxter Springs they will have a line of railroad to pass; they will have the Choctaws, Cherokees, Creeks, and Chickasaws, all friendly tribes, to pass through before they can get to our people, and they will be there as well taken care of as at Fort Sill. The Indian Commissioner wants them to go there, and is to-day using all his best efforts to get them to consent. In this the Commissioner is actuated by a desire to serve the best interests of the Indians. I want the Government simply to say that he must go; that he must be placed where war will be to him an impossibility; where he may receive all the bounty of the Government, but at the same time shall be rendered powerless to carry on a merciless war upon her citizens.

That, sir, is one of the amendments I shall offer to the bill; that it shall be the duty of the Indian Commissioner to remove these Indians to the Baxter Springs reservation, and take care of them there, just as he is taking care of them at the Fort Sill reservation.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I ask the Clerk to read what General Pope says in his report in 1871, and I ask the attention of the House to it.

The Clerk read as follows:

> It is to be understood that what I say of these Indians refers to this department only. It is possible and likely that small parties of both Kiowas and Comanches have made some raids into Texas, but I have had no reports indicating it. The reservations of these Indians are so situated as to furnish them every facility for such depredations in Texas, upon the settlements of which State they have long been accustomed to raid, and it would be surprising if with such conveniences and temptations they did not occasionally depredate in that region; but as with the Cheyennes and Arapahoes, I believe these hostile acts will become less and less frequent, provided always that the present system of treatment is adhered to faithfully, namely, that the troops be authorized to follow the raiders onto the reservations, seize the criminals, and turn them over to the civil authorities of Texas, and that the Indian Department withhold rations and supplies from the Indian tribe concerned until prisoners, stock, and other property captured in these raids be returned to the Indian agent.

Mr. MILLS. Now, Mr. Chairman, that is the report of General Pope for 1870, 1871, and 1872, I believe. I send up another report to the Clerk's desk and ask that the paragraph marked be read. It is from the same officer.

The Clerk read as follows:

> The Arapahoes have, almost to a man, been peaceful during this year. The Cheyennes as a body have, I believe, also been peaceful, though some of their young men committed some depredations, and probably murdered one or two men in the early part of the summer.

The Kiowas have been altogether the worst Indians we have had to deal with. I think it almost certain that nearly all, if not quite all, of the depredations and murders committed south of the Arkansas River since May 1 are to be charged to this tribe. They are now, as they have been for twenty-five years past, the most faithless, cruel, and unreliable of all the Indians of the plains. The Comanches have joined them, however, in the depredations committed in Texas, which these Indians can never be made to understand is embraced in any treaty with them. The Texas settlements are and have always been considered by the Indians legitimate prey, and they cannot be made to understand that any treaty restrains them as against the settlements of that State. I think the location of these reservations along the northern line of Texas was hardly judicious. Under the circumstances, which are known to every officer familiar with the history of these Indians, the farther from Texas these reservations could be located the better. Having established the reservation where it is, it would perhaps be impolitic to remove it; but the military force stationed at Fort Sill ought, under the peculiar circumstances, to be invested with much greater jurisdiction over the Indians there than is now the case. It is not necessary, however, to add anything to what I have already said on this subject.

Now, Mr. Chairman, it will be seen that General Pope says in that report that the selection of Fort Sill was unfortunate. He says that the Comanches are too closely situated to the State of Texas. He says that they cannot be made to understand by any number of treaties which may be made with them that they are bound to regard treaty obligations so far as the people of Texas are concerned. If this is the conviction on their minds, it is wise in us, if that conviction cannot be removed, to remove them as far away from the people of that State as it is possible for them to be, to prevent them from waging war upon us.

There is one other measure I ask the committee to adopt as a precautionary measure for the protection of our people, and that is that the Commissioner of Indian Affairs shall prohibit the Kiowas and Comanches and the affiliated bands from crossing the Red River at all. I hope, Mr. Chairman, the gentlemen will not understand that this is a cruel measure toward these people. It is not asked in any spirit of revenge. It is not asked to gratify any revengeful disposition on the part of the people I represent. It is asked simply as a measure of safety to the lives, liberty, and property of my people. It is just such a measure as we had to adopt toward the Sioux of the Northwest. They were at one time granted leave to pass beyond the southern boundaries of their reservations and hunt the buffalo on the headwaters of the Republican River, but this right which was granted to them for the purpose of indulging their desire for the chase was perverted, as the Indians always pervert these privileges, to make war upon those whom they understand have taken from them their land and country. They understand that the white people have taken their country from them; they understand that their fathers owned all the land from the Atlantic to the Pacific Oceans; their traditions that are handed down from lip to lip tell them that they have been despoiled of their inheritance, and they still cherish in their bosoms a spirit of revenge, and will indulge its gratification whenever the opportunity presents itself, whether it be against the people of the North or South. It is necessary, if we desire to act in the spirit of philanthropy, that we shall so restrain them that it shall be impossible for them to gratify their brutal and savage appetites.

Now, I ask that the Commissioner of Indian Affairs shall issue his order, and shall enforce it, prohibiting the Kiowas and Comanches, and all bands affiliated with them, from crossing Red River, just as the Sioux were prevented from crossing the southern boundary of their reservation under the pretense of hunting buffalo on the Republican River, when they really went for the purpose of stealing the property of the people, and in many instances committing much graver crimes.

These are simply police regulations that I propose for the protection of the people I represent. I have no disposition to injure the Indians. I would do all I could to help them; because if you do not restrain them from the commission of these crimes the result will be that they will go on the war-path and numbers of them will lose their lives. More than one hundred of them have been slain in my State in conflicts between the Indians and the people during the last few years, as reported by the adjutant-general of the State of Texas. If they are allowed to carry on their predatory warfare, it will result in an extermination of the race.

The course proposed by me will enable you to carry on your policy of improving his condition and of elevating him in the scale of civilization. You know very well, gentlemen, that permitting him to carry on this continual predatory warfare retards his progress in civilization. I ask this measure in the interest of the people whom I represent. I urge you to remove them from the Fort Sill reservation to the more distant one, and that the Commissioner of Indian Affairs shall order that they shall not be permitted to cross Red River under the pretext of hunting buffalo, but really for the purpose of hunting the cattle and horses of the people. I yield the residue of my time to my colleague, [Mr. THROCKMORTON.]

Mr. THROCKMORTON. I propose to add a word or two to the remarks of my colleague who has just spoken in favor of the amendments he proposes. Those who are acquainted with this Fort Sill reservation know that the reservation is upon the borders of the settlements of the State of Texas. The reservation covers a very large scope of territory. And upon that reservation are situated the Arapahoes, Cheyennes, Kiowas, Comanches, Wichitas, and other tribes known as the affiliated bands, a very large number indeed, I suppose embracing some eighteen thousand, located within what is known as the Fort Sill reservation.

These Indians, situated as they are immediately in close proximity to the settlements of Northern Texas, and where there is but one military post within one hundred and forty or one hundred and fifty miles, and then a distance of seventy-five miles before you reach another military post—these Indians cross the Red River, go along the border of Texas from Red River to the Rio Grande, pass between the military posts, commit their depredations, and return again to their plains almost before they are known to be off their reservations; at least that is the system which has heretofore prevailed under the agents having them in charge.

Texas has for long years suffered from these depredations. Before the war the State of Texas kept regiment after regiment of troops in the field, in addition to the troops furnished by the United States, for the protection of her frontier. I need not remind this House that before the war, under the administration of General Houston, a man recognized throughout the length and breadth of this country as a friend of the Indians, these depredations were so constant and terrible that he was obliged to call upon the Legislature of that State, and he was furnished a regiment of troops for the purpose of protecting the frontier. No man in Texas or out of Texas who knew the character of General Houston and his long endeavor to subserve the interests of the Indian can believe for a moment that he was actuated by any other motive than a desire to properly manage the Indians and protect the people of Texas.

During the war, as a matter of course, Texas had to defend her borders herself, for the Confederate States could furnish her no assistance. And since the war, for the first few years, notwithstanding the border was crimsoned with blood and all the streams of our country were dyed with the blood of our citizens, we were not permitted by the Federal Government to defend our people, but were prohibited by an act of Congress from putting troops into the field for that purpose.

Later, however, when better counsels prevailed, the State was permitted to put troops in the field for the purpose of protecting her citizens against the murders and robberies of these Indians, and in the last few years she has incurred a debt for this purpose and paid out money to the extent of a million of dollars.

Mr. REAGAN. A million and a half of dollars.

Mr. THROCKMORTON. And by the assistance of the troops of the United States and the valor and vigilant conduct of our own volunteer troops we have to-day, for the first time in a quarter of a century, more peace and quiet on the border than ever before. It is a historic fact, as stated by my colleague, [Mr. MILLS,] that the Comanche Indians believe it to be their duty as well as their interest to keep up a constant warfare on the people of Texas.

Now, one word especially in regard to the suggestion made by my colleague that these Indians should be removed to the Baxter Springs reservation. A little more than fifteen months ago General McKenzie and other officers of the Army, with the volunteers of Texas, drove these Indians, after many skirmishes and after much loss of life among the troops of the United States and the volunteers of Texas, to their strongholds, where they made a last stand. In the various battles and skirmishes that took place there some 3,000 of them were captured. In the Indian appropriation bill of the last session of Congress the sum of $300,000, I believe, was appropriated for the purpose of feeding and clothing these 3,000 captured Indians, upon the condition that they should be removed from this Fort Sill reservation that had been set aside for them, and placed upon the Baxter Springs reservation, and they were removed there and are there to-day, as I understand.

We now propose, as a measure of peace and economy on the part of the Government and of justice to the people of Texas, that all of these other tribes of Indians shall be removed to the Baxter Springs reservation. I would not have my friends from Missouri and Kansas believe for a moment that we desire to put these wild hordes upon their borders so that they may depredate upon their constituents. Such would not be the result. If they are placed upon the Baxter Springs reservation they will be in the midst of semi-civilized Indians upon the borders of Missouri and Kansas. They would not for a moment think of going into those densely populated sections for the purpose of depredating upon the people of those States; they could not go westward without going through the country of the Cherokees, Creeks, Osages, and other semi-civilized tribes.

But situated as they are to-day upon the border of Texas, they can cross the Red River and go along down through those widely scattered settlements and between the military posts, and commit their depredations and return before it is known they are in the country. As a measure of economy to the Government, as a measure of justice to our people, and as an act of humanity to the Indians themselves, this policy should be pursued.

It is to be hoped that in the passage of this bill the Committee of the Whole and the House will remember that it is better for these Indians that they should receive their rations for short periods of time—for not more than a week at any one time—and that they should always be required to answer to the roll-call, every one of them, or be accounted for satisfactorily, before any rations should be issued to them.

Under the policy that has heretofore obtained, rations have been issued to these people at long intervals and in great quantities, so as to be destructive to their interests and a waste of the bounty provided by the Government for their support and maintenance. This system, I fear, has operated also to the enrichment of those who have had the Indians in charge.

I have on my desk, but I will not trouble the committee with reading, a report made by an officer of the Army in 1869, embracing the testimony of agents, sub-agents, parties employed about the agencies, and interpreters to these various Indian tribes. This evidence shows that from week to week, from month to month, and from year to year, these Indians, fed by the Government, received arms and ammunition; that they left their reservation without any let or hinderance, went down into Texas, brought back the scalps of women and children, brought back captive women and children, as well as multiplied thousands of head of stock to their reservation. These things were a matter of notoriety. The Indians held their war dances around the agencies; they invited neighboring tribes to witness and participate in the proceedings.

These things were known to the agents. This officer gives the testimony fully in his report, which has been filed in the Interior Department from that time to this. Members would be astonished if they could read the recital of facts as given by this officer and the testimony taken upon the ground from the very persons who witnessed these proceedings.

I will not detain the committee longer; but I do trust that it will take into careful consideration the proposition submitted by my colleague, [Mr. MILLS,] and that we shall provide first that these Indians shall be removed to the Baxter Springs reservation; and secondly, that they shall not be permitted to cross the Red River in their hunting expeditions.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. RANDALL. I now ask that the consideration of the bill by paragraphs be proceeded with.

The Clerk read as follows:

APACHES, KIOWAS, AND COMANCHES.

For ninth of thirty installments, as provided to be expended under the tenth article of treaty of October 21, 1867, concluded at Medicine Lodge Creek, in Kansas, with the Kiowas and Comanches, and under the third article of treaty of the same date with the Apaches, $30,000.

Mr. MILLS. I move to add after the paragraph just read the following:

The Secretary of the Interior shall, before the 1st day of September, 1876, remove all of said Indians from the Fort Sill reservation, on Red River, to the Baxter Springs reservation, in the northeastern part of the Indian Territory.

Mr. RANDALL. That will involve an expenditure of money; and the gentleman does not provide for the appropriation of any money for this purpose. These Indians are already in the Indian Territory, and number about three thousand. We have treaty stipulations with them under the treaty of 1867. I hesitate, therefore, to accept this amendment; indeed I have no authority from the Committee on Appropriations to accept it; but I would like to know from the gentleman the probable cost of this removal.

Mr. MILLS. I have not made any estimate of the cost; it cannot be a great deal. The Fort Sill reservation is in the southwestern part of the Indian Territory and the Baxter Springs reservation in the northeastern part.

Mr. RANDALL. It seems to me that under treaty stipulations these Indians have a right to be where they are. I not only feel unable to accept the amendment on the part of the committee, but I must resist its adoption. The treaty of October 1, 1867, provides, I believe—I ask the gentleman from Texas whether it does not—that these Indians shall be where they are. I am unwilling to violate the stipulations of that treaty.

Mr. MILLS. The amendment merely provides for the removal of these Indians to the Baxter Springs reservation.

Mr. SEELYE. I understood the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations [Mr. RANDALL] to raise a point of order on this amendment.

Mr. RANDALL. I did not raise any point of order, but I said that these Indians are where they are under the stipulations of the treaty of October 1, 1867; and I do not deem it proper to interfere with their rights and remove them among other Indians, who perhaps do not want to be assimilated or associated with them. I therefore resist the adoption of the amendment.

Mr. SEELYE. I quite agree with the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations; but, in addition to that, the amendment seems to me contrary to the rule, as it is new legislation and is not in the interest of retrenchment. I supposed the gentleman from Pennsylvania had raised that point of order.

Mr. RANDALL. That did not occur to me at the time. I oppose the proposition on its merits.

Mr. MILLS. It is too late to raise the point of order after the amendment has been discussed.

Mr. HANCOCK. I wish to ask the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations whether he is quite sure that he is correct in his statement as to the treaty guaranteeing to these Indians this particular locality? I think he will find he is somewhat mistaken. I am not very positive; but I think under the treaty these Indians are entitled to a location on a reservation within the limits of the Indian Territory; but I do not think the treaty specifically indicates this particular locality as the one which they are entitled to occupy.

Mr. RANDALL. I will send for the treaty.

Mr. FRANKLIN. I wish to put a question to the gentleman from Texas, [Mr. MILLS.] Have we authority to remove these wild tribes among the civilized tribes without the consent of the latter? Shall we not in doing so break treaty stipulations?

Mr. HANCOCK. I do not think that question arises. When it does, it will be then time enough to consider it.

Mr. MILLS. The wild Comanches of the plains are now at the Baxter Springs reservation, where we want these other Comanches and Kiowas now at Fort Sill reservation also to be removed.

Mr. GUNTER. I should like to ask my friend from Texas a question.

Mr. MILLS. Certainly.

Mr. GUNTER. What is the extent of the Baxter Springs reservation?

Mr. MILLS. I cannot answer, nor can I give the extent of the Fort Sill reservation; but I understand it is large enough for the purpose contemplated by my amendment.

Mr. GUNTER. It is about fifteen miles in extent. I will now ask the gentleman what is the number of Indians already on the Baxter Springs reservation?

Mr. RANDALL. The number of Indians provided for under the census is twenty-nine hundred and seventy.

Mr. GUNTER. There is that number now upon this territory fifteen miles square, for that is about the extent of the Baxter Springs reservation, and it is proposed to put three thousand additional Indians there to be taken from the Fort Sill reservation.

Mr. MILLS. I wish to say in response to my friend from Arkansas that, as I stated in my remarks this morning, the Commissioner of Indian Affairs thinks it amply sufficient, and is using his best efforts to get the Comanches at the Fort Sill reservation to accept the proposition he makes to go to this Baxter Springs reservation.

Mr. GUNTER. That may be true.

Mr. MILLS. He thinks it best to remove these Indians to the Baxter Springs reservation, and that there is ample room for them.

Mr. GUNTER. It seems to me it will be unjust to the Indians now on the Baxter Springs reservation to impose upon them thirty or thirty-five hundred more inhabitants to occupy this territory of fifteen miles square.

Mr. FRANKLIN. Let me ask the gentleman what tribes occupy the Baxter Springs reservation?

Mr. BLAND. I rise to a point of order on the amendment of the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. MILLS. There are remnants of several tribes there.

Mr. BLAND. I understood the gentleman from Pennsylvania, chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, to raise the point of order on the amendment, or that he intended to do so. If he has not raised the point of order, I now raise it and insist upon it.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman raise the point of order on the amendment?

Mr. BLAND. I do.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BLAND. I rise to a point of order on the amendment of the gentleman from Texas that it does not come within the rule. In other words, it changes existing law, and at the same time is not in the line of retrenchment.

Mr. MILLS. What existing law does it change?

Mr. BLAND. I understand there is a law or treaty with these Indians, and it certainly does change that, and without the consent of the Indians. Not only that, but it interferes with other tribes of Indians settled upon this reservation under existing treaties and laws.

Mr. RANDALL. With permission of the committee I will ask the Clerk to read article 2 of the treaty of 1867 with these Indians.

Mr. MILLS. I say the point of order comes too late.

The CHAIRMAN. It is not too late to raise the point of order at this time. The gentleman from Missouri has risen to a point of order on this amendment.

Mr. BLAND. I wish the article of the treaty with these Indians to be read in connection with the point of order. It will involve an expenditure of money to remove these Indians.

Mr. RANDALL. I ask the Clerk to read article 2 of the treaty.

The Clerk read as follows:

ART. 2. The United States agrees that the following district of country, to wit: commencing at a point where the Washita River crosses the ninety-eighth meridian west from Greenwich; thence up the Washita River, in the middle of the main channel thereof, to a point thirty miles, by river, west of Fort Cobb, as now established; thence due west to the north fork of Red River, provided said line strikes said river east of the one hundredth meridian of west longitude; if not, then only to said meridian line, and thence south, on said meridian line, to the said north fork of Red River; thence down said north fork, in the middle of the main channel thereof, from the point where it may be first intersected by the lines above described, to the main Red River; thence down said river, in the middle of the main channel thereof, to its intersection with the ninety-eighth meridian of longitude west from Greenwich; thence north, on said meridian line, to the place of beginning, shall be, and the same is hereby, set apart for the absolute and undisturbed use and occupation of the tribes herein named, and for such other friendly tribes or individual Indians as, from time to time, they may be willing, (with the consent of the United States, to admit among them; and the United States now solemnly agrees that no persons except those herein authorized so to do, and except such officers, agents, and employés of the Government as may be authorized to enter upon Indian reservation in discharge of duties enjoined by law, shall ever be permitted to pass over, settle upon, or reside in the territory described in this article, or in such territory as may be added to this reservation, for the use of said Indians.

Mr. MILLS. I wish to ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania whether that refers to this reservation?

Mr. RANDALL. I understand these Indians are on that reservation as laid down there, and that the treaty not only restricts them to that territory, but provides that nobody shall interfere with them.

Mr. MILLS. I wish to ask the gentleman further, does he understand that the Congress of the United States has any power to make any treaty with any people in the world to put them on this territory belonging to the Creeks, Choctaws, Chickasaws, and Cherokees in violation of the treaty with them?

Mr. RANDALL. That is a question of law, and of Indian practice perhaps, with which I am not as familiar as the gentleman from Texas. I am neither a lawyer nor have I been brought in immediate contact with these Indians. But I do know what good faith is; and I do understand that when the United States gave to these Indians a specified territory, when they remain upon that territory under the terms of the treaty they ought not by Congress, without due and full consideration and for full and valid reasons, to be disturbed.

Mr. MILLS. If the gentleman from Pennsylvania knows what is good faith, he ought to know that the Government of the United States had no right to take that territory from the Choctaws and Cherokees and the Creek Indians and give it to the Comanches and Kiowas. They had no more right to give them that territory than they had to give Philadelphia to them; not a particle. And it was a violation of the rights of those Indians to make that contract with the Comanches and Kiowas.

Mr. RANDALL. It is a treaty made at Medicine Lodge, in Kansas, with the Indians, and this is the first time I have heard that the United States did anything in that matter which they had not a right to do. They certainly did it in good faith and for the peace both of the Indian and of the white, and for the safety of the citizen.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair desires to remind the committee that the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BLAND] has raised a question of order upon this amendment, and to that the Chair desires members to speak, and not upon the merits of the question. If any gentlemen desire to discuss the point of order the Chair will hear them.

Mr. BLAND. I had the statute read in order to sustain the point of order, and no one will dispute that this statute is law, and that this amendment will change it, and that it will require an expenditure of money to remove these Indians and to support them on this reservation; so that, instead of its being in the line of retrenchment, the amendment is in the line of expenditure, and is unjust toward these Indians on this reservation. And it changes existing law as to the Indians now on the reservation at Baxter Springs. It changes all the statutes with reference to those Indians.

Mr FRANKLIN. I desire to say in addition to what my colleague [Mr. BLAND] has stated, that we have no right to remove these Indians as contemplated by this amendment to reservations occupied by civilized tribes unless they consent to it, or unless we think, in the exercise of that discretionary power with which we are clothed in this respect, that the best interests of the Indians and the Government demand that they should be removed.

The removal of these Indians from their present locality is not authorized by law, nor does either justice or humanity demand it. It would not only be a menace to the peace and quietude of the civilized tribes among whom it is sought to bring them, but, sir, it would endanger the peace and prosperity of the great States of Missouri, Kansas, and Arkansas. This policy is all wrong.

What we want on our border is more civilization and less barbarism. I know it is the policy in some quarters to make the Indian Territory the home of all the wild tribes of the plains. But I trust a higher destiny is in the near future for that God-favored land, and that the day will soon dawn that will subordinate the people of what is known as the Indian Territory to the same laws and the same civilization that we as a nation enjoy.

Why, sir, the amendment of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. MILLS] means only that he desires to shift the danger. He desires to transfer it from the borders of Texas to the borders of Missouri and Kansas; but it shall never be done without my protest. I shall never remain silent in my seat and allow such an outrage to be perpetrated against my State. This is a question in which the people I have the honor to represent are deeply interested. We desire to see the cloud of barbarism driven from our borders, and do not intend it shall be more securely fastened there without our protest. The great State of Kansas, between whose people and those I have the honor to represent a reciprocity of interests exists, is also deeply interested in this measure; and even if my own State were not involved, her interests in this matter would cause me to protest against the adoption of this amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair desires to state to the gentleman from Missouri that the discussion of the merits of the question is not now in order. The discussion is now confined to the question of order raised by the gentleman from Missouri, [Mr. BLAND]

Mr. FRANKLIN. I know the question of order is before the House, but by common consent I supposed we were discussing the merits of the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question properly under discussion is the point of order raised by the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. O'BRIEN. The point of order would no doubt have been well taken if taken in time, but the amendment had been offered and had been considered by the committee, and several members had spoken to the merits of the amendment before the point of order was made. In fact the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. RANDALL,] who made objection to the amendment upon the ground of its merits, stated to the committee in the hearing of the Chair a few moments ago that he had omitted to raise the point of order at the proper time. Therefore I submit that although the point of order might be well taken otherwise, inasmuch as it comes too late, it is necessarily the duty of the Chair to rule the amendment in order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair desires to remind the gentleman that points of order on this bill were reserved before its commʼttal, and that all points of order are pending on the bill all the time.

Mr. O'BRIEN. But the Chair will perceive that although all points of order are necessarily subject to the decision of the Chair, having been reserved before the bill was referred to the Committee of the Whole, it is necessary, under rulings which have been made time out of mind, and so often that it would be hardly worth while to quote them, that the point of order when taken must be taken before the amendment is discussed; because it would be folly that an amendment should be proposed to a bill of this character in committee and after an elaborate discussion on the merits of the amendment it should fall to the ground because it would still be in time to raise the point of order that it changed existing legislation or was not germane.

Mr. HOLMAN. I desire to say a single word on this question. The disposition of the point of order simply settles the right of the member to offer the amendment, as in the case of every other matter brought before the House; and it has been uniformly held that the point of order as to whether the subject was rightly before the House must be made before debate. After consideration, even the very briefest consideration, it has been uniformly held that the point of order cannot be made. The point of order in this case would of course be well made if made in time; but certainly it is now too late to make it.

Mr. SEELYE. In reference to the objection made by the gentleman from Maryland, [Mr. O'BRIEN,] that the point of order was made too late, I will say that I rose to present this point of order immediately upon the offering of the amendment. But I understood the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations to raise it himself. In the confusion I did not distinctly hear his remarks, but supposed they related to the point of order. Otherwise I would have presented the point of order before any debate took place on the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair desires to state that he is prepared to decide the point of order raised by the gentleman from Missouri, [Mr. BLAND.]

Mr. THROCKMORTON. I desire to discuss the merits of the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. THROCKMORTON. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BLAND] makes the point that there is an existing statute which is in conflict with this amendment. I would ask the gentleman from Missouri if he does not know that that was a contract between the Indians and the Government of the United States, and does he not know, and does not the whole country know, that these Indians have violated that contract from the time it was made, and to such an extent that the Commissioner of Indian Affairs eighteen months ago removed a portion of the tribe to the Baxter Springs reservation?

Mr. BLAND. I presume the gentleman will allow me to answer his question. He asks whether it be a contract or not. Is it an existing law on the statute-book? As to any violation of it, that is an outside matter. We are here considering that law.

Mr. THROCKMORTON. The gentleman knows that he assisted to make an appropriation at the last session of Congress to pay troops conducting a war against these Indians for violation of their contract.

Now, one word in regard to the question of the increase of expenditures. This amendment is in the line of reduction. Why so? Because you will find in the bill that there are hundreds of thousands of dollars appropriated for transportation of supplies to these Indians. If they are placed upon the Baxter Springs reservation, it will save thousands of dollars in these expenditures. It is therefore in the line of retrenchment, and hence the point of order is not well taken in either particular.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair desires to state that the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. SEELYE] having been under the impression that this point of order was raised by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] at the proper time and having acted on that supposition, it is only justice to him that the point of order should now be entertained.

Mr. MILLS. Does the Chair desire to do injustice to me in order to do justice to the gentleman from Massachusetts?

Mr. O'BRIEN. I desire to ask whether we are to be governed by the rules of the House or by the misunderstanding of any member?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will decide the point of order; he will not answer the question of the gentleman from Maryland, [Mr. O'BRIEN.] The Chair desires to state that good faith in the deliberations of this body should characterize all our proceedings, and that when a member of the House rises in his place and states that he understood a point of order to have been raised or he would have raised it himself, the Chair must take his word for it. The Chair understood the gentleman from Massachusetts to so state, and upon that statement the Chair will decide the point of order upon its merits.

The Chair will hold in reference to this amendment that, as he understands it, it is a change of the existing law, and that, being a change of existing law, it must appear in the second place that it is germane to the subject-matter of the bill, and in the third place that it reduces expenditures. The Chair has no difficulty in holding that it is germane, but the Chair does not see upon the face of the proposition that it is a retrenchment of expenditures; on the contrary, it would appear that it would cost something to have this transfer made; and the Chair therefore sustains the point of order, and rules the amendment out.

Mr. MILLS. I offer the following amendment, to come in at the same place:

And the Secretary of the Interior is hereby directed and required to prohibit the Kiowas, Comanches, Apaches, Kickapoos, Cheyennes, Arapahoes, Wichitas and bands affiliated with them from crossing Red River from the Fort Sill reservation into Texas, and for that purpose shall use the military force at said reservation; and he is also directed to issue rations to said Indians for only one week at a time, and then only to such of them as shall be present.

Mr. THROCKMORTON. I would suggest to my colleague that instead of saying the Secretary of the Interior, he say whatever Department of the Government that shall have charge of the Indians.

Mr. SEELYE. I submit that that amendment is liable to the same point of order made upon the last one. The provision contemplates I think what we all desire and would vote for if it were presented in a suitable form in a separate bill; but it is new legislation, and it is not certain but that it will cause additional expenditure.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts raises the point of order that this amendment is subject to the same point of order as the last.

Mr. MILLS. I desire to discuss the point of order. I am not at all astonished at the objection coming from the gentleman from Massachusetts to any relief that the people of my State ask against the Kiowa and Comanche Indians. I have been accustomed during the three years which I have served in this House trying to represent the interests of my people to meet objection from that side of the House to every measure proposed for the protection of our people.

Now, sir, I presented an amendment to this bill a few moments ago to remove these Indians from their present reservation at Fort Sill; that was ruled out because we could not take them away. I now present an amendment that they shall stay on their present reservation, and the point is made by the same gentleman that it is new legislation to require them to stay on the reservation, and it is new legislation to remove them from it. That is the predicament the gentleman is in. My amendment simply requires them to stand by the law and remain where the law has placed them. I say that the Congress of the United States has no right to grant to anybody the right to come in the sovereign State of Texas and hunt the buffalo or for any other purpose not granted in the Constitution of the United States. I simply ask that the Indians be required to remain where they are, and as a measure for carrying out that purpose that they shall be required to answer the roll-call once a week and draw their rations. In the bill of the last session they were required to be present and rations were issued only to those present once a week. It is the simplest manner of keeping them there, because if you issue them rations once a month, as some of the agents do, they get their rations and go down as far as Nueces, eight hundred miles from their reservation, and kill our people and despoil them of their property. They have drawn their rations, their arms, their ammunition, and all their equipments, and they go upon a campaign into Texas and then come back home again. Now, as a precaution against these raids, we ask that they shall be required to stay on their reservations, and that as the means of that they shall have their rations only once a week.

Mr. REAGAN. I desire to state——

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would remind the gentleman that the point of order raised by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. SEELYE] is pending.

Mr. REAGAN. I understand that, and I desire to discuss it for a moment, and to add a word to what my colleague [Mr. MILLS] has said. The clause of the bill which it is proposed to amend makes an appropriation of $30,000 for paying installments to the Indians and for carrying out provisions of the treaty under which they are settled on the reservation, which covers the rations and supplies furnished them. The amendment of my colleague [Mr. MILLS] couples itself with this appropriation in an incidental way, which I take it is in harmony with the object of the bill, and with the object had in view by the treaty the provisions of which are intended to be carried out by this bill.

There can be no pretense that there is any incongruity between the proposed amendment and the portion of the bill proposed to be amended. The object of the amendment is to require the Secretary of the Interior to take steps to keep these Indians on their reservation in conformity with the stipulations of their treaty obligations. In addition to that, and as a means of making them conform to the provisions of the treaty while receiving the bounty of the Government and being fed by it, their supplies are to be issued to them at limited times, once a week instead of monthly as now, and they are to be issued only to such of them as are present at roll-call.

The object of this amendment is apparent in view of the remarks made by my colleagues [Mr. MILLS and Mr. THROCKMORTON] who have addressed the Committee of the Whole on the main proposition this morning. The Indians now leave their reservation in violation of the spirit and perhaps the very terms of the treaty, go along down the frontier of Texas, murder our people, plunder the country of horses and other stock, and return to their reservation. Having drawn the rations which the Government furnished them in the interest of peace and humanity, and which they ought to consume on their reservation, they avail themselves of this bounty of the Government while they are engaged in murder and theft on the frontier.

Is there any parliamentary rule that will prevent this Congress, when making an appropriation to carry out the stipulations of this treaty in good faith and to preserve the main objects of the treaty and of our Indian policy, from carrying out that other high obligation of preserving the lives and property of our people from the lawless depredations of these Indians who are fed by the Government?

I submit that the point of order is not well taken; that this amendment is incident to the bill and connects itself necessarily with it, and is in the very spirit of the treaty, the obligatory law, the contract between the Indians and the whites. It is a proposition to compel the Indians to stay north of the Red River, on this reservation, and to compel them to be there to receive their supplies and rations. It is necessary to the good faith of the treaty, to the good faith of the law, and to a due observance of the law both by the Government and the Indians, in connection with the safety of the lives and the security of the property of our people.

Mr. KASSON. I would like for a moment——

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has recognized the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. SEELYE] on the point of order.

Mr. KASSON. On this point of order I would like to call the attention of the gentlemen from Texas to a difficulty which they can avoid, if I understand correctly the gentleman from Texas who last spoke, [Mr. REAGAN.] This amendment, as offered by the gentleman from Texas, [Mr. MILLS,] provides substantially that the Secretary of the Interior shall be hereby directed and required to prohibit the Indians from crossing the Red River; and then it goes on to provide that for that purpose he shall use the military force at said reservation, and issue rations weekly, &c. It will be observed that, as drawn, the amendment puts a portion of the Army under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, which of course it is impossible to do.

Mr. MILLS. Does not the gentleman know that the Secretary of the Interior controls the Indians on the reservation?

Mr. KASSON. Not the military force, but he is required to execute his proper constitutional authority. What I was going to suggest is this——

Mr. MILLS. I will strike that out if you want it struck out.

Mr. KASSON. It is undoubtedly within the line even of the old rule touching amendments to appropriation bills, that there be a restrictive clause as to the manner of disbursing the amount appropriated. The last clause of the amendment, to which I understand the most importance is attached, (and I agree with the gentleman in that,) provides, as a means of keeping the Indians on the reservation, that their rations shall be issued in a particular way. The mere enactment by Congress that the Indians shall remain there is a brutem fulmen; the Indians will not obey it. But if you provide a means for the disbursement of the appropriations, so as to require the Indians to be there once a week to receive their rations, I agree that it may answer the purpose designed. I suggest that instead of providing that the Secretary of the Interior shall use the military force there, the constitutionality of which I doubt, the amendment should be confined to the issue of rations, which is certainly within the old rule regulating amendments to appropriation bills.

Mr. REAGAN. I wish to make a suggestion in relation to the amendment. I think it probable that the language of the amendment had better be modified so as to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to require the Indians to remain upon the reservation and not to go south of Red River, without specifying any authority on his part over the Army, but leaving him to control that question according to the ordinary practice of the Government; and with that modification I think the amendment will not be subject to the point of order.

Mr. MILLS. I accept the suggestion, and will modify the amendment accordingly.

Mr. RANDALL. I cannot see but that Congress has the right to put a restriction upon the manner of the administration of this fund. I have looked through the treaty, and I see in it nothing that prevents this. On the contrary, I find there an express provision that these Indians shall remain upon their reservation.

Mr. KASSON. That is the law now.

Mr. RANDALL. But it seems to me—and I make the suggestion to the gentleman from Texas who proposes this amendment—that this is not an appropriate place for it. The item now under consideration is for the payment of $30,000 in cash, under the third article of the treaty. The next item relates to clothing; the next, to pay of carpenter, farmer, &c.; the next, to the pay of physician and teacher. But the gentleman will find on page 48 of this bill a general appropriation for the Indians; and I think the amendment would there come in appropriately.

So far as regards the specification as to who shall enforce this restriction, I would prefer to have the amendment say simply "the proper authority," until we determine whether the authority shall be in the Interior or the War Department.

One of the best modes in the world to keep these Indians at peace is to distribute rations to them at short intervals. Under this system the Indian is obliged to present himself, and it can be readily seen whether or not he is on the war-path. The Sioux Indians, for instance, are now on the war-path, as they have been before. They do not come in themselves to draw their rations, but they send their relatives, who draw the rations according to the census of the tribe or band. The result is that in this way the Indians of the Sioux Nation, although on the war-path, secure by indirection rations from the Government. I think this restriction, if it can be inserted at the appropriate place, is proper and wise, and in the interest of peace.

Mr. THROCKMORTON. I ask my colleague to withdraw his amendment and offer it again when we come to page 48, where it will be more appropriate.

Mr. MILLS. I withdraw the amendment for the present.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair hears no objection, and the amendment is withdrawn.

The Clerk read as follows, under the head "Apaches, Kiowas, and Comanches:"

For purchase of clothing, as provided in the same treaties, $15,000.
For pay of carpenter, farmer, blacksmith, miller, and engineer, $5,200.
For pay of physician and teacher, $2,500.

Mr. HOLMAN. I suggest to the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations and to the gentleman from Texas that there would seem to be no impropriety in proposing a limitation upon the expenditure of these sums of money, by providing that they be paid to the Indians only on the condition of their remaining peaceably within the limits of the reservation heretofore assigned to them, and that the Secretary of the Interior shall adopt such regulations as may be necessary to secure that result. Otherwise it would seem that these tribes would be entitled to receive under our appropriations the several sums of money provided for them whether they comply with the conditions imposed in the appropriations or not. It seems quite clear that the Government should not pay these sums of money, even though they are in pursuance of express treaty stipulations, unless the Indians themselves conform to the conditions of the treaty; one of the most important conditions on their part being that they shall not depart from the reservations assigned to them.

Mr. RANDALL. I submit to the gent'eman from Indiana that this is only in accordance with natural law. Is there any nation on the earth that would feed its enemies while they are destroying its citizens?

Mr. REAGAN. Our Government has done that for fifteen or twenty years.

Mr. HOLMAN. I propose to submit the following amendment, to which I invite the attention of the gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. SEELYE,] who has always felt an interest in this subject:

Provided, however, That the sums of money aforesaid—

Embracing the several previous appropriations—four altogether—shall not be paid to or expended for the benefit of said Indians unless they shall remain peaceably within the limits of the reservations heretofore assigned to them; and this provision shall be carried into effect under such regulations as the Secretary of the Interior may prescribe.

Mr. RANDALL. I object to the latter clause of that amendment. The first part I think it would be wise to adopt.

Mr. HOLMAN. Then I will offer the amendment in the following form:

At the end of the twentieth line insert the following:

Provided, however, That the sums of money aforesaid shall not be paid to or expended for the benefit of said Indians unless they shall remain peaceably within the limits of the reservations heretofore assigned to them.

Mr. RANDALL. That is right. I would like to have that adopted as a general provision with reference to all the Indians.

Mr. HOLMAN. I suppose the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. SEELYE] does not object to this.

Mr. SEELYE. I think it is right.

Mr. HOLMAN. This clause applies of course only to these four items of appropriation.

Mr. RANDALL. If it were applied to the Sioux Nation, it would save the Government half a million of dollars. I hope the gentleman from Indiana will modify the amendment so as to give it a general scope to include all Indians.

Mr. HOLMAN. With that view I will withdraw the amendment for the present, so that it may be offered at the end of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair hears no objection, and the amendment is withdrawn.

Mr. SEELYE. In regard to making this amendment a general provision, I would like to suggest that there is some legislation contemplated and already brought before Congress from the Executive Department referring to the removal of the Sioux from their reservation. This amendment as a general provision might, if strictly interpreted, interfere with such legislation. I think that, so far as it applies to the particular paragraphs under consideration, it is unobjectionable.

Mr. RANDALL. The trouble is that the Sioux are now removing our citizens to eternity.

The CHAIRMAN. There is no amendment pending.

Mr. HOLMAN. The limitation would of course apply to the Indians remaining on such territory as might be assigned to them at any particular time.

The Clerk read as follows:

For this amount, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to furnish subsistence, $100,000: Provided, That the River Crows shall share alike with the other Crow Indians in the subsistence furnished.

Mr. SCALES. I am directed by the Committee on Indian Affairs to offer the following amendment:

The Clerk read as follows:

Line 316, page 14, strike out "100" and insert "130," so it will read "$130,000."

Mr. SCALES. I take it, Mr. Chairman, that the object, as far as we can, is to appropriate a sufficient quantity to answer the purpose for which it is intended. The appropriation for these Indians last year amounted to $165,000. Fifteen thousand dollars of that was appropriated for the removal of the River Crow Indians. Take that from $165,000, and you have $150,000 left. After consultation with the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, we came to the conclusion we could get along with an increase of $30,000, that is, $20,000 less than we had during the last fiscal year.

Now, sir, the number of these Indians is forty-two hundred and twelve, twelve hundred of River Crows and three thousand of Mountain Crows. The amount appropriated by the bill this year is just the amount appropriated for the Mountain Crows last year. If you ascertain the number of rations necessary for these Indians, counting a ration at eleven cents, the whole amount will make $168,630, which is largely in excess of the amount now asked for by the Committee on Appropriations, and largely in excess of the amount asked for by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs.

The appropriation as now proposed is only $100,000. We ask it to be put at $130,000, and as I have said, calculating at eleven cents a ration, and giving those Indians one ration each for one year, the amount will be a great deal more than we ask for. Does not that demonstrate beyond any sort of doubt that it is absolutely necessary for them?

It is the established practice of this Government, and has been for some years, that these Indians must be fed. They are especially friendly to the whites and hostile to the Sioux. They stand, sir, as a sort of wall between the outer settlements and the Sioux Indians, and they deserve consideration at our hands on this account. Now, can they be fed for one dollar less money? I doubt whether they can be fed for that sum. If they cannot, why attempt to supply them on a sum which we must know from this calculation will not answer the purpose.

I know the anxiety to retrench. No man goes before me in that purpose. I can say to the Committee on Appropriations that they have done a good work. They are endeavoring to do a good work now. I admit they are actuated by proper and high motives in this thing; but when we call to their attention these facts, I hope they will give these Indians what will be absolutely necessary for their support, and not have at the end of the year a deficiency to make up in feeding these Indians.

Now, Mr. Chairman, these Indians cannot starve. The buffalo are disappearing, and their hunting-grounds are no longer available. The Government says they must be fed. It has engaged to feed them. Will this House do it? I leave the responsibility with it.

Mr. RANDALL. In reference to this amendment the committee acted advisedly. They deemed the River Crows should be consolidated with the Mountain Crows in the appropriation.

In regard to the appropriation as embraced in the clause which the gentleman from North Carolina seeks to amend, I will only say that the Government is in no manner bound to do anything for these Crow Indians except as gratuity and as a peace-offering, for the treaty expired two years ago under which we were bound to make these payments. The committee reached the conclusion that $100,000 was adequate if properly expended, as we hope it will be under the provisions of this bill—that it was quite adequate for the River Crows as well as the Mountain Crows.

This proposition brings me somewhat directly to the scope of this bill, and that is this whole Indian matter should be transferred to the Army, when we shall have the rations delivered honestly to the Indians, thus putting an end at once to the complaints made by the Indians they are being defrauded, that they are being cheated out of what is their due.

Mark you, Mr. Chairman, the whole of this money, as I said before, is a mere gratuity. There is no stipulation of any treaty by which we are bound to pay this money. I affirm, after careful consideration with people from the Territory where these Indians are located, (they are in Montana,) the amount here appropriated is adequate—that $100,000 is amply sufficient to feed these River and Mountain Crow Indians if properly and economically expended. I hope, therefore, the amendment will not prevail.

Mr. MAGINNIS. I move to strike out the last word.

The chairman of the Committee on Appropriations did me the honor to consult me with regard to this appropriation. I found upon consultation with the committee of which he is the head that they had struck out the entire appropriation for the Crow Indians.

Mr. RANDALL. Will the gentleman allow me to correct him? We were considering the propriety of striking out the appropriation on the ground that we were not bound to give a cent.

Mr. MAGINNIS. The chairman states the question correctly. They were considering the propriety of striking out the whole appropriation on the ground that the Government was not obliged to give these Indians a cent. But I had the honor of showing the committee that while it was true that the old treaty had expired, a new one had been made by Mr. Brunot which had not yet been acted on. I further called to the attention of the chairman the fact that these Indians were friendly Indians, and were worth half a regiment of cavalry to us on the frontier as a guard between us and the Sioux; and I believe it was on that ground that the committee agreed to make this appropriation.

Mr. RANDALL. I desire to say, in justice to the gentleman from Montana, that it was mainly due to the information he gave me and the arguments he used in favor of the Crows that I placed this amount in the bill. But the gentleman must admit that there is no treaty whatever by which we are bound to pay a cent. Mr. Brunot might as well have made a treaty with me as with an Indian tribe.

Mr. MAGINNIS. That may be true; but, as I have said, I pointed out that these are friendly Indians and worth as much to us as a troop of cavalry. The chairman of the Committee on Appropriations asked me whether any of those Indians were engaged in agriculture. I frankly admitted they were not, but urged that the appropriation of $30,000 should be made for them as Indians roaming. I was told by the chairman of the committee that some officer of the Department had informed him that there were no Indians roaming, so that was stricken out. While I am thankful to the committee for what they have given, I would very much like to have the appropriation put back for Indians roaming, and give these worthy Indians $30,000 additional.

The Crows and their country have been sacrificed to the Sioux. The Sioux have been allowed to invade their reservation and drive them from their agency; and yet they are our faithful friends, and even now are marching with our troops and acting as scouts for the command of General Gibbon on the Yellowstone. I urge a generous treatment for the Crows.

Mr. SEELYE. This Indian appropriation bill has been very carefully considered by the Committee on Indian Affairs; and with reference to the point which the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations made, that we have no treaty stipulations with these Indians, I think it might be said that we have no treaty stipulations whereby we provide alms-houses for the poor or hospitals for the sick or places of refuge for the needy and distressed. There are no treaty stipulations for these ends. Why, then, do we provide them? Simply because it is human and Christian to do it; simply because it would be unworthy of us not to do it. And when we contemplate the fact that these Indians have been made dependent upon us for their subsistence by us, by our own encroachments upon their hunting-grounds, it becomes the height of folly, even if we might not say of wickedness, to refuse them this.

Now, if we are to provide the subsistence at all let us do it not extravagantly; let us do it with economy, but let us do it wisely. It would not be wise to build alms-houses for the poor with no roofs on; to build hospitals for the sick without furnishing any beds. It is not wise to furnish these Indian tribes with a part of the subsistence they need and refuse them the remainder. One hundred and thirty thousand dollars is, as the chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs has so successfully shown, barely sufficient; it is doubtful whether it be sufficient to meet the ends required.

Mr. RANDALL. I do not know how much time the Committee on Indian Affairs has given to the review of this appropriation bill, but I can answer for myself and other members of the Committee on Appropriations that we have given as much as two months to the consideration of it. I had never heard that our bill was under review by the Committee on Indian Affairs till within a few days.

Now, sir, I affirm, as I believe upon the fullest information, after consulting with gentlemen in the Territories—not the Delegates alone, but after consultation all around—that we have been liberal in giving this $100,000 when we are in nowise bound to do it. I admit that all that is said as to the disposition of the Crows is true.

Mr. SCALES. Do I understand the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations as casting censure on the Committee on Indian Affairs for reviewing this appropriation bill?

Mr. RANDALL. The gentleman can understand me to say just what my language implies. I cast no censure on anybody, but the gentleman can give his own interpretation to my language as he pleases.

Mr. SCALES. I want to know what interpretation the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations pleases to put upon it?

Mr. RANDALL. I have said that $100,000 for this purpose is quite ample, and I feel I should be doing wrong if I did not stand here and resist, with the information I have, any appropriation additional to that amount.

Mr. MAGINNIS. I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

Mr. STEELE. I renew it.

I desire to say just one word in reference to this amendment, as I think the chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs has fallen into an error as to what the amount of the appropriation was last year for the subsistence of the Crow Indians. By reference to the appropriation bill of last year I find that $100,000 was appropriated for the subsistence of the Crow Indians, of which $15,000 was allowed to be used in removing the agencies and erecting a new agency within the limits of their reservation, leaving $85,000 out of that fund for subsistence; and that for the River Crows there was appropriated $30,000 for subsistence; so that the entire appropriation for the subsistence of these two tribes of Crows last year was $115,000. The agencies have been consolidated, and there is a reduction in the amount of the appropriation of $15,000.

The other $30,000 to which the chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs has alluded consisted of $20,000 for Indians engaged in agriculture and $10,000 for Indians roving. They are under different heads of appropriation. The appropriation for the subsistence of these Indians is reduced by the present bill from what it was last year $15,000.

Mr. SCALES. Mr. Chairman, I am sorry that the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations has thought proper to use language here——

Mr. RANDALL. Just one minute; what language?

Mr. SCALES. I will state it. He has thought proper to use language here which he declines to interpret for himself when the interpretation is doubtful, and which he delegates to me to interpret.

Mr. RANDALL. The gentleman misunderstood me. I in no manner reflected on his committee, and I said so.

Mr. SCALES. I understood the gentleman to decline to say so.

Mr. RANDALL. I said so promptly. Your committee have a perfect right to review the action of the Committee on Appropriations in reference to this bill. I understand that, and so far from not exercising that right the Committee on Appropriations has received a subcommittee from your committee.

Mr. SCALES. Well, I can say this, that so far as I am concerned, representing the Committee on Indian Affairs, I did apply to the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, and was denied the opportunity of considering the bill; at least, he declined to give me any time within which it could be considered. But I find no fault with that. I am not complaining of that. I only complain of the doubtful language used. The gentleman said that we examined the matter only two nights. I saw that statement in a newspaper, and did not know where it came from, and it is a little suggestive that the language in the newspaper is the same identically as that of the gentleman from Pennsylvania here to-day.

Mr. RANDALL. I want to say that I never published anything in relation to this matter in the newspapers. And what I say here is that you had given two nights to the consideration of this bill.

Mr. SCALES. I hope I shall not be interrupted further, for I have but a few moments more. All I desire to say is this, that I understand the duty of the Committee on Indian Affairs is this: that they have in charge under the orders of the House all matters pertaining to the Indians upon which we have to legislate.

The bill came before our committee, sir—how? The Commissioner of Indian Affairs, the officer appointed by law to look after these matters, called our attention to the bill, and he asked us to hear him. What was it our duty to do under the circumstances? The gentleman from Pennsylvania says that he has considered this matter for two months. The Commissioner had given twelve months of his time to the questions involved in the bill, and he showed to the committee after making a calculation that the amount required for rations, estimating them at eleven cents each, would amount to $38,000 more than he had asked for, and that he could not get along with less than $130,000, the amount asked for by this amendment. That is why the Committee on Indian Affairs offer this amendment. We are not here to antagonize the Committee on Appropriations. I concede to the chairman of that committee all that he claims; I concede that he is entitled to great credit from this House and the country for all he has done in the work of retrenchment; I wish to detract nothing from him; but I think that the Committee on Indian Affairs have duties to perform, and for one, in the face of every opposition from whatever source it may come or from whatever party, I shall perform my duty.

Now in regard to what was said by the gentleman who last addressed you, I say that he is clearly in error. It is true there was one appropriation of $100,000; in another place there was an appropriation of $20,000; and in all there were appropriations of $165,000, $15,000 of which was for the removal of the tribe.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. RANDALL. I desire to state in reply to the gentleman from North Carolina when he relies on the statements and urgency of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs that, if we had acted exclusively under his advice, there would have been no reduction in any part of this bill. I concede to that gentleman entire integrity of purpose and entire integrity of action; but the very fact that he is but of recent occupancy of that Office shows that he is not fully advised in regard to it. I therefore hope that this amendment will not prevail.

The question was taken on the amendment; and there were—ayes 60, noes 68; no quorum voting.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. SCALES and Mr. RANDALL were appointed.

The committee divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 73, noes 75.

So the amendment was not agreed to.

The Clerk resumed the reading of the bill, and read as follows:

For seventh of thirty installments to purchase such articles as may be considered proper by the Secretary of the Interior for Indians roaming and for Indians engaged in agriculture, $150,000.

Mr. SEELYE. I move to amend that clause by striking out "150" and inserting "200;" so as to make the amount $200,000.

Mr. Chairman, the reason for this in the first place is that it is needed, and, in the second place, there is a treaty stipulation which provides for more than twice this amount. Two hundred thousand dollars was furnished to the Indians for this purpose last year. By the treaty of 1868 thirty annual installments of $10 for each Indian roaming and $20 for each Indian engaged in agriculture were agreed to be paid. Now of these Indians there are 43,000 by the most accurate estimates that can be made. At the smallest treaty stipulation, that of $10 for each one, it would amount to twice the sum called for last year and this year; and therefore I trust there will be no objection to the amendment.

Mr. RANDALL. Mr. Chairman, this amendment involves the whole consideration of the Sioux question. I judge that, if the Committee on Appropriations had this appropriation to consider now, they would give no such sum of money to the discretion of any officer to feed the Sioux nation while that nation is in a condition of hostility.

We know what is the condition there. What do we see there? We see that these very Sioux Indians whom we are engaged in feeding, all of them who are able to bear arms, are going off and joining the band under Sitting Bull, and are absolutely joining with him in his indiscriminate crusade upon the white citizens. Only to-day we have in the press a statement that as many as forty-five of our citizens have been put to death.

Mr. SEELYE. Will the gentleman allow me a moment?

Mr. RANDALL. I will speak generally as to the Sioux Nation.

Mr. SEELYE. I understand that perfectly, and I have later information than perhaps has fallen to his knowledge, which it will be for the information and benefit of the House to learn.

I hold in my hand a report of one of the official inspectors of the Indian service, lately returned from a special inspection of affairs at the Red Cloud and Spotted Tail agencies, giving very important information respecting the hostilities there and what Indians are engaged in them. If the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] will allow, I would like to have the Clerk read a paragraph from that report.

Mr. RANDALL. After I get through you can have it read. What I was alluding to comes to us by telegraph this morning; it is not a report a week or a month old.

Mr. SEELYE. This report will show us by whom these atrocities are committed, and also the cause which instigated these atrocities.

Mr. RANDALL. If it does then it must be words of prophecy, because these murders to which I refer have only just taken place. Our citizens who have gone there are being put to death by the hostile Indians, by the very Indians which we feed and make fat. As soon as these buck warriors smell the war-path they go off and assist the Sioux Indians to put our citizens to death.

Mr. SEELYE. The gentleman may save himself the expenditure of a great deal of breath if he will simply hear——

Mr. RANDALL. We have already expended more than a million of dollars on these people. But for the wise provision suggested by the gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. HOLMAN,] and which will be incorporated in this bill, I would be in favor of spending not more than one-half the sum proposed on these people.

In reference to this amendment, so far as I know the Sioux Indians do not observe their treaty obligations; they pay no attention to them. When the opportunity is offered their young warriors go off to commit hostilities upon our people, uniting with the Sioux, about four thousand of whom are constantly upon the war-path. I hope therefore that not only will this amount not be increased, but that additional safeguards will be thrown around the appropriation, so that these rations shall be issued to them only weekly, and that they shall be required to come in person to receive them. When these Indians go off on the war-path they leave their relatives behind them, and they obtain the rations and assist in the support of the Indians who are murdering our people. I think that in consideration of the lives of our own citizens we would be justified in not giving any money or any ammunition of any sort or kind, either for the gun or the stomach, to these Indians.

[Here the hammer fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. Debate upon the pending amendment has been exhausted.

Mr. SEELYE. I move to strike out the last word, and ask the Clerk to read a paragraph I have marked in the report of Mr. Vandever, United States Indian inspector, for the information of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] and of the House.

Mr. ATKINS. What is the date of the report?

Mr. SEELYE. It is dated at Cheyenne, May 20, 1876.

The Clerk read as follows:

CAUSE OF THE WAR.

I believe that the present disturbed state of affairs on the roads leading to the Black Hills and along the Indian border results from General Crook's late expedition and the preparations now making for renewed hostilities, and not from the occupation of the Black Hills by the white people. Up to the time of General Crook's first movement the Indians, though dissatisfied with the occupation of the Black Hills, had made no war, and there was comparative safety for those who were going to or returning from that country. The Black Hills region had been solemnly guaranteed to the Indians by a treaty made by the Government with them ten years ago. When gold was found to exist there, white people began to flock in; the Indians protested, but made no serious effort to prevent immigration. The Government called the Indians to a council and proposed negotiating for the country, but made no offer for it. The council ended without agreement, and both parties retired to think further of the matter, the Indians understanding, as they say, that the Government would submit a proposition to them at a future time. Immigration still continued to pour into the Black Hills and the Indians waited in peace. At this juncture of affairs a military expedition was sent into their country and they were driven to hostilities. We are now experiencing the bitter fruits of war with a barbarous race, who are only seeking to defend from invasion the country we had guaranteed to them by solemn treaty.

Mr. SEELYE. We have here a statement from the last report and the most accurate information by a most trustworthy observer, that these Indians, instead of violating their treaties, have observed them in the face of great outrages, outrages committed by the unwarranted movements of a military force in that region. Therefore, instead of cutting off the appropriation because they have broken their treaty obligations, the argument of the gentleman would lead to the keeping in of the appropriation and even to enlarging it because they have kept their treaties. The number of Indians there is at least 40,000, and by treaty stipulations which they have kept inviolate they ought to have $400,000. The bill proposes to give them $150,000; the amendment I have offered proposes $200,000.

Mr. STEELE. I desire to say a word in reference to this report of the Indian inspector, Mr. Vandever, referred to by the gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. SEELYE.] The impression sought to be created by this report is that the military are responsible for the present condition of affairs in the Territory of Wyoming and in that section of country known to the people at large as the Black Hills. This agent reports that—

The Indians at both the agencies are peaceable and well-disposed. The disturbances now occurring on this border are occasioned by the raiding of hostile Indians from the north, who followed General Crook back from his recent expedition. They are now retaliating for his invasion, and not for the occupation of the Black Hills by miners.

Further on he says that Red Cloud and Spotted Tail both state that—

There would have been no war if the soldiers had not first gone into that country and made an attack upon a camp of peaceful Indians who were on their return to the agency. General Crook, they say, did not get within seventy-five miles of any camp of hostile Indians.

He goes on to say:

The camp that was destroyed consisted of nine Sioux lodges and about forty lodges of Cheyennes, who were moving slowly with all their women, children, and old people. They knew that the soldiers were approaching, but took no precautions to elude an attack, for they had done nothing to provoke one.

Now all this goes to show that these people attacked were friendly Indians. A little further on he says:

The Indians believe that Crook was worsted in this encounter and obliged to return with haste, and this emboldens them to follow up their success by attacks upon Black Hills immigrants and upon settlers near the Platte River.

Were these peaceable Indians, these nine and forty lodges, the persons that were "following up their success" by attacks on immigrants and settlers? No, sir; the Indians engaged in hostilities at the present time are the hostile Sioux from the north, and I doubt not large numbers of the agency Sioux. There are and have been no friendly Indians of the Sioux tribe in the northern country.

I say that there are not enough of the hostile Sioux Indians in the northern country there to overrun that section of country as it is being overrun to-day—not enough of them if every one of them were upon the war-path. A man might as well tell me he had put a lighted torch into a barrel of gunpowder and it did not explode as to tell me the Indians at Red Cloud and Spotted Tail agencies are not on the war-path to-day.

Has the expedition which has gone out against these hostile Indians grown out of any fault on the part of the military department? In the report of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs for the year 1873, I find he uses this language in speaking of this Sioux question:

Also, that all Sioux Indians be required to remain on the Sioux reservation, and that any found off, or refusing to come in and treat with the Government, be forced in and brought to obedience by the military.

That was the report of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs in 1873. In 1875 he uses the following language:

It will probably be found necessary to compel the northern non-treaty Sioux, under the leadership of Sitting Bull, who have never yet in any way recognized the United States Government, except by snatching rations occasionally at an agency, and such outlaws from the several agencies as have attached themselves to these same hostiles, to cease maranding and settle down, as the other Sioux have done, at some designated point. This may occasion conflict between this band of Indians and the soldiers.

Mr. PAGE. I should like to inquire of the gentleman from Wyoming whether he is in favor of the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Massachusetts?

Mr. STEELE. I will answer the gentleman's question when I come to it.

Mr. PAGE. I fear your time will have expired before you come to it.

Mr. STEELE. I am speaking to the general proposition in reference to the protection of the frontier, which interests me and my people quite as much as it does the gentleman from California.

Now the Secretary of the Interior says, in his report to the first session of the Forty-fourth Congress:

There are still some roving bands of hostile Sioux in the Big Horn and Powder River country of Dakota and Montana which should be subjugated and compelled to cease their raids and depredations upon other tribes and upon the whites. When this is done there will be but little trouble, with a fair degree of tact, intelligence, and force, to control our entire Indian population.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Wyoming has expired.

Mr. SEELYE. I withdraw my amendment.

Mr. MAGINNIS. I renew it, and yield my time to the gentleman from Wyoming.

Mr. STEELE. I have read extracts from these reports, Mr. Chairman, to show that this very expedition which has gone into the Sioux country went at the instance and on the request of the Interior Department. It was sent into the Sioux country because those Indians were raiding not only upon the white settlements but upon the Crows in Montana, the Shoshones in Wyoming, and the Pawnees in Nebraska. Those Sioux were raiding upon every one they could reach by traveling hundreds of miles away from their reservations, murdering and plundering alike the white settlers and friendly Indians. Therefore it is that the Interior Department called upon the military arm of the Government to punish them. But, sir, now the trouble has come, this report seems to try to throw the entire responsibility upon the military.

The depredations which have been committed in that country, however, Mr. Chairman, are not of recent origin, nor caused by General Crook's expedition. I hold in my hand the annual message of the governor of Wyoming to the Legislative Assembly of that Territory, under date of November 2, 1875—by Governor Thayer, an ex-Senator—and I will read but one extract to show, before there was any trouble in reference to these expeditions or any trouble in reference to the Black Hills of any consequence, what then was the condition of affairs in that country:

> Reliable documentary evidence has been furnished me, showing that since July, 1868, seventy-three citizens, engaged in lawful callings, have been slain by Indian marauders. Also, that more than six hundred thousand dollars' worth of stock have been stolen by them during the same time. These murders have been committed and the theft of this large amount of property has taken place on land ceded to the United States, and from which the Indians are excluded.

That was before there was any of this difficulty. I say it is undoubtedly true that the agency Sioux Indians are to-day on the war-path, raiding upon and slaying our people at every opportunity. From the existing condition of affairs it is utterly impossible this statement can be denied. There were not enough Indians under Sitting Bull, Crazy Horse, and other chiefs of the northern Sioux to have overrun that country as it is being overrun to-day; and I hope some attention will be given to the protection of the people on the frontiers as well as to feeding the Indians.

Mr. MAGINNIS. There seems to be a disposition in some quarters to censure the military authorities for sending out the late expedition against the hostile Sioux Indians, as if such an expedition was wholly unauthorized. I might repeat what has been said before by myself on another occasion, that the expedition against Sitting Bull and Crazy Horse and the hostile northern Sioux was only made by officers of the Army after four repeated applications from the Interior Department, and three of which applications originated with the peace commission; and I might add, after repeated applications upon my part to General Sheridan and to the War Department for the protection of the people I represent. And yet the impression is attempted to be created that the military, in violation of the peace policy and against the protest of its defenders, entered upon an entirely unauthorized invasion of the Sioux country. Why, sir, no one knows better than the Commissioner of Indian Affairs that the hostile northern Sioux never have treated with the United States, or in any manner recognized its authority. They never came to any conference with the United States commissioners but once, and that was in the year 1866, at Fort Union, when Sitting Bull, after obtaining by stratagem and guile the presents brought to him, and in addition twenty kegs of powder, drove the commissioner across the river, the very commissioner sent out to give him presents on the part of the Government. He invited the commissioner who headed that peaceful delegation to go out and fight a duel with him, and told him that it gave him pleasure to kill the white men; that they were unworthy of his rifle, but that he loved to "strike them on the head with his war-club, and make them bleat like buffalo calves."

What has been the condition of affairs in that country in spite of your appropriations? A large portion of the Sioux at the Red Cloud agency, drawing rations and ammunition, have supplied the hostile Indians and aided them in raiding on the frontier of Montana. The stock stolen from our people after the murder of our farmers and freighters are taken to the agencies and sold to their relatives there. From these also, at the same time, they get arms and ammunition, trading horses and mules stolen from our people for breech-loading guns and fixed ammunition issued and traded to these so-called peaceable and friendly Sioux. These Indians that you feed and fatten at these agencies have shed hypocritical tears over the hostility of the northern bands, and repeatedly said they would join the Army to chastise the hostiles; but the very first time a United States Army expedition goes out to chastise those Indians who have defied the Government for ten years, raiding on Indians and whites alike, the so-called peaceable Indians make protest against such deserved chastisement; and, forgetting all their promises of good behavior and all their jeremiads against their intractable brethren, make an excuse to leave their reservations and to join the hostile bands upon the war-path. These are the allies you have bought with thirteen millions of blood money, the people who professed to be anxious to join our arms in bringing Sitting Bull and his outlaws to order. They refused to join your forces, and give aid and comfort to the enemy. And, sir, that is all there is of buying a peace with these barbarians. Portions of them under treaties with the United States will remain in pretended peace at agencies and be receiving rations and supplies while others are on the war-path sharing the supplies, and in return dividing the plunder. Thus they secure the benefits both of peace and war; and the first time the Government makes a demonstration against the openly hostile Indians, the peaceable agency Indians, well fed and in good condition, are ready to join their murdering and marauding brethren in open war.

Mr. LUTTRELL. Is it not the fact that the Indians who are receiving goods at the agencies furnish supplies to those who are on the war-path?

Mr. MAGINNIS. That is largely the fact. And the only way to settle this question is for the military arm of this Government to separate the peaceable from the warlike Indians and then chastise the latter. The trouble is that these Sioux, who have never been defeated by the United States forces, and with the conceit of all barbarians, think the United States cannot conquer them. They are on the war-path and they will remain on the war-path till they are taught to acknowledge the power of this Government. The trial of strength can no longer be averted or postponed. The issue must be settled, and when it is settled the Sioux problem will be solved.

Mr. SEELYE. I renew the amendment, to say that I have been a little amused, if both of the gentlemen who have just addressed us will pardon me for saying so, at the tenor of their remarks. In the first place, they both argue that General Vandever must be mistaken, because there are not Indians enough in the Northwest in a savage state to make these raids. In the next place they argue that the military in their expeditions are all right, because so long as they have been in the Northwest they have been obliged to make these expeditions. I may be pardoned if I find a little difficulty in knowing on which of these two horns of the dilemma they prefer to be impaled. We have the simple truth here before us in the last report of a trustworthy agent. We are to remember also that all the reports that come by telegraph are reports under the control of the military, and from experience during the last winter we all know what mistaken reports those telegrams have given.

Mr. RANDALL. There are just two points in this controversy and the statement of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. SEELYE] which it is proper to notice. The first is that the article which he caused to be read in its very first line recognizes the fact that war existed, and went simply to show the cause of it. The gentleman, therefore, and I agree upon that fact, that war does exist there. Then I ask whether this policy should be continued; whether it is absolutely essential to feed these Indians who are engaged in aiding and assisting those who are on the war-path?

The next point is as to the number of these Sioux. The gentleman from Massachusetts makes the assertion with a good deal of confidence as to the number of Indians there. I have heard all sorts of statements as to the entire number of the Sioux, ranging from 50,000 down to 30,000; and my judgment is, as far as I can ascertain the facts, that 30,000 or 35,000 is the outside number of the Sioux in that region. Now, in reference to the number at the Red Cloud agency I want to have read a paragraph from a pamphlet of Professor Marsh.

The Clerk read as follows:

> NUMBER OF INDIANS AT AGENCY OVERESTIMATED.
> There is good reason to believe that the number of Indians supplied with provisions at Red Cloud agency has been largely overestimated, resulting in extensive losses to the Government. According to the provision returns of Agent Saville for the fourth quarter of 1874, which he rendered to the Interior Department, there were 15,117 Indians who received rations at the agency October 1, 1874. The same official document states that on November 8 (the day before my arrival) there were 12,351 Indians fed at the agency. I was informed by the agent and other persons immediately connected with the agency that two or three thousand of these Indians belonged to the northern tribes and were encamped within a short distance of the agency, on the north side of White River. Agent Saville subsequently confirmed this statement in an interview with Rev. S. D. Hinman and myself, in Washington, May 31, 1875, and stated, also, that some of these northern Indians received annuities at the annual issue, November 12, 1874. A few days after the issue of annuity goods, when about to start with my expedition across White River to the northward, I was informed by the agent and others that the northern Indians were still in camp there; but on crossing the river with my party I found less than forty lodges by actual count, and ascertained that all, or nearly all, of these were Ogallallas, belonging to Red Cloud's band. During the next ten days, moreover, I repeatedly crossed the great northern trails leading to the Black Hills, and ascertained beyond a doubt that no considerable body of Indians had recently passed over them. For these reasons, and others which I deem equally conclusive, I believe the thousands of northern Indians officially reported at this agency to be a myth.
> The number of Indians actually at Red Cloud agency when I was there in November last could not have been more than twelve hundred lodges, or eighty-four hundred individuals. Judging from all the information I could obtain, I doubt if this number has been exceeded within the last two years. Some observers best qualified to judge placed the number lower, and among these was Jules Ecoffey, of Fort Laramie, whom I have known for several years. He was with me at the agency, acted as my interpreter in one council, and is personally acquainted with nearly all the Indians there. The statement of the agent that on October 1 there were at the agency over 15,000 Indians no disinterested person familiar with the facts believes for a moment, especially as at that time the wilder Indians had not commenced to return to the agency for the winter.

Mr. SEELYE. Mr. Chairman, this is a very important matter. It is most important that we make no mistake respecting the number of these Indians. The Sioux problem is the most difficult of all the Indian problems. And while I will say nothing respecting the authority which has just been read, I have other authority which I think all of us will recognize as certainly not inferior to that which has been given. The commission sent out to the Black Hills, of which Senator ALLISON was chairman, reports as follows, (I read from the last report of the Indian Commissioner, page 192:)

There are at Red Cloud and Spotted Tail agencies at least twenty thousand Indians now subsisted and cared for by the United States.

I have only to add the numbers at the other Sioux agencies. Now the numbers at the other five agencies of the Sioux are, by actual count, brought before us, and when added to those at Red Cloud and Spotted Tail make up a total number of 43,484.

Now, Mr. Chairman, there can hardly be any exaggeration of the importance of this precise point, and I desire that the House will give attention to the actual method taken of learning the exact number of persons. Says a letter received from the Red Cloud agent, not from Agent Saville, but from Agent Hastings, an agent against whom a word has never been said, giving the actual method and the reason for affirming the existence of this large number of these Indians—I ask the Clerk to read it.

The Clerk read as follows:

RED CLOUD AGENCY, NEBRASKA, May 19, 1876.

SIR: In reply to your communication of the 2d instant, marked F, I would respectfully inform you that the heads of different bands were notified to get their people close together. A separate party worked in each camp at the same time, so as to prevent as far as possible the Indians from being counted twice; each lodge was visited and the people contained therein counted and entered on the list; a ticket to correspond was given to the representative of each lodge, which was afterward brought to the office and checked up with the list.

The number of Sioux counted are about equally divided between the Ogallallas, Wagogas, and Cut-off bands.

The Indians made no resistance to the count. The following-named persons were engaged in taking the census: William Garnett, William Roland, Tod Randall, Dr. L. A. Brewes, Frederick Kennedy, and Richard Outhouldt.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

JAS. S. HASTINGS,
United States Indian Agent.

Hon. J. Q SMITH,
Commissioner Indian Affairs, Washington, D. C.

Mr. SEELYE. I now ask that a similar letter be read from the agent at the Spotted Tail agency, that we may see that the same careful method of enumeration has been pursued, though it should be said also that this is a recent enumeration, affirming the enumeration that had been made before.

The Clerk read as follows:

SPOTTED TAIL AGENCY, NEBRASKA,
May 20, 1876.

SIR: I have the honor to reply, in answer to your letter of the 2d instant, relative to the enumeration of Indians, as follows: The method followed in making the count of these Indians was to go to every camp, visit each lodge, call the head of the family, and take his statement.

As to the measure and manner of resistance, no active resistance was offered, although it was strongly talked of; and it was only when I fixed the time when I would visit their camps, and went there personally, that I overcame their opposition.

I was accompanied and assisted by L. A. Brewer, agency physician; Louis Bordeaux, agency interpreter; and Whirlwind Soldier, an Indian.

The result of the count by bands was as follows: * * * Bands, 223; families, 1,274; average, 7.42; total, 9 606.

Respectfully, your obedient servant,

E. A. HOWARD,
United States Indian Agent.

Hon. COMMISSIONER OF INDIAN AFFAIRS,
Washington, D. C.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. RANDALL. I am willing to have the House rest its judgment between the statements of Professor Marsh and the statements of these Indian agents.

Mr. SEELYE. If the gentleman will allow me, what I read was not entirely the statements of Indian agents. Here we have the report of the commission of the United States of which Senator ALLISON was chairman, from which I read.

Mr. RANDALL. The Indian agents are directly interested, and they admit that under their manner of taking this census they were liable to imposition; but the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BLOUNT] reminds me that that was not the statement of Senator ALLISON.

Mr. BLOUNT. He had nothing to do with the enumeration of the Indians.

Mr. SEELYE. The gentleman does not deny that what I read was a statement from the report of Senator ALLISON?

Mr. BLOUNT. I merely state that he had nothing to do with the enumeration of the Indians.

Mr. SEELYE. But I read from the report of the Black Hills commission; the gentleman does not deny that.

Mr. BLOUNT. I only state that Senator ALLISON had nothing to do with the enumeration of the Indians.

Mr. SEELYE. This was a statement to which Senator ALLISON attached his name.

Mr. RANDALL. The Indian agents are interested in augmenting the number of the tribes; but in addition to that, the admission by these agents of the manner in which they take this census tells at once plainly that the information we have from Professor Marsh and others well acquainted with the numbering of the Sioux Indians shows that the number has been overestimated. The agent goes to the heads of families and asks them the number of their families. Well, each Indian has a direct interest in duplicating the number of his family, so that he may get twice the number of rations; for instance, if he chooses to say that his family consists of ten, when it really only consists of five, he secures a double quantity of food.

I think the House can safely rely on the opinion of Professor Marsh, which is corroborated to me by a gentleman who formerly was a Delegate in this House, who expressed the same opinion that the number of Sioux was about thirty thousand, and he has lived twenty years among them; and the very man upon whom the gentleman from Massachusetts relies has since been discharged, as I am advised, from his conduct.

Mr. SEELYE. Not at all; the gentleman is entirely misinformed.

Mr. RANDALL. I am advised by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BLOUNT] that it was so stated before the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. SEELYE. The gentleman from Georgia will allow me to say that both the gentlemen from whom these letters are received are still in the service.

Mr. RANDALL. Is Mr. Saville?

Mr. SEELYE. Mr. Saville has not been quoted here by myself.

Mr. BLOUNT. That was the authority you referred to from the report of the commission.

Mr. SEELYE. The gentleman is still mistaken.

Mr. FOSTER. I desire to ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania a question. This is a very important question, and I want him to inform the House how Mr. Marsh made his enumeration?

Mr. RANDALL. Mr. Marsh of course only learned from what he could hear and by personal observation, and he gave it in the letter which has been quoted. I gave also another person's statement who is entirely familiar with the Indians, and he gave it as a disinterested party.

Mr. FOSTER. He says, from his own statement, "They are at best mere estimates, without any of the aids of an actual enumeration."

The question was taken on the amendment to the amendment, and it was not agreed to.

The question recurred on Mr. SEELYE'S amendment; and, being put, there were on a division ayes 42, noes not counted.

So the amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. LUTTRELL. I move to strike out "$150,000;" my object being to strike out the whole appropriation. My reasons for making this motion are simply these: I do not believe in furnishing supplies to an open enemy, nor do I believe that any gentleman on this floor can conscientiously vote to furnish supplies to that tribe of Indians, when he must know that they are slaughtering indiscriminately men, women, and children in that Territory. I am opposed to furnishing a dollar to any one of them. Let us say to the Sioux Indians who have gone upon the war-path, leaving their infirm and decrepit and their wives and children for us to support while they are slaughtering our wives and children on the frontier, that they must support their own wives and children, and they shall not receive one dollar from the United States until they return from the war-path. Let us do this, and when they find they are compelled to support their families, they will return from the war-path speedily enough.

I am opposed to furnishing one dollar to these Indians. I have seen in years gone by too much of this sort of thing. During the last twenty-five years that I have resided on the frontier I have never known an Indian war but what in every instance those Indians who remained on the reservation and who remained within the limits of civilization received powder and other munitions of war and then went forth in the night-time and furnished them to those who were on the war-path. I appeal to my friend from Texas [Mr. MILLS] to substantiate what I say upon this point. It has been so in every instance while I have been on the frontier that supplies were furnished to those on the war-path by the Indians who remained in camp during the day.

During the late Indian war in Northern California and Oregon the Indians received their supplies in the day-time and at night sent them off by their trusted runners to those on the war-path, and the runners came back the next day hungry. I want no more of this furnishing supplies to Indians either on or off the reservation until they come back and lay down their arms.

Mr. MILLS. I move as a substitute for the amendment of the gentleman from California [Mr. LUTTRELL] to add to the pending paragraph the following:

Provided, That none of said sums shall be paid to said Indians until they shall cease their hostilities against the white people.

Mr. LUTTRELL. I accept the substitute.

The amendment of Mr. LUTTRELL, as modified, was then agreed to.

The Clerk read the following:

For this amount, to be expended in the purchase of beef, flour, bacon, sugar, and coffee, in proportionate quantities, for 35,000 persons, for subsistence of the Yankton Sioux and Poncas, and for purposes of their civilization, $1,000,000: Provided, That no portion of the appropriation hereby made for feeding the Sioux Indians, parties to the treaty of April 29, 1868, shall be available or be used for that purpose unless the said Indians shall first agree to relinquish all right and claim to any country outside the boundaries of the permanent reservation established by the said treaty for said Indians.

Mr. SEELYE. I move to amend the paragraph just read by striking out "$1,000,000" and inserting in lieu "$1,250,000." And I will state that this amendment, as well as the one I offered before, is submitted by direction of the Committee on Indian Affairs.

I do not wish to go over the points that have already been discussed; but, in addition to them, let me say that the appropriation for this item last year was $1,100,000. Before the year was completed it was found that there was a deficiency, which it has been necessary to supply by a deficiency bill of $150,000, making the whole sum actually used during the present fiscal year for the subsistence alone of the Sioux $1,250,000. That is the amendment which the Indian Committee feel it necessary to offer to the bill at this point.

Let me say, as illustrating the reason for it, that if, as I concede is proved as authentically as any statement in respect to the number of these Indians can be proved, if there are 43,484 of these Indians, then at eleven cents a day each for rations it will require $1,745,882.60 for the year, that is even at eleven cents a day each. Now the actual cost of full rations is fourteen cents a day, which would make the expenditure for the year $2,320,032.

We all know that this passing a deficiency bill is a reprehensible matter for many reasons; reprehensible in relation to the manner of legislation, and especially reprehensible on the ground of playing fast and loose with these Indians. We shall be obliged to pass such a deficiency bill before the year is over unless we make a sufficient appropriation now.

Mr. RANDALL. The gentleman has not given us quite all the information concerning the appropriation of last year for this purpose. The estimate last year was for $1,500,000, and Congress at the last session reduced it to $1,100,000; in other words, took off $400,000 from the estimate. The estimate this year was for $1,400,000, and the Committee on Appropriations have reduced it exactly the same amount that it was reduced last year.

I admit that there was a deficiency, but I attribute that deficiency entirely to mismanagement. There ought never to have been a deficiency at all. The Committee on Appropriations deem that $1,000,000 is adequate, if the Indians receive the full value that they should receive of what is due to them from the appropriation of a million dollars. It is alleged—I am not able to prove it, but it comes to us from almost every quarter—that the justification for the Indians going upon the war-path is that they do not get what they are entitled to and what the Government has agreed to give them.

Gentlemen conversant with these Indian matters go so far as to estimate the possible percentage of which the Indian is deprived in his intercourse with the agent, and those under the agent, from double weights of beef, from impure and defective flour, from spoiled bacon, and in various ways as to quality and quantity. It is alleged that that percentage to which I have alluded will range from 30 to 35 per cent. I have no doubt but what the million dollars here appropriated, if given to the Army to distribute, as provided for in another portion of the bill, will go quite as far as the million and a quarter dollars did last year.

Mr. FOSTER. I understand that the inspections are made now by Army officers.

Mr. RANDALL. I am not now speaking of inspection. When that matter comes up, I will show how that is made to cost the Government by means of excessive payments for the inspection of a mere modicum of goods. I am talking now about the delivery of the goods to the Indians. It is the deliberate judgment of those conversant with the subject that the Indians do not get within 25 or 30 per cent. of the amount of goods and food that they should get under the appropriation. I hope, therefore, that this amendment will not prevail.

Mr. LUTTRELL. And the Indians do not get even all the goods that the officers inspect.

Mr. SEELYE. I move to amend the amendment by striking out the last word. Mr. Chairman, nothing is easier than to indulge in vague and random statements upon this whole Indian question. I have confined myself, however, to actual figures from the best enumeration that can be made; and I put it to the House that with this number of Sioux to be fed and this cost of rations, $1,000,000 cannot be sufficient.

Mr. RANDALL. Why, sir, they told us last year that $1,500,000 would be required; and yet they did with $1,250,000, even including the deficiency appropriation. We are therefore safe in assuming that if they ask now for $1,400,000 that amount may safely be reduced in the same proportion.

Mr. SEELYE. The gentleman will pardon me for saying that that is very much as if a man should say that because he had for one year reduced the forage for his horse 50 per cent. below his estimate, therefore he might the next year make a still further reduction of 25 or 50 per cent.

Mr. RANDALL. I would not let the Indians have money or supplies while they are in arms.

Mr. SEELYE. I have simply to say that the appropriation last year did not cover the amount required, and the necessity for a deficiency bill arose from the Indians breaking away from their reservations and engaging in just those raids of which gentlemen complain.

Mr. RANDALL. We were made to pay the bills because of the decision of a council which brought no good, and which was clearly without authority of law.

Mr. SEELYE. I withdraw my pro forma amendment.

The question then recurred on the amendment of Mr. SEELYE to strike out "$1,000,000" and insert "$1,250,000," to be expended for beef, flour, &c., for Yankton Sioux and Poncas.

The amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. SEELYE. I am also directed by the same committee to offer the following amendment, to which I think there will be no objection from any quarter:

At the end of the paragraph insert the following: Provided, That $150,000 of this sum may be used for the subsistence of the Arapahoes and Cheyennes wherever they may be found.

Mr. RANDALL. I suggest to the gentleman that there are already appropriations embraced in this bill for the Arapahoes and Cheyennes if they are on reservations.

Mr. SEELYE. Those are the southern Arapahoes and Cheyennes. This provision is for the northern Cheyennes and Arapahoes. Some of them are at Red Cloud agency.

Mr. RANDALL. Is there any treaty with them? I am not aware of any.

Mr. SEELYE. Some of them are at Red Cloud agency at present.

Mr. RANDALL. Then they will be fed as part of the Sioux Nation.

Mr. SEELYE. They will not be fed as part of the Sioux under a strict interpretation of the law.

Mr. RANDALL. They have been fed.

Mr. SEELYE. That has been done from necessity, not by authority of law. This proposition is simply to make provision by law for doing this thing.

Mr. THROCKMORTON. I call the gentleman's attention to page 24 of the bill which makes provision for the northern Cheyennes and Arapahoes.

Mr. SEELYE. That is not a provision for their subsistence; and it is more than probable that during the year these Arapahoes and Cheyennes who are now at the Red Cloud agency may be removed—perhaps to Arizona. The object of this provision is simply that a part of this appropriation may be expended for their subsistence wherever they may be.

Mr. RANDALL. I understand exactly what will be the result of that. If we say that there may be taken from this appropriation of $1,000,000 $150,000 for another tribe of Indians, then next year we shall inevitably have a deficiency appropriation asked for on the ground we did not give the Sioux enough. With great respect to the gentleman from Massachusetts, I must say that in my judgment this is a mere entering-wedge for a deficiency next year. If these Indians are at the Red Cloud agency they will be fed there. If they are removed elsewhere, the Government must bear the expenses of their removal; an appropriation must be made for their removal into Arizona upon the reservation.

Mr. ELKINS. Into the Indian Territory.

Mr. RANDALL. Until these Indians are removed, there is no occasion to make any distinction among the Indians at Red Cloud agency. I hope therefore that the amendment will not be adopted.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate on the amendment is exhausted.

Mr. SEEYLE. I move to amend the amendment by striking out the last word. I want to call the attention of the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations to what he has evidently forgotten. On page 25 of this bill there is a provision, which we have already passed, that these "northern Cheyennes and Arapahoes shall remove to their reservation in the Indian Territory before the delivery of the supplies appropriated for by the foregoing clauses."

Mr. RANDALL. But there is no money appropriated.

Mr. SEELYE. Exactly; and this is a provision that these Indians may be paid from this appropriation.

Mr. RANDALL. Whenever the Indian Commissioner proposes to remove them to the Indian Territory then he will, and of necessity must, come to Congress for money for that purpose. He cannot move those Indians down there without an appropriation. While they are where they are they can be fed as heretofore.

Mr. SEELYE. Suppose Congress is not in session; what should the Commissioner do? He is required to remove them by the bill.

Mr. LUTTRELL. How many are there of the Cheyennes and Arapahoes?

Mr. SEELYE. About four thousand.

Mr. LUTTRELL. Forty-two thousand dollars is appropriated for them already.

Mr. SEELYE. But that is not for subsistence.

Mr. LUTTRELL. On pages 24 and 25, $42,000 is appropriated for the Arapahoes and northern Cheyennes.

Mr. SEELYE. That is not for their subsistence.

Mr. RANDALL. It is not asked for in the estimates. The Commissioner of Indian Affairs never spoke to me about it, and I have had frequent intercourse with him as well as with other officers of the Indian Bureau.

Mr. SEELYE. I withdraw my formal amendment to the amendment.

Mr. SEELYE's amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

APACHES OF ARIZONA AND NEW MEXICO.

For this amount, to subsist and properly care for the Apache Indians in Arizona and New Mexico who have been or may be collected on reservations in New Mexico or Arizona, $400,000.

Mr. MORGAN. I move to amend line 1143, page 47, by inserting "and fifty" after the word "hundred," so it will read "$450,000."

Mr. Chairman, the amount appropriated last year for the subsistence and care of the Apache Indians of Arizona and New Mexico was $450,000. That amount proved entirely inadequate to the proper care of those Indians. They were reported in a starving condition during this winter, and we were compelled to appropriate additional amounts, which we did in the deficiency bill: $25,000 for the Apache Indians in New Mexico and $50.000 for the Apache Indians in Arizona. That was barely sufficient to carry them through.

The estimated number of Apache Indians in these Territories is about nine thousand. I put the number at eight thousand. That would require 2,920,000 rations to feed them for a year. A ration costs the Government on those reservations about fifteen cents. That would make the cost of feeding them $438,000. Eight thousand is a low estimate for the Apache Indians in Arizona and New Mexico.

There is no reason why we are able to feed these Indians for a less amount this year than during the last year. Game is diminishing on the reservation, and I consider it important that an amount should be appropriated sufficient to provide for these Indians. They were inclined to leave the reservation, and it required a military force only a few weeks ago to keep them upon it. It is certain at least that the Apache Indians, if they are not fed, will not starve, but will leave the reservation and make raids upon the white settlements. I deem it a matter of economy we should keep up the appropriation sufficient to feed these Indians. If we do not feed them, we are likely to be involved in another Indian war, which will cost vastly more than to feed the Indians. I hope, therefore, as a matter of retrenchment, for the purpose of saving expense, the committee will accept this amendment and increase the appropriation to $450,000, which is $75,000 less than was expended last year.

Mr. RANDALL. Mr. Chairman, these Apaches are bold, rich, aggressive Indians, whose history shows they are willing to fight upon equal terms with anybody. They have been fed, as the gentleman has stated. The truth is no one dare go near most of the Apaches in New Mexico and Arizona. Such as do seldom come back. The appropriation last year, so far as I have been able to gather from the statements of the Bureau—the $450,000 appropriated up to the present time, has been expended in this manner: for goods, $28,461.99; for supplies, $301,989.34, and for employés the enormous sum of $23,696; but under the provision of this bill we shall not have to pay those employés, and therefore that will be saved. The expenditure for transportation was $16,196.22 and for various sundries $3,764.25. It makes in the aggregate only $374,103.84. If you deduct the amount which the employés cost you will find according to their own showing—and I shall take occasion to publish their own statements—there has been up to this time, excluding the disbursements for employés, only $350,000 expended. That is all that is now necessary; but, in the abundance of caution, so that nothing shall be lacking to secure these Indians in peace—and, as I have said, they are rich Indians, industrious Indians, aggressive Indians, willing to fight on equal terms with anybody—in the abundance of caution we have agreed to an appropriation of $400,000, rather than the amount shown to be all that has been expended up to this time out of the appropriation heretofore made. I ask attention to the tables, which I append to my remarks:

Statement of disbursements made from the appropriations for the Indian Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1876.

Heads of appropriations.	Amounts advanced to agents for disbursement.	Pay of special agents.	Buildings at agencies, and repairs.	Clothing.	Medicines and medical supplies.	Annuity goods.	Subsistence supplies.	Agricultural and miscellaneous supplies.	Expenses of transportation and storage.	Advertising expenses.	Pay of regular employés at agencies.	Pay of temporary employés at agencies.	Support of schools.

Mr. ELKINS. I rise to say one word in support of this amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri on behalf, as I understand it, of the Indian Committee. The chairman of the Committee on Appropriations says first that these are bold and aggressive Indians; then he says they are rich and industrious Indians. He says they are everything else but peaceable, and that people who have gone near them scarcely ever return. I merely desire to observe that his remarks are full of contradictions and betray a painful want of information on the subject of which he spoke.

Now for the gentleman's information. I want to say that one band of these Apache Indians are in the main hostile, but are now on a reservation. We have a policy with these Indians. It is the policy of the Government adopted and promulgated after many trials, and briefly stated, is to feed the Indians and keep them on reservations rather than fight them. You cannot do this by promising to feed them and failing to do so. Now the gentleman knows as well as he knows anything that the sum of $525,000 has been given to feed these Indians during the last fiscal year. He knows that there was an appropriation last year of $450,000 in the regular appropriation bill, and that $75,000 have been appropriated this year by way of a deficiency. I hold in my hand the report of General Hatch, the present able and efficient district commander of New Mexico, to General Pope, to the effect that if he had not recently made speedy disposition of the troops, and placed them in the vicinity of one of these reservations, there might have been an outbreak. This was about the time the last supplies were exhausted, and the only thing that saved this outbreak was the check by General Hatch and the appropriation of a certain sum to purchase supplies.

I appeal to the gentlemen of this committee whether it is not poor economy to try to retrench by starving these Indians, thereby hoping to save to the Treasury a sum of $50,000, when it will cost in another direction by the movement of troops in the event of war perhaps $500,000 and perhaps $1,000,000. I am confident that the movement of troops to subdue the hostile disposition manifested by these Apaches at the Hot Springs agency cost the Government not an inconsiderable sum of money.

Why is it that this policy is pursued of reducing the appropriation at every session, and incurring the risk of an Indian war, large expenditures, and the destruction of the lives and the property of the people? The Government has to pay it all in the end. Last session the appropriations were too small, and it is proposed to reduce them still further now, when to do so will render an Indian war imminent and imperil the lives and property of large numbers of people on the frontier.

I desire to submit this point to the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations. There are ninety-two hundred and forty-eight Indians in these two Territories to be provided for by this appropriation. The gentleman proposes to give them $400,000. The Territory of Arizona is in the southwest part of the United States, the farthest point of transportation without railway connection, and therefore it costs more money to get goods there than to any other point of the country; and I submit that $30, which is about the average amount for each head after deducting the expenses of transportation, &c., is too small a sum to feed the Indians. I do not care how the gentleman makes it up or by what kind of arithmetic he reaches his conclusions, I say it is impossible to support these Indians on an average of $30 a year for each head. They are not industrious, as the gentleman says; they have no stock; their hunting-grounds yield them little or no game, and all they have to depend upon is the small pittance from the Government.

Mr. RANDALL. They raise corn.

Mr. ELKINS. An Apache never did raise corn.

Mr. RANDALL. They raise corn in Northern Arizona.

Mr. ELKINS. That is not done by the Apaches; that is on another reservation by the Navajoes. The gentleman is entirely mistaken.

There is one more point I desire to make. I appeal to the House in all candor to consider that this is really a question of blood. Men, women, and children have been murdered by these Indians, and I submit the Government had better pay millions of dollars per annum than to allow its citizens to be murdered. It is no answer to say that the conduct of bad white men is partly the cause of the Indian troubles. This Government is able to subdue bad white men as well as bad Indians, and should protect the peaceable citizen from both. It is no answer to say that these appropriations are spent here and there improperly. It is the duty of the Government to check all these abuses, carry out its policy, and prevent fraud. But its first, greatest, and highest duty is to protect its citizens, particularly the poor frontiersman and his family. I wish to give an instance which occurred in a recent threatened outbreak at a ranch on the stage line between New Mexico and Arizona in the month of February last, where the Indians had been supposed to be peaceable. And what I relate is of common notoriety and in the records of the Indian Bureau.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. TOWNSEND, of Pennsylvania, obtained the floor, and yielded his time to Mr. ELKINS.

Mr. ELKINS. There were three men working at this point on their farms. They were doing well, and perfectly safe to all intents and purposes, when in broad daylight they were shot down by the Apaches while at their plows, their stock taken, and houses burned. I appeal to gentlemen of this House to endeavor to bring this question home to themselves and their families; I appeal to you who are here in this marble palace, or your homes, with your wives and loved ones safe, suppose that one of your family had been the victim and stricken down in this way, how would you feel toward the Government if it had failed in its duty to feed these Indians or in giving protection?

I come back, then, to this proposition, that the Government should be strong enough to give protection wherever its flag floats, and that it should be strong all around against bad white men as well as against hostile red men. I do not speak on behalf of Indian agents. But I ask you to do what is necessary to police the country and to protect human life. And let it not be said that this Government is so weak that it is on a level with the government of Turkey, that cannot afford protection to the people who desire to search for the tomb of Christ in the Holy Land from the wandering Bedouins.

You have in the heart of this continent and within the jurisdiction of the Government a few thousand roving, restless Indians that resist and defy you more than the Bedouins do Turkey, and render the lives and property of your citizens in constant danger, and up to date, for some reason, the Government has never demonstrated it had the power to subdue them and compel them to peace and respect for the flag. And this is because the Indian knows you have no fixed policy, and if you do it is not carried out. You promise to feed him, break your promise, and in doing so cause a war, the destruction of the lives and property of your citizens, and in the end conclude an honorable peace and treaty, which is kept until it suits the convenience of either party to break it.

Now I say you must adopt either the one policy or the other. You must fight the Indian and subdue him, or you must feed him. He says, "If you feed me I will stay on the reservation; if you do not I am going to kill, and take food wherever I can find it." He has the same instinct as the white man; and when the white man cannot get food for himself and his children he will steal, and, if necessary, will even kill in order to get it. You cannot expect anything better from an Indian.

Before I conclude, let me finish my calculation about the $30 per Indian. This insignificant sum of $30 is to support one person for a whole year. I ask the House just to think of it. There are 9,248 of these Indians to be fed out of an appropriation of $400,000. Deducting for transportation and all expenses of every kind, there is left an average of $30, and I say the Indian cannot live upon that. If you pass this bill you invite the Indians to a feast of slaughter. There is no way to avoid it.

I know something about this question. I have respect for the gentleman's [Mr. RANDALL] knowledge of the science of government, but he knows nothing in the world about Indians. But that does not touch the main point. What I want the House to do is for them to give a sufficient appropriation to feed these Indians. Give them enough to keep them on their reservations; and if your officers in charge fail to do their duty pass laws to punish them. It is the duty of the Government to keep its pledges and obligations to these Indians, and also to see that its officers perform their duty.

But it is said that Indians run away from their reservations. Well, sir, suppose 10 per cent. run away, you have still 90 per cent. remaining on the reservation who might otherwise be roaming abroad committing depredations and murdering our citizens. Now, sir, the other day when the river and harbor bill was under consideration an appropriation of nearly $6,000,000 was rushed through without discussion under a suspension of the rules; but this is a question in which the distant West had no interest.

If these Apaches were roaming around the city of Philadelphia and one of the gentleman's Quaker constituents was killed, there would be no objection to an appropriation, and millions of dollars would be spent to keep them on their reservations or to do anything else that might be required to protect human life.

Now, Mr. Chairman, as I have said, the House rushed through the other day the river and harbor bill, which was reported by the distinguished gentleman from West Virginia, the chairman of the Committee on Commerce, [Mr. HEREFORD,] and everybody voted for it. This was remarkable and extraordinary success in legislation; in these economical times almost without a parallel. But this is not without explanation. There is a river or a piece of one, a creek or a hollow that sometimes has water in it, in each congressional district and the public necessity requires all these should be cleared out at once.

Mr. RANDALL. Not everybody.

Mr. ELKINS. I did not hear the gentleman talk against it.

Mr. RANDALL. I had no chance.

Mr. ELKINS. That is remarkable.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. ELKINS. I want a few words more.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate is exhausted on the amendment.

Mr. RANDALL. How much time do you want?

Mr. ELKINS. Say about three minutes.

Mr. KELLEY. I move to strike out the last word, and yield my time to the gentleman from New Mexico.

Mr. ELKINS. As I was saying, Mr. Chairman, in the river and harbor bill the House gave five or six millions of dollars for that purpose, and yet you refuse to appropriate money to keep your pledges to the Indian tribes, thereby inciting them to go forth upon raids to commit murder and rapine and destruction of property. The trouble is the Indian reservations are all in the Territories; if there was a large one in each congressional district, I think the difficulty would soon disappear and millions would be voted without a word.

The river and harbor bill went through without objection from a single member—$6,000,000 voted away in less than an hour by a House determined upon retrenchment and reduction of expenditures. If during these perilous times, any branch of public improvement and work could be suspended for a season, it was work upon our rivers and harbors. Human life and blood, the safety of the property of citizens, did not call loudly for this work to go on. But, sir, on the other hand, an honorable necessity, interest in the welfare of your citizens on the distant confines of the Republic, safety of life and property, do demand that a sufficient sum be appropriated to retain these Indians on reservations.

But, sir, when the river and harbor bill was up for consideration I did not hear the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations say a word against it, nor the six millions it gave away; although he was suffering, literally sick to get an opportunity to oppose it, yet I did not hear a feeble word or see him make a feeble attempt to do so; and the gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. HOLMAN,] I do not see him in his seat—I beg pardon, I did not notice he was in the chair—did not say a word on the subject, nor shed a single tear at the disappearance of six millions at one dash from the Treasury. There is a river in Indiana, certainly one in the gentleman's district, and yet in the face of this record you refuse to vote a sufficient amount for the protection of the men who are hewing down the forests and carving out an empire in the West. Gentlemen talk about these things being sentimental, but it is not sentiment; these are facts. If it were in the power of the distant West to vote or be heard the result might be different, but we are without power; you do not care how many of our people are killed. But if the Sioux or some of those industrious Apaches of whom the gentleman from Pennsylvania speaks should be let loose in the neighborhood of Philadelphia or some of the Atlantic States, hundreds of millions would be appropriated, without a word being said against it, to feed them and keep them on their reservations.

Now I have perhaps said more than I should; but I do appeal to the House to grant us a proper appropriation. This kind of economy will cost blood and property. The New Mexico Indians are mostly peaceable and we have but few Apaches there, so that it cannot be charged that I am advocating this measure in order that the money may be expended in my Territory. Most of the Indians there have commenced agricultural pursuits, except the Apaches. I am speaking rather in the interest of Arizona, and I beg the House and the gentlemen in the majority to protect these people, and to give a sufficient appropriation of money.

Mr. RANDALL. I have nothing to do with discussing the river and harbor bill.

Mr. ELKINS. That is what I say is the matter with you.

Mr. RANDALL. The gentlemen who voted for that bill assumed the responsibility for it. I was one of the number who happened to be against it, and I am so recorded. It was passed under a suspension of the rules, whereby I was deprived, as was every other gentleman in the House, of an opportunity to discuss it. But here is an appropriation that I have an opportunity to discuss, and I think I am able to show that the sum which the bill recommends is quite adequate. The very papers which came from the Department on this subject go to show that of the $450,000 appropriated last year there is yet an unexpended balance of $46,900, and the sum which they state is necessary to be given to the employés either for their pay or expenditures is $70,492.27; and of that sum $28,015.74 is yet unaccounted for by the agents. This is a statement from the Bureau only received by me last night. It shows the taking out of $28,000 for employés; in fact $350,000 would be adequate here instead of $400,000. Now, in such a state of facts the committee would not be justified in recommending or the House justified in voting any additional sum beyond the $400,000. I ask for a vote.

The question was taken on the pending amendment to the amendment; and it was not agreed to.

Mr. THROCKMORTON. I move to strike out the last word. I wish to ask the Delegate from New Mexico if it is not notorious that the Apaches own large flocks and herds?

Mr. ELKINS. Not the Apaches, but the Navajos; they own large flocks of sheep.

Mr. THROCKMORTON. Then do I understand that they do own large flocks?

Mr. ELKINS. No; the gentleman is mistaken. The Navajos and some of the Utes own flocks and herds; but not the Apaches.

Mr. THROCKMORTON. Where is the Apache reservation?

Mr. ELKINS. There are two reservations in the Territory, the Hot Springs reservation on one side of the Rio Grande, and the reservation near Fort Stanton, on the eastern side of the Rio Grande, nearer Texas.

Mr. THROCKMORTON. I would like, if I could conscientiously do so, to support the amendment. But I believe it would be rather impolitic to appropriate this money for these Indians, and I am willing to stand by the Committee on Appropriations. It is notorious that, no matter how much these Indians are fed, you cannot keep them upon their reservations, but they will commit depredations upon the people of Mexico and Texas. I have a letter in my hand from the adjutant-general of the State of Texas in regard to these very Indians, setting forth that the Apaches from this very reservation in New Mexico came down in our country and stole our property, and were followed by our troops directly back to this very reservation. I think the amount named here is sufficient; let the Indians live within that amount. If they go off their reservation, then let the military punish them.

Mr. ELKINS. I agree with you there.

Mr. THROCKMORTON. I withdraw my formal amendment.

The question was then taken upon the amendment moved by Mr. MORGAN to increase the appropriation from $400,000 to $450,000, and it was not agreed to; upon a division, ayes 45, noes not counted.

The Clerk read the following:

Arapahoes, Cheyennes, Apaches, Kiowas, Comanches, and Wichitas:
For subsistence of the Arapahoes, Cheyennes, Apaches, Kiowas, Comanches, and Wichitas, and transportation of the same, who have been collected upon the reservations set apart for their use and occupation, $250,000.

Mr. MILLS. I move to amend by adding to the paragraph just read that which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

And the Secretary of War is hereby directed and required to prohibit the Kiowas, Comanches, Apaches, Kickapoos, Cheyennes, Arapahoes, Wichitas, and bands affiliated with them from crossing the Red River from the Fort Sill reservation into Texas; and rations shall be issued to said Indians for only one week at a time, and then only to such of them as shall be present.

Mr. PAGE. I move to amend the amendment by striking out "Secretary of War" and inserting "Secretary of the Interior."

Mr. MILLS. This amendment which I have offered is the same in substance as the one discussed some time ago, and which I withdrew in deference to the opinion of some gentleman in the House that it would be more appropriately offered to another portion of the bill.

The amendment suggested by the gentleman from California [Mr. PAGE] was then discussed. It was contended by some gentlemen on the other side of the House, the gentleman from Iowa, [Mr. KASSON,] I believe, that the Secretary of the Interior could have nothing to do with the military force on that reservation. It would be necessary to use some force if war parties started from Fort Sill reservation to go into Texas, in order to prevent them from crossing the Red River. Whenever the Secretary of the Interior needs to use any military to manage these Indians he calls upon the military arm stationed at Fort Sill reservation. If the Indians are kept under the control of the Interior Department, the Secretary of War would be called upon by the Interior Department to use this force to police the Red River and keep the Indians from crossing it. This amendment has been changed to meet the views of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. SEELYE] and others who objected to it in the form in which it was before offered. I think there can be no objection to it as it now stands.

Mr. RANDALL. There is no objection to it.

The amendment of Mr. MILLS was then agreed to.

Mr. RANDALL. I am instructed by the Committee on Appropriations to offer an amendment at this place, to come in as a new paragraph.

The Clerk read as follows:

Civilization and subsistence of Indians on the Malheur reservation: For this amount, or so much thereof as may be necessary, in the purchase of goods, subsistence stores, &c., for the Indians collected on the Malheur reservation, Oregon, and in instructing them in agricultural and mechanical pursuits, providing employés, educating children, procuring medicine and medical attendance, care for and support of the aged, sick, and infirm, for the helpless orphans of said Indians, or in any other respect to promote their civilization, comfort, and improvement, $25,000.

Mr. MILLS. I understood that the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations [Mr. RANDALL] was going to offer an amendment to the pending paragraph, and therefore I gave way. I have another amendment to offer.

Mr. RANDALL. I have no objection to the gentleman offering his amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The paragraph will be open to amendment after the pending amendment has been voted on.

The amendment of Mr. RANDALL was then adopted.

Mr. MILLS. I move to further amend by inserting after the amendment adopted on my motion the following:

And no arms or ammunition shall be issued, sold, or given to any of the Indians above named, and all arms and ammunition shall be taken from any Indian who may be proven to have committed any depredations on the whites or on friendly Indians.

The amendment was adopted.

Mr. RANDALL. I am instructed by the Committee on Appropriations to move to insert as a new paragraph after the one last adopted that which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Civilization and subsistence of Indians of the central superintendency. For this amount, or so much thereof as may be necessary to carry on the work of aiding and instructing the Indians of the central superintendency in the arts of civilization, in providing clothing, food, and lodging for the children attending school, in caring for the orphans, the sick, and the helpless, and in assisting the Indians generally to locate themselves in permanent homes, and sustain themselves by the pursuits of civilized life, $10,000.

Mr. SEELYE. I move to amend the amendment so as to make the amount $20,000, which is very desirable for this very desirable end.

Mr. RANDALL. The amount given for this purpose last year was $10,000. I agree with the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. SEELYE] that this money is spent by very good hands.

Mr. HOLMAN. I hope the amendment will be agreed to.

Mr. RANDALL. Will the gentleman assent to $15,000? That is $5,000 more than was appropriated last year.

Mr. SEELYE. But it costs $20,000 to do this.

Mr. RANDALL. No, sir.

Mr. SEELYE. I beg the gentleman's pardon. The additional expense was paid by these agents and superintendents of the Society of Friends, the body of men who the gentleman desires to change for military supervision.

Mr. RANDALL. No, sir; the military bill does not propose to interfere in any respect with the peace commissioners from the Society of Friends who go there; the gentleman is mistaken in that. I think $15,000 is quite adequate.

Mr. SEELYE. I will accept $15,000.

Mr. THROCKMORTON. I ask the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations whether these Indians are not already provided for under the different heads?

Mr. RANDALL. This is an additional appropriation. It is in fact a mark of respect to the Society of Friends.

Mr. THROCKMORTON. These Indians, under their respective heads, are provided for already. This is an additional appropriation, a mere gratuity. I am opposed to the amendment of the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, as well as the additional amendment proposed by the gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. SEELYE.]

Mr. HOLMAN. I hope the gentleman from Texas [Mr. THROCKMORTON] will not object to this amendment. The expenditure is to be made under the auspices of the Society of Friends, who have carried their benevolent efforts in behalf of the Indians to a very unusual extent, further perhaps than almost any other of our various organized bodies of Christian people. I trust that, in view of the certainty that this money will be judiciously expended, the amendment will be adopted.

Mr. PAGE. What is the amount proposed to be appropriated by the amendment in its present shape?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts moved to amend by inserting $15,000 instead of $10,000, which was accepted by the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

The question being taken on the amendment as modified, it was agreed to, there being ayes 80, noes not counted.

The Clerk read as follows:

MODOCS.

For this amount, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to provide, under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, settlements, clothing, food, agricultural implements, and seeds for the Modoc Indians that have been removed to, and are now residing within, the Indian Territory, $5,000.

Mr. PAGE. I am instructed by the Committee on Indian Affairs to offer the following as an additional section, which is accepted, as I understand, by the Committee on Appropriations:

That the sum of $2,000 be, and the same is hereby, appropriated for the benefit of the Tonkawa Indians now at the military post of Fort Griffin, Texas; that the money herein appropriated shall be expended for the benefit of said Indians by the commanding officer at Fort Griffin, under such conditions as may be prescribed by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs: Provided, That no part of said fund shall be applied to the removal of said Indians from the vicinity of such military post to any Indian reservation: And provided further, That such appropriation shall be applied pro rata to such Lipan Indians as may have been heretofore incorporated into the Tonkawa tribe and which still reside with such tribe.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Transportation:
For the necessary expenses of transportation of such goods, provisions, and other articles for the various tribes of Indians provided for by this act, $147,000.

Mr. SEELYE. I am directed by the Committee on Indian Affairs to move an amendment, to strike out in the paragraph just read "$147,000" and insert $219,200. This transportation of course must be provided for. The Indian Bureau has been obliged to expend during the present year $278,000 for transportation, and there are outstanding obligations which will make the sum over $300,000. This amendment appears to me to be necessary.

Mr. RANDALL. I will state the manner in which we have reached the various amounts to be appropriated for transportation. The amendment of the gentleman from Massachusetts takes I believe in every instance the estimates of the Commissioner, while the committee in various places have taken as a basis the amount expended in transportation during the last year, except in one case, that of the Sioux. For transportation for the Apaches, Kiowas, and Comanches the Commissioner asked for $10,000, whereas it appears that but $3,500 was expended last year. For the Cheyennes and Arapahoes $10,000 is asked, but only $5,500 was expended last year. For the various bands of Chippewas $5,000 was asked, and the full amount has been allowed by the committee. For the Crows $10,000 was asked, and has been allowed. For the Flatheads and other confederated tribes the Commissioner asked for $2,000; but we have given only $1,500, the amount expended last year. For the Navajoes we have given $5,000, the amount of the estimate. For the Nez Percés we have allowed nothing; the amount asked for was $1,000. The amount expended was very light; and it came, I understand, out of the general appropriation. For the Northern Cheyennes and Arapahoes we allow $1,000, the amount expended last year; the amount asked for was $2,500. For transportation of Shoshones and Bannacks we appropriate $4,000, the amount expended last year; while the amount asked was $5,000. For the Yankton Sioux we give $1,200; the full amount asked for. For the Tabequache, Muache, and others we give $5,000, the amount expended last year, instead of $10,000, the amount asked. The estimate for the Sioux we cut down from $150,000 to $100,000. It is agreed that by the proposed change in the method of transporting rations and other Indian supplies, so that they shall be distributed under the War Department from the military posts instead of being transported long distances by wagons, a large sum of money now expended for transportation will be saved. If we shall be disappointed and the proposed transfer of Indian affairs to the War Department should not be made, we shall advise that the amount be increased. We believe, however, that under the management of the War Department $50,000 can be saved in transportation. It is a simple question of arithmetic; and I think the committee are right about it.

Mr. SEELYE. I have not learned that mules or railroads work in transportation any cheaper for the military than others. I do not go into that, but say the gentleman has not spoken with his usual accuracy in reference to figures. The column of figures from which he has read as the amount expended during the last year is the amount appropriated. It has been necessary to expend a larger amount for transportation in order to get the goods to their destination, and sums have been taken from other appropriations. For instance, the gentleman says there has been expended for the Shoshones and Bannacks $4,000. That is the amount appropriated. Five thousand eight hundred and twenty-two dollars and twenty-four cents have been expended; and the same is true all through the list he has read.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 41, noes 97.

So Mr. SEELYE's amendment was rejected.

Mr. DUNNELL. I move the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

For continuing the collection of statistics and historical data respecting the Indians of the United States, under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, $3,500.

Mr. DUNNELL. That amendment restores to the Indian appropriation bill a clause which has been in the last two appropriation bills, providing for the collection of statistics and historical data respecting the Indian tribes. A gentleman has been at work on the matter provided for in this clause, and has made considerable progress, and expense has been incurred in the purchase of type, so the several Indian languages should properly be represented. The entire expenditure already made will be utterly lost to the Indian Department and the country unless for another year this appropriation may be provided. I hope the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations will consent to the insertion of this small amendment.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 49, noes 69.

So the amendment was disagreed to.

Mr. THROCKMORTON. I think after the paragraph in reference to transportation there should be added a provision that all contracts hereafter shall be let to the lowest bidder after advertisement. That has heretofore been the policy.

Mr. RANDALL. I submit the following amendment:

Provided, That hereafter contracts for transportation shall be advertised and let to the lowest bidder.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. RANDALL. I move the committee rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker pro tempore [Mr. COX] having resumed the chair, Mr. SPRINGER reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had according to order had under consideration a bill (H. R. No. 3478) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes for the year ending June 30, 1877, and for other purposes, and had come to no resolution thereon.

MAIL-CONTRACTS INVESTIGATION.

Mr. CLARK, of Missouri. I move, by unanimous consent, that the testimony taken before the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads in the investigation into mail contracts be ordered to be printed.

The motion was agreed to.

GENEVA AWARD.

Mr. LORD. I ask unanimous consent that the Geneva award bill be taken up on Monday next. It is now the special order from day to day. Inasmuch as I have to be absent on Tuesday for an indefinite period of time, I think it is reasonable the House should grant the motion I make to have the Geneva award bill set down for Monday next after the morning hour. I ask unanimous consent that the order may be made.

Mr. KELLEY. I suggest the gentleman add the words "immediately after the morning hour."

Mr. LORD. I so modify my motion.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair hears no objection, and it is so ordered.

Mr. GAUSE. I ask, by unanimous consent, to go to the Speaker's table for the purpose of taking up and putting on its passage a bill, (H. R. No. 155.)

Mr. BLAINE. Was unanimous consent given to take up the Geneva award bill on Monday next, to the exclusion of the right to suspend the rules on that day?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It is very rarely that such unanimous consent is granted.

Mr. BLAINE. That must be put in or else motions to suspend the rules will be in order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It is the understanding that the motion made by the gentleman from New York in reference to the Geneva award bill excludes the right to suspend the rules.

Mr. PAGE. Does the Chair decide that excludes the right to suspend the rules on Monday next?

Mr. LORD. The arrangement made with you will be carried out.

Mr. PAGE. Very well.

Mr. KELLEY. Therefore it was I suggested the insertion of the words "immediately after the morning hour." If it is to be some time during the day, I object. If immediately after the morning hour, so as to give time for the discussion of that important bill, then I have no objection.

Mr. LORD. That was the motion.

Mr. KELLEY. It is an important bill, and should not be crowded into half an hour. There should be time for discussion. I wish to be instructed by the discussion, for I confess my opinions are not clear.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair did not understand there was any limitation upon debate.

Mr. KELLEY. There will be if the day be spent in suspensions of the rules.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It comes up immediately after the morning hour.

Mr. PAGE. After the second call?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The first and second call are within the morning hour.

Mr. WHITE. Would it then be in order to suspend the rules?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Not until after the Geneva award is disposed of.

Mr. WHITE. Does that require unanimous consent?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It does.

Mr. WHITE. I object.

Mr. LORD. I thought it had been carried.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair must decide that the objection of the gentleman from Kentucky comes too late.

Mr. HOLMAN. The moment the Chair began to state the order proposed to be made, I asked what the subject-matter was. In the midst of the confusion I had not heard what it was. I did not understand the proposition which was pending before the House, and I rose to inquire what it was. A proposition to deprive the House of the right to suspend the rules on Monday is a very important matter. At the same time I am anxious that the gentleman from New York shall get the subject before the House on Monday.

Mr. BLAINE. The gentleman from Indiana must see that the assignment is not worth making unless it involves the suspension of the right to move to suspend the rules, because the instant you start the bill a motion to suspend the rules will remove it from the floor.

Mr. HOLMAN. Does this involve a suspension of the right to move to suspend the rules during the entire day?

Mr. BLAINE. Only until this bill is disposed of.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will again put the question. The gentleman from New York [Mr. LORD] asks the unanimous consent of the House that the Geneva arbitration award bill shall be set down as the special order, to the exclusion of the right to move to suspend the rules after the morning hour on Monday. It requires unanimous consent to make that order. Is there objection?

Mr. HOLMAN. I do not object if it is fixed for two o'clock.

Mr. JONES, of Kentucky. I object. I shall object to any privilege being given to new business till special orders which are now lying over shall be reached.

Mr. LORD. I ask the gentleman from Kentucky to hear me for a moment. This bill for which I desire Monday to be assigned is in its proper place. Except one small matter, it is ahead of all other business on the Calendar. I might call it up at any time to-morrow or Monday. All I ask is that, inasmuch as I have to leave the House on Tuesday, perhaps for an indefinite period, and as I have yielded on this bill several times for other matters, I ask this House to be so courteous in that regard, this being a matter of such importance, as to allow me to call it up on Monday. It is of no consequence for me to present it, unless it is assigned for consideration immediately after the morning hour.

Mr. JONES, of Kentucky. May I ask the gentleman from New York for what period his bill was originally made a special order?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The bill relating to the Geneva award was on March 16 made a special order for March 29 after the morning hour. The bill reported by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. JONES] was made a special order on March 30 for the 18th of April, after the morning hour.

Mr. JONES, of Kentucky. The bill of the gentleman from New York having been made a special order before mine, I withdraw my objection.

Mr. HOLMAN. I would suggest to the gentleman from New York that he say two o'clock, instead of after the morning hour.

Mr. LORD. Very well.

There being no further objection, the bill (H. R. No. 2685) for the distribution of the unappropriated moneys of the Geneva award was made the special order for Monday at two o'clock, to the exclusion of all other orders and of motions to suspend the rules, until disposed of.

DISTRICT COURTS IN ARKANSAS.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will now read the title of the Senate bill which the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. GAUSE] desires to take from the Speaker's table and put upon its passage.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. No. 155) to amend sections 533, 556, 571, and 572 of the Revised Statutes of the United States.

Mr. GAUSE. The bill simply provides for changes in the arrangement of the district courts in Arkansas. It is very important that it should be passed, and I think there can be no objection to it.

Mr. HOLMAN. Let the bill be read.

The bill was read.

Mr. PAGE. I move that the House do now adjourn.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is, Will the House consider this bill at this time?

Mr. BURCHARD, of Illinois. A recess has been ordered; and I suggest that the gentleman from California modify his motion so that the House shall take a recess.

Mr. PHILLIPS, of Kansas. I object to the present consideration of the bill.

Mr. PAGE. I move that the House take a recess, but yield to my colleague [Mr. LUTTRELL] to offer a resolution for reference.

NAVY-YARD AT MARE ISLAND.

Mr. LUTTRELL. I ask unanimous consent to offer the following resolution for reference to the Committee on Naval Affairs:

Resolved, That a committee of five members of this House be appointed by the Speaker, and they are hereby instructed to make inquiry into certain alleged frauds and abuses existing at the navy-yard at Mare Island, California, and that said committee have the right to send for persons and papers, to employ a stenographer and an expert accountant, that they have leave to sit during the recess, and that they make report to the next session of this House.

Mr. KELLEY. I object, and I shall continue to object until these investigations are conducted with open doors.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. SYMPSON, one of their clerks, announced that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles, with amendments; in which the concurrence of the House was requested:

A bill (H. R. No. 339) for the relief of E. D. Franz;

A bill (H. R. No. 341) for the relief of Louis Rosenbaum;

A bill (H. R. No. 1071) for the relief of Lieutenant James B. Sinclair, United States Army; and

An act (S. No. 675) to enable Horace L. Emery to make an application to the Commissioner of Patents for the extension of letters-patent for improvement in cotton-ginning machines;

An act (S. No. 676) authorizing the construction of a light-house and fog-bell on Round Island, Straits of Mackinac;

An act (S. No. 678) for the relief of Ephrajm P. Abbott;

An act (S. No. 769) to alter and appoint the times for holding the circuit court of the United States for the fourth judicial circuit, and for other purposes;

An act (S. No. 770) for the relief of Judson S. Post, of Missouri, late disbursing officer of the United States Navy;

An act (S. No. 825) to provide for the more speedy adjustment of the accounts of the Treasurer of the United States; and

An act (S. No. 872) for the relief of the family of the late John T. King, and of L. B. Cutler.

MILITARY BRIDGE OVER BIG SIOUX RIVER, IOWA.

The SPEAKER pro tempore, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting copy of the report of the General of the Army upon the subject of the repair of the military bridge over the Big Sioux River, Iowa; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

BRANT ISLAND LIGHT-HOUSE.

The SPEAKER pro tempore also, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting letter from engineer secretary of the Light-House Board, in reference to the destruction of the Brant Island light-house by fire; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

ARMY PROMOTIONS.

The SPEAKER pro tempore also, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting petition of officers of the Army asking for rule of promotion in the line of the Army; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

CARRIAGE HIRE FOR WAR DEPARTMENT.

The SPEAKER pro tempore also, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting a statement of amounts paid for cost of carriage hire for the War Department from March 4, 1869, to March 1, 1876; which was referred to the Committee on Expenditures in the War Department.

ENGINEER CORPS.

The SPEAKER pro tempore also, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting a communication from the Chief of Engineers, containing information as to the Engineer Corps, called for by House resolution of April 27, 1876; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

SUBSISTENCE FURNISHED TO MEN OF THE SIGNAL CORPS.

The SPEAKER pro tempore also, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting a letter from the Commissary-General of Subsistence concerning the cost of subsistence furnished men of the Signal Corps during the past and present fiscal years; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Mr. COOK was granted leave of absence for a few days on account of sickness.

Mr. MACKEY, of Pennsylvania, was granted leave of absence for six days on account of business.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

On motion of Mr. O'BRIEN, by unanimous consent, leave was granted for the withdrawal from the files of the House of the papers in the claim of Joseph H. J. Rutter, presented to the Thirty-ninth Congress, and upon which no adverse report had been made.

And then, on motion of Mr. HOLMAN, the House (at five o'clock and twenty minutes p. m.) took a recess until seven o'clock and thirty minutes p. m.

EVENING SESSION.

The recess having expired, the House re-assembled at half past seven o'clock p. m., Mr. COX in the chair as Speaker pro tempore.

TARIFF BILL.

Mr. KELLEY. I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union on the tariff bill.

The motion was agreed to; and the House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, (Mr. SPRINGER in the chair,) and resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 3132) to revise and simplify existing laws imposing duties on imports and to reduce taxation.

Mr. HUNTER. Mr. Chairman, the bill under consideration makes such a radical reduction in our present tariff law that it is an impossibility for those who favor protection to the laboring interests of the country to undertake to perfect it by amendments, as it would require a change of rate in nearly every item embraced within the bill. I had hoped that the committee would take our present law and amend it, by increasing and diminishing its rates wherever necessary, so as to make it fully and strictly protective to every industry within this country; placing upon the free list every article shipped from abroad that we do not grow or produce here by labor which enters into general consumption by the rich and poor alike, such as tea and coffee, so as to make them as cheap to the consumer as possible; but, upon all articles of luxury shipped from abroad, such as fine wines and brandies, silks, broadcloths, laces, diamonds, &c., put the tariff high, so as to make as much revenue out of them as they will stand, as they are consumed almost entirely by the wealthy, and it makes but little difference to them what an article costs, as they seldom stop to inquire the price when they need it for use. By this kind of tariff we would protect our labor and enrich our own country, and place the heaviest burdens of taxation upon the wealthy, who are best able to stand them, and at the same time raise revenue to support the Government without making our manufactured articles any dearer to the consumer. But instead of this the committee has brought forward a bill that does not make the proper discriminations between articles of necessity and luxury shipped from abroad, and with rates so low upon the articles we manufacture that they would not protect our labor from the impoverishing competition of the cheap labor of Europe, which would as certainly destroy our manufacturing establishments, and thereby seriously injure the material interests of the country or compel our laboring people to work at the same wages that are paid for labor in Europe, as that the weak must give way to the strong when they come in contact. Either would be very detrimental to us as a nation, for breaking down our manufacturing establishments would bring ruin upon the country, and to reduce our laboring people to the cheap wages of Europe would fill the land with untold misery and want. I feel that nothing but harm would grow out of this bill if enacted into a law. I shall therefore do everything I can to prevent its passage.

Every man upon this floor, with perhaps one or two exceptions, admits the necessity of a tariff, but we differ as to the kind we should have. One portion insists that its real purpose should be to raise revenue, and not to give protection to labor, except that incidental protection that a cheap or revenue tariff, as it is called, would give; these are called free-traders; while the other class insists that its real purpose should be to protect labor and at the same time raise revenue; this class are called protectionists.

The bill under discussion is gotten up to suit the views of the free-traders, in opposition to the present law, which is regarded as protective in its character.

The questions involved within this discussion affect the real and substantial interests of the country more than any others that can come before Congress. They embrace the subject of taxation as well as the financial and laboring interests of the nation, which are the vital questions of the day. They should therefore be fairly presented and discussed, with a view to enlighten, and not to deceive, the people.

The advocates of this bill are opposed to a protective tariff for the reason, as they say, it dwarfs our industries, closes the markets of the world against us, increases the price of all manufactured articles, and thereby robs and impoverishes the laboring people of the country. Is that true? I insist that it is not, but it is the very reverse of truth. I hold that if our tariff was made strictly protective to our industries, as above indicated, and the interest upon our money made low so that money could be used profitably in business, they would be the greatest blessing that Congress could possibly bestow upon the whole country, and especially upon the laboring-people. Such enactments would at once revive business, establish confidence among our people, put all of our manufacturing establishments in full operation, and thousands more would spring up all over the country, adding prosperity and wealth to our people; laborers would be increased by the millions, and all would be employed at wages that would not only enable them to live, but to properly clothe and educate their children. The markets of the world would then be supplied from our workshops. Competition among our own manufacturers would be so great that products, instead of being high and thereby robbing and impoverishing the poor, would be made cheaper to the people. In short, every department of business thoughout the country would be made prosperous and our people made happy. These are propositions, to my mind, that can be made as plain and clear as the noon-day sun.

If we should pass this bill I would feel that we had inflicted upon the country one of the greatest calamities that could possibly befall it. Within two years most of the manufacturing establishments in the United States would be closed, unless the laboring people of this country would be content to work for the same wages that the laboring people of Europe do. If the advocates of this bill desire that the laboring people of this country should be reduced to a state of pauperism, they have struck upon the exact plan to accomplish it. With such a tariff how would it be possible for our manufacturers to do business and compete with the manufacturers of Europe where their machinery and means for manufacturing are superior to ours; where interest on money that is used in manufacturing is about 60 per cent. and labor at least 50 per cent. cheaper than it is here, and all kinds of transportation less in the same proportion than we have to pay? I say how would it be possible for any manufacturer in this country to do business and compete with this cheap money, cheap labor, and cheap transportation of Europe, unless we reduce the wages of our laborers to the low prices paid there? It would be an utter impossibility for any one to manufacture here unless that was done.

Is it the object, then, of the advocates of this bill to stop manufacturing in this country unless our manufacturers will produce articles here as cheap as they are produced in Europe? How can they manufacture here as cheap as there unless interest and labor are made lower? The good book teaches us that the laborer is worthy of his hire. All admit that he is not properly rewarded in Europe for the services that are rendered. Capital there gets more than its share. Should it be our policy, then, to grind labor here as it is ground there by requiring it to work at wages that are not equal in value to the services rendered? I hope no man can be found on this floor who will advocate any such doctrine. It should be our policy, then, to lower interest but not the price of labor, for the reason that capital is now much better paid here than labor. The earnings of capital and labor should be placed upon an equality and kept so, as nearly as possible; it would be much better in the end for both. To do that, interest must be reduced and the price of labor raised rather than lowered, until interest and labor, after all expenses are paid, will find the same level in price. But the advocates of this bill, by lowering the tariff on all articles manufactured in this country, do the very reverse of that. They let interest remain where it is, but reduce the tariff about one-third, which will reduce the price of labor but not interest. Do they expect by any such short-sighted policy as that to cheapen goods in this country so as to benefit the people? It will not do so. The only effect of the lowering of the tariff on the products we manufacture in this country will be to dwarf our manufacturing interests by closing many of our workshops, check the growth of the country, produce general stagnation in business, injure the farmers, mechanics, and merchants, and impoverish the day-laborers. This will produce, I admit, a decline in the price of goods as well as every other commodity while our manufactories are thus being destroyed; but it will be through the general ruin and prostration of business, and not through prosperity to the country. Building up the country by such a policy is on a par with the theory of bleeding a man in order to give him strength, when blood is the very thing he needs for that purpose. All wealth comes from labor. Is it our policy, then, to grind our labor instead of fostering it, in order to get wealth out of it? By this grinding process we make the rich richer and the poor poorer; we render the few happy by giving them wealth, but make the masses wretched and miserable by reducing them to poverty.

This bill is based upon the idea that if our tariff is high, then goods are dear; if the tariff is low, then goods are cheap. Nothing can be more preposterous than that. Competition is what regulates prices, and not the tariff. The true purpose of a tariff should be to produce healthy competition. If it is too high or too low, it may fail to produce the required competition and then goods would be dear under either. For example, if we should put the tariff so high on articles we manufacture in this country that it would prohibit the European manufacturers from bringing their products here for sale, in that case we would prevent the foreign article coming in competition with those we manufactured, and it would make everything we manufactured dear, unless the competition among our manufacturers would be great enough to keep down the price. On the other hand, if we should make the tariff so low that the foreign manufacturers with their cheap money and cheap labor could bring their goods here and sell them lower than we could afford to manufacture them with money and labor at our prices, then our manufacturers would be compelled to stop work or lose money. So soon as they would stop the European manufacturers would have no competition to keep them down in price; then they would put up prices and articles would be dearer. A tariff, then, that is too high or too low would be injurious to the country, for each would fail to produce healthy competition. What we want is one that will give ample protection to our labor; not so high as to prohibit the foreign manufacturers from coming into fair competition, nor so low that we cannot manufacture and pay to our laborers good wages. With a tariff that will thus protect our labor competition will be strong, the market steady, and if interest was low goods would be as cheap as they are in Canada.

This bill reduces the tariff so low that if it should become a law we could not manufacture under it with interest and wages at their present rates. Our manufacturers would be compelled to retire from the contest, and our laborers would have to seek the plow for a support for themselves and families. Then we would have to depend upon Europe for our manufactured articles, and in a very short time we would find them costing us more than we now pay; for when our manufacturing establishments are once broken down, the competition that now regulates and keeps the price of articles at reasonable rates would be gone, and we would be completely in the hands of the European manufacturers. They would then have the articles to sell, and we would be compelled to purchase them. They would fix the prices, and we would have them to pay, and we would soon find them higher than now.

I know that many will treat this argument lightly and insist that our manufacturing establishments under a low tariff would not be closed but would continue as now. What would induce them to continue? They could not make their salt manufacturing under a tariff as low as this, with interest and wages as now paid in this country. The European manufacturers could and would, with their cheap money and cheap labor, undersell and break every one of our manufacturers who would undertake to do business, with perhaps a few exceptions. Manufacturing under a low tariff would be the most uncertain and unsatisfactory business that a man could follow in this country, for the reason that, in order to make a reasonable profit on the money invested and compete successfully with the European manufacturers, it would require a heavy reduction of wages that would keep up a constant war between the operators and the laborers. Experience has shown us that when labor is not properly paid it is restive and uncertain, it will combine and strike; that injures the manufacturer as well as the laborer, for strikes frequently prevent the manufacturers from complying with their engagements to fill orders, and thereby seriously injures their business by loss of trade as well as actual loss of money, and while it lasts it deprives the laborers of their daily wages and brings suffering upon their families. At present interest is so high and foreign competition so great that our manufacturers are not making any money; many of them have closed their shops and others working only half time, and in order to keep their heads above water and prevent loss they have cut down wages. This has made labor restive and caused strikes, and the country has been seriously injured and the people are suffering on account of it. To now reduce the tariff would cause a still heavier reduction of wages, which would only make matters worse instead of better. Capital is cowardly at best, and with these troubles caused by a low tariff manufacturing would be so uncertain and so unpromising that capital would be driven almost entirely from the business. A protective tariff with low interest would prevent all this. It would insure capital that engaged in manufacturing against loss from unequal competition from abroad and enable it to pay labor good and satisfactory wages; this would keep down strikes, increase manufacturing, create strong home competition, make business steady, manufactured articles cheaper, and the whole country prosperous.

I admit if we should not lower interest but put wages down to the pauper prices paid in Europe we might with our natural advantages keep up manufactures here under this low tariff. But who would be benefited by so doing? None but the few. It would destroy the laboring-men of the country, the very class that needs protection. With our present tariff, which is much higher than the rates proposed in this bill, do we not find many of our workshops now closed? Why? Because interest is so high and our monetary matters so unsettled that men are afraid to engage in business. Experience has shown them that interest eats faster than the profits on business will make. If in addition to this burden of interest we reduce the tariff, what will be the result? We will let in goods manufactured abroad at much cheaper rates than now, and, for the purpose of breaking down our manufactories, they will be offered at reduced rates. If our manufacturers are to put down the price of their goods so as to compete with these cheap goods, they must rob labor of that difference or stop work, or break. No other alternative is left them. The laboring-man can see that the reduction of the tariff means that much reduction in his wages, and he must work at these reduced wages or quit the shop and go to the plow or starve.

Ah, but says the advocate of the cheap tariff, by reducing the tariff do we not let in the cheap goods and make it that much better for the poor man? Will he not get his goods cheaper then than now? Let us see. When our manufacturing establishments are once broken down, how long will these foreign goods remain cheap? About as long as the freights on our railroads remain cheap, after our water lines of transportation are frozen up late in the fall. Our water lines of transportation furnish the competition that brings down the price in freights on the railroads and keeps them down, as long as they are open, the same as our home manufacturing establishments compete with the foreign manufacturers and keep down their prices. These home manufacturing establishments can only be maintained by putting a tariff on all articles manufactured abroad where we manufacture the same article in this country. That tariff should be high enough, so that when the foreign manufacturer pays for making the article in Europe, including all expense, and pays the transportation here, and then pays our tariff, it will have cost him as much as the same article costs our manufacturer here to make it—including insurance, interest, and good living wages to our laborers; then each manufacturer stands upon an equality, and can compete fairly; the one that will sell his goods the cheapest will get the trade. But if we put the tariff so low that manufacturing cannot be carried on in this country, then we destroy our manufacturing interests, impoverish our laboring men, and at the same time destroy the competition that keeps down the price of all articles that we consume. Then the foreign merchants and manufacturers will have us within our power, and will take advantage of our necessities, and put up the price of all articles to suit themselves, the same as our railroads do when competition is broken down by reason of our water lines of transportation freezing up.

These foreign merchants and manufacturers are no better than our railroad kings, and we know from sad experience that they take advantage of our necessities whenever they can. And so will the foreign manufacturers and merchants do the same thing when they have the opportunity. The argument that the competition among the foreign manufacturers, were our manufacturing establishments broken down would be sufficient to keep the price of articles cheap, is unsound. If not, why is it that the competition among the railroads does not keep down the price of freights when our water lines of transportation are frozen up? for they furnish as much competition with each other and are far more able to supply the demand than the foreign manufacturers would be in the case put. The reason for it in the case of the railroads is this: the demand for shipments is so great and there being no way to ship except by the railroads, they have the shippers entirely within their power, and, so having them, they fix the rates to suit themselves and the shippers have them to pay. So would the foreign merchants and manufacturers take the advantage of us if our manufacturing establishments were broken down; for in that case our demand for goods would be so great, and there would be no way of supplying that demand except to purchase from them, for the reason that we could get them nowhere else: then they would have us as completely in their power as the railroads have the shippers after the water lines of transportation freeze up; and they would then fix the prices and we would have them to pay.

But, says one, that could not be so; for as soon as prices would go up our manufacturers would again commence operations, and that would create competition and bring down the prices. I cannot see what inducements there would be for our manufacturers to commence work again under such circumstances, after having been compelled to stop, for several reasons. First, it would cost them considerable money to start work. Second, they could not do so without skilled labor; and that would be very difficult to get, for such labor would not remain in this country after our manufacturing establishments were once broken down; and neither could it be induced to return here to work on uncertainties as to the time it would be employed, nor unless it received better wages here than were paid abroad. In the third place they would have no assurance without a protective tariff that they would not lose all they invested to commence manufacturing; for the reason as soon as they were ready to start work the European manufacturers could and would drop the price of goods so low that they could not turn a wheel in their establishments without losing money; the result would be that they would have to abandon the enterprise and lose all the money they put into it. So soon as the abandonment would take place, all competition would be destroyed; then up would go the price of goods again.

There is no use of any one insisting that our manufacturers would carry on their business under a low tariff the same as now unless the price of labor was put down, so that they could compete with the cheap labor of Europe. It would be utterly impossible for them to do so without reducing wages to that extent; and it is perfect folly to insist that they could or would do so without such a reduction of wages. A reduction of the tariff, then, means nothing more nor less than a reduction of the laboring-man's wages.

Why any one can insist that a cheap or revenue tariff, as it is called, is better for the people and the country than a protective tariff, I cannot understand. Under our present tariff we purchased last year from abroad over five hundred and forty-seven million dollars' worth of foreign products and collected from them in tariff duties over one hundred and fifty-four million dollars. Was not that enough to purchase from abroad? Under this bill, in order to collect the same amount of revenue it will require us to purchase abroad each year about seven hundred million dollars' worth of products. Does not every one see and know that every dollar's worth of manufactured products that we purchase abroad, where we produce the same kind of article in this country, we to that extent rob labor here? We now have at least a half a million of laborers that are idle, suffering and starving for employment. Is that the kind of tariff system that we need to build up our country and make it prosperous—a system that robs our labor by making nothing at home, but purchasing everything abroad? Such a policy would ruin and impoverish any nation or people upon the face of the earth. But, says one, "Our laborers need not be idle. If they will not work as cheap in the shops as other people, let them go to the plow and there seek honest employment." If they should all go to the plow, that would close our workshops and make farmers out of all our laborers, which would be disastrous to our farming interests, as I will presently show.

Many delude themselves with the idea that under a cheap tariff our people would be more prosperous, because the manufactured articles we consume would be so much cheaper to them. Says one, my suit of clothes cost me $60 in the city of New York, when I could have gone across the line into Canada and purchased the same article for thirty-five or forty dollars. But, says he, it is this abominable, outrageous, swindling, protective tariff that makes this difference. Why should we not break it down and let in those cheap goods to be worn and enjoyed by our people? Why will we suffer our poor laborers, farmers, and mechanics to be thus robbed for the benefit of the bloated manufacturers, who are sapping the life-blood from the people? We have been taxed long enough for their support. If they cannot manufacture goods as cheap as our neighbors across the line, let them quit and go at something else. Cheap goods are what we want and must have, and these we cannot have as long as we have this robbing protective tariff. This is the argument of the free trader. It is plausible and even winning when presented in the eloquent and fascinating tones of the distinguished gentlemen, Mr. COX, of New York, and Messrs. BURCHARD and MORRISON, of Illinois, who are all in favor of cheap goods, but against low interest. But this argument, when once dissected and its results clearly understood, if carried into full operation, will disclose the most destructive policy to all the material interests of the country, and especially to our laboring people, that could possibly be adopted.

A suit of clothes that costs in this country $60 falls under the head of luxuries. They are worn only by the rich and well-to-do. They are not worn by the poor. We do not manufacture the class of goods in this country that these fine suits are made from. It should be our policy to put the tariff high on this class of goods. The tax thus raised goes to support the Government; the wealthy pay it and can afford to stand it. But if we come down to the class of goods, both cotton and woolen, that are manufactured in this country, such as are worn by our laborers, farmers, and mechanics, and their families, we will find them about as cheap as we could purchase them in Canada. In the manufacture of these fine broadcloths we have no home manufactories that are able as yet to compete with the foreign article so as to bring down the price; but when we come to calicoes, shirtings, casinets, jeans, and the classes of goods that are worn by the masses of our people, they are low in prices and much cheaper than they would be if we had to depend upon Europe for them. It is a mistaken notion to suppose that our manufacturers, after they make an article, can then add the price of the tariff and make it that much higher to the consumer. Take the article of prints or calicoes; the tariff on them ranges from 5 to 6½ cents per square yard, and yet we can purchase all we want from our own manufacturers at 5 and 6 cents per yard. Will any one say that the tariff adds to the price of these calicoes? Shirtings are cheap in the same proportion. Take the various classes of steel and iron; the tariff on these is high, with two or three exceptions. Yet they are as cheap here as in Canada, where they have no tariff. The various kinds of iron, such as the farmers consume, can now be purchased at wholesale from 2½ to 3 cents per pound, and the best American steel at 15 cents per pound. Does any one want iron and steel cheaper than that? Salt, with a tariff of 12 cents on the hundred pounds when in barrels, is now quoted in the West at $1.40 per barrel; that includes the barrel and transportation. At the salt manufactories it can be purchased in bulk at 12½ cents per bushel. Is not that cheap enough? With a tariff from 10 to 12 cents per pound on wool, our farmers are enabled to raise it and compete in price with the foreign article; and still the manufactured articles made from wool under a tariff which is above 50 per cent. are as cheap, if not cheaper, under our present tariff than in 1857 and 1860, when the tariff was much lower than now. For example, we paid at wholesale for—

	Prices in 1857 and 1860 in gold.	Prices in 1875 in greenbacks.
Kentucky jeans	26 to 28 cents.	30 cents.
Tweeds	60 to 60½ cents.	50 to 62½ cents.
Sackings	$1.10.	$1.10 to $1.15.
Flannels	26 to 34 cents.	27 to 30 cents.
All-wool doeskins	80 to 85 cents.	80 to 85 cents.
Satinets	60 to 65 cents.	60 to 65 cents.

I have given the prices of these articles for 1875. At the present time they are still lower. Will any one say, then, that our tariff has made these various articles dearer to our consumers, when they are really cheaper than they were before the war, when the tariff was much lower than now? Why is it that these articles are so cheap when the tariff is high enough to be protective? It is because capital feels secure under a protective tariff and goes readily into manufacturing. Each manufacturing establishment that is erected creates that much additional competition, and this competition has become so great, that it has brought down prices about as low as our farmers, mechanics, and laboring-men can ask them, unless interest on money is made cheaper; for it must be remembered that all these manufactured articles are produced by labor, and if made cheaper except by lowering interest or improvement in machinery, it must be ground from the sweat and toil of labor, in which reduction all laboring-men will have to bear their proportion. If it had not been for our protective system capital would not have gone into manufacturing, and our country would not have been enriched as it is, and we would have been without the competition that has made manufactured articles so cheap, and to-day would have been suffering under the curse and blight of free trade and high prices. Under the cry of making cheap goods, which means simply cheap broadcloths and articles of luxury that we do not manufacture and which are consumed alone by the wealthy, for the class of goods used by our laboring people are now cheap, these free-traders expect to alarm the masses and induce them to join in breaking down our protective system, under the pretext that the articles they consume would be so much cheaper to them under a low tariff. Protection they say robs the laboring-man, while I assert it is his truest and best friend.

Take the case of the farmer. A protective tariff is what he wants and must have in order to make him really prosperous, for this reason: The farmer works hard all the season and raises a fine crop. What benefit is this crop to him unless he has a good market for it? How can he have this kind of market unless there are human beings and animals under their employ, engaged in labor other than farming, and at wages that will warrant them in consuming these products at good prices? This market the farmer wants near him; if possible, within his own county, so as to save transportation; he does not want it hundreds and thousands of miles away from him, so that the cost of transportation would eat up the value of the products and leave him nothing for his labor in raising them. Then, how is it possible for the farmer to have these human beings near him, working at profitable wages, so as to give him this good home market, unless they are engaged in manufacturing or the mining of coal or iron ore, or some other industry other than farming, induced by the prosperity of the country growing out of our manufacturing interests; and how can we keep up this manufacturing that stimulates and keeps up these other industries, and pay to these laborers this living price for their labor unless we protect them against the cheap labor of Europe? And how can we give this protection except by a tariff?

These are questions that the western farmers want the free-traders to answer when they undertake to show how a protective tariff robs them. Farmers who live near manufacturing or mining settlements, where a large number of laborers reside with their families, know the benefits of the market that they create for their products; and it will be a very difficult undertaking for the free-traders to convince them that this market is not worth more to them than one where the consumers are hundreds and thousands of miles away. A protective tariff builds up these manufacturing and mining settlements all over the country, while a cheap tariff destroys them. If goods are so cheap in Europe and Canada, why are not the farmers and laboring-men there, where they enjoy free trade, as prosperous as the farmers and laboring-men in this country? Will some free-trader please answer?

The honorable gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. BURCHARD,] in his argument the other day when this bill was under consideration, said that the manufacturing States were wealthier than the agricultural States, and upon that fact he based his argument that it was our high tariff duties that were enriching the manufacturers at the expense of the agriculturists. He omitted to mention the fact that the farmers within those manufacturing States were among the wealthiest classes within them. The true reason of the great wealth and prosperity of the manufacturing States is on account of their diversity of labor. The farmers raise good crops and the laborers in the mines and the shops consume them at good prices and save their transportation to a distant market. These laborers get good wages and spend most that they make in the neighborhood where they work, and as a natural result these States grow rich. I am anxious to have our agricultural and cotton States in the West and South, that are filled with coal and iron, to profit by the example of these manufacturing States of the East and induce manufacturing establishments in their midst. This can only be done by a protective tariff. We should therefore vote down this bill.

Every man who has given the subject any thought must know that if our manufacturers in this country have to pay from 8 to 10 per cent. for money to use in their business, when the European manufacturers can get theirs at 5 per cent., and have to pay at least 50 per cent. more for their labor than the European manufacturers do for theirs, and at least one-third more for all kinds of transportation than is paid in Europe, that it is an impossibility for our manufacturers to carry on business in this country and compete with the foreign manufacturers unless we protect them by a tariff against this difference in price of money, labor, and transportation. The report of Hon. Edward Young, Chief of the Bureau of Statistics, for the year 1875 shows that during that year the average rate of per cent. of our present tariff upon all articles shipped from abroad upon which a duty was charged was 40.62 per cent., which according to his estimate is about 8 per cent. less than the difference in the price of labor in this country and Europe, saying nothing about the difference in the cost of money and transportation here as compared with its cost there. Cannot any one see the hardships with which our manufacturers have to contend in order to do business under our present tariff when they pay good wages to our laborers?

But to mend matters this bill under discussion is brought forward. What does it do? It lowers our present tariff duties on an average about one-third, which would make the average percentage of the tariff if this bill was adopted less than 29 per cent., with interest on money in this country 60 per cent. higher than it is in Europe (for the difference between 5 and 8 per cent. makes a difference of 60 per cent.) and labor 50 and transportation at least 33⅓ per cent. higher here than there. How could it be expected that any man of sense would risk his money in manufacturing under such a tariff when the articles he made had to come in competition with articles from abroad that were manufactured with this cheap money and cheap labor? Is it not the height of folly for any one to contend that we could or would manufacture here under such a tariff as this? The free-traders all over the country, who as a general rule belong to the wealthy class, are raising a hue and cry against the tariff and insisting that it is what is making the hard times and impoverishing our people, when in truth and in fact it is the high interest on money that is robbing and impoverishing our people, and not the tariff. If the committee had turned its attention to the lowering of interest instead of tinkering with the tariff, it would have been much better for the country. Our present tariff is full low now upon many of the articles we manufacture in order to give the necessary protection to labor; and if we undertake to carry on manufacturing in this country with a tariff less than our present one, except on a few articles, it will require the difference to be taken from the price of labor, for capital will have its profit if labor has to suffer; and every man who earns his bread by the sweat of his brow, including the farmers, mechanics, and laborers, must share in that loss. And this loss to the laboring-man by reduction of the tariff below the true standard will be far greater than the saving he will make in the reduced prices of the manufactured articles that he will consume, for the reduction in price, if any, will be brought about by prostration in business.

If we put the tariff so low that we cannot manufacture in this country, then our laborers must go to the plow. What then will become of our farming interests? If every laboring-man raises his own bread and meat, who will consume the surplus products of the farms? Where will the farmers find a market? The free-traders say: If they cannot find a market in this country they must ship their products to Europe, where we purchase our manufactured articles, and sell them there. But Europe does not purchase but a small portion of the surplus products raised by our present number of farmers. What would be the result if all of our laborers were turned into farmers? The statistics for the last thirty years show that we have not been able to sell abroad more than one-tenth of our surplus from the farms. Europe has plenty of farmers, and they raise good crops. When the season is good they want but little from us. When the crop is a failure there, like it is here sometimes, then they want more. But a great farming country like this cannot afford to depend upon a foreign market for its products when that market is not able to consume one-tenth of our surplus. If we wish to be prosperous we must make a home market, and that can only be done by building up manufacturing establishments all over the country that will employ millions of laborers, who, with their wives and children, will furnish mouths to eat up the products of our farms when cultivated to their fullest capacity. If these laborers are paid good wages they will be prosperous, and can afford to pay to the farmers good prices that will make the farmers prosperous.

When the farmers and laborers of the country are prosperous they always feel like enjoying their prosperity. Then they want new houses, barns, wagons, plows, buggies, harness, reapers, mowers, good clothes, hats, boots, shoes, &c. To make all these would give the carpenters, bricklayers, stone-masons, blacksmiths, tailors, hatters, shoemakers, merchants, &c., plenty of employment at good wages and profits. The country being thus made prosperous, the lawyers, doctors, bankers, and in short all kinds of business men would have all they could do, and all, from the highest to the lowest, from the richest to the poorest, would share in the grand results thus produced. But, on the contrary, if the farmers have a poor market for their products, they can make but a bare support for their families; then they purchase but little from the stores and make but few improvements on their farms. They make their old wagons, plows, harness, &c., last as long as possible. In consequence of this the merchants and mechanics have but little employment and the country remains poor and at a stand-still.

True prosperity must come from labor. To have that we must first look to the true interests of the tiller of the soil, the man who digs wealth from the earth, and see that he is all right. He can only be made so by giving him a good home market for his products. This market can only be given, as I have shown, by the employment of laborers at good wages in manufacturing establishments distributed throughout the country, and these can only be kept up so as to pay these living wages by a protective tariff. By thus protecting our labor and keeping prosperity in the country, we do not make the manufactured products any dearer to the consumer; but, on the contrary, we make them cheaper.

The old saying that the consumer pays the duty is only true of certain articles we ship from abroad. For example, we do not grow in this country either tea or coffee. By putting a tariff on them we simply make them that much higher in price to those who consume them. In that case the consumer pays the duty; and so of all other articles that we ship from abroad where we do not produce the same kind in this country by labor. But upon all articles we ship from abroad, where we produce the same kind in this country by labor, the tariff that we put upon that class, if it is sufficient to protect our labor, does not make the article any dearer to the consumer, and upon such articles it is the foreign merchants and manufacturers who pay the duty, and not the consumers in this country. This is a proposition that can be demonstrated and made clear beyond question. The consumers of this country do not pay it for this reason: A protective tariff builds up and sustains our manufactories. They being numerous, and distributed throughout the country, keep the supply equal to the demand, and thereby create strong competition with each other as well as with the articles shipped from abroad. This competition makes each manufacturer come down in his prices, and the one that will sell the cheapest gets the trade. This home competition is what regulates the price of all articles in our market and keeps them as cheap as they are. To illustrate this more fully take the article of Bessemer steel. We did not manufacture that article in this country to any extent beyond mere experiments until 1868. Prior to our manufacture of it we never bought a single ton of it from Europe for less than $112 in gold, and most of the time the price ranged from $130 to $150 per ton in gold. During the war, when $1 in gold was worth $2.80 in currency, this steel then cost us at the rate of $400 per ton in currency.

The English merchants and manufacturers could have sold us this steel for a much less price than they did and still have made enormous profits, but they would not. Why? Because we were not in condition to compel them. We wanted the article and were compelled to have it. The English merchants knew that, and also knew that we could not get it except from them. That gave them the advantage of us, and then they fixed the price and we had it to pay. During this time there was a tariff on this Bessemer steel, and our consumers then not only paid this tariff, but they paid an outrageous price for the steel besides. But as soon as we commenced manufacturing it in this country, what was the result? It commenced falling in price at once, and in a very short time we could purchase it in currency at less rates than we could purchase it in gold before we commenced manufacturing it. And as our manufactories of this steel increased in numbers and capacity, the competition increased in the same proportion, and the price continued to fall, until now we can purchase all the Bessemer steel we want for $60 a ton in currency. I know it is said that its price was made high because there was a patent on its manufacture. I admit that that made a difference of $5 per ton on rails and $10 per ton on all other kinds in the price; but the great cause of the high price was on account of the European manufacturers having a monopoly in its manufacture. But as soon as we commenced manufacturing this steel our tariff served a new purpose, and at once became a shield of protection to our labor against the impoverishing competition of the cheap labor of Europe engaged in manufacturing this same article, the same as a strong breakwater protects the shipping within the harbor and prevents its destruction by a heavy sea driven against its walls by the furious storms of the ocean. So that the English manufacturer, after he paid all the expenses of manufacturing this steel in Europe and paid for shipping it to this country, and then paid our tariff—this steel cost him as much as it cost us to manufacture it in this country, we paying to our laborers a living price for their labor.

This tariff then protected our manufacturers and prevented them from being broken down, because it prevented the English manufacturers from putting down the price of this steel lower than we could manufacture it here and pay our labor a good price unless they did it at a loss to themselves. By this protection then we have been enabled to build up this home competition, which has brought down the price of this steel in currency to one-half what its price was in gold before we commenced manufacturing it. Now, if by this protective tariff we have been enabled to manufacture this steel and pay to our laborers good wages, and at the same time cheapen the article to our consumers one-half—and we compel the foreign merchants and manufacturers to pay this tariff into our Treasury before we permit them to sell this steel to our people at this reduced price—I submit whether it is not a fact that cannot be disputed, that it is the foreign merchants and manufacturers that pay this tariff on this steel, and not our people; for they now pay the tariff and sell us this steel for $60 per ton in currency, when before we commenced the manufacture of it we paid the tariff and then paid them from $112 to $150 per ton in gold for it. Quite a healthy difference.

If we should do away with this protective tariff, we would break down our manufactories and thereby destroy the very competition that made this steel cheap and now keeps down its price as well as the price of all other articles that we manufacture, as I have shown. We would then be dependent upon Europe again for this steel as well as the manufactured articles we consume; her merchants and manufacturers would then fix the prices and we would have them to pay. Before we commenced the manufacture of this steel we were completely within the power of Europe as to its price, but now we are independent of her, and it was our protective tariff that made us so. It is her people that now pays this tariff on this steel, and not ours, and still the article is cheaper to us; and so it will be of all other articles we manufacture if we will only make our tariff strictly protective, so as to keep up strong competition with our own manufacturers. There is nothing but competition that can control and regulate prices and keep them cheap. In this country we can only keep up this competition by sustaining our manufactories, and that can only be done by a protective tariff. With such a tariff we maintain our manufactories, develop our resources, open and work our mines of coal and iron, make more valuable our stone and timber, improve the cultivation of our farms, add wealth to the country, increase our population and make our people more prosperous, and at the same time make the articles we manufacture cheaper to our consumers, lighten our burdens of taxation by making the foreign merchants and manufacturers pay the duties that go to support our Government on all articles shipped from abroad, where we manufacture the same kind in this country.

Because Europe is able, on account of her cheap money, cheap labor, and cheap transportation, to manufacture and sell to us cheaper than we can manufacture the same articles in this country, is no evidence that she would do so, unless we are in condition to compel her, and that we can only be by keeping up our home competition by a protective tariff. To show how cheap Europe would sell to us if we had no manufactories in operation to create this home competition, take the case of France, in one article alone, after her war with Prussia. That war destroyed most of her iron manufacturing establishments. At its close her people were compelled to have iron, but had no means of their own to regulate the price by any kind of home competition that amounted to anything. The other nations of Europe had iron to sell and the French people were compelled to purchase it. Did these nations stop to inquire at what price they could sell iron to the French people so as to make a good living profit to themselves, without any kind of extortion from their French neighbors who had been so sorely tried by the war? No; the only thing they thought of was how much they could exact from them without any reference to their necessities. Iron, as we all remember, in 1872 and 1873, during the time France was being thus bled, went up in price more than double what it was before the French market was opened up to them. And just so it would be with us if we are ever short-sighted enough to put our tariff so low that we cannot manufacture in this country without impoverishing our labor and crippling all the industries of the country. Expecting to supply ourselves with cheap goods from abroad, we will be badly sold. Europe will sell to us cheap goods, and pay our tariff duties that go to the support of our Government, and save our people that burden of taxation, while our manufactories are in full blast and we are in condition to dictate terms as to price; but when we place ourselves in a condition that they and not we can fix the price, then look out. They would rob us as they did France; all they want is the opportunity. A protective tariff is our sheet-anchor of safety, and whenever we cease to maintain it we will find our laboring people out of employment, and suffering for the want of bread.

Europe has wealth and she has greatness, but each is confined to the few. The great masses of her people are poor; they work hard and are permitted to enjoy but few of the comforts of life; most of them have to put up with a bare subsistence. There capital controls labor and forces it to work for low wages. If we allow our working people in our manufacturing establishments to come in competition with this cheap labor of Europe, cannot every one see that ours must give way to it and fall to its level in price or quit the shop and go to the plow? If they quit the shop, that destroys our manufacturing, injures our prosperity as a nation, takes from our farmers their home market; for these laborers would then raise their own bread and meat, and turns us over to the foreign merchant to be robbed by exorbitant prices as France was plundered after her war with Prussia. On the other hand, if our laborers remain in the shops at the reduced prices of the European laborer, their fate is sealed, and they will rapidly sink to his level, and there remain until a protective policy shall have been inaugurated that will give them relief. Does any one desire that our laboring people shall be thus reduced? If not, there is but one way, in my judgment, to prevent it; and that is, to cheapen the interest on our money so that it can be used in business, and then protect our labor from the cheap labor of Europe by a tariff. By so doing, as I have shown, we build up the country and make it prosperous, make all articles we manufacture cheaper to the consumer, supply the markets of the world from our workshops, and make the foreign manufacturers pay our tariff duties that go to the support of the Government on all articles we manufacture, and save our people from that burden of taxation.

Mr. KETCHAM. Mr. Chairman, I am opposed to the passage of this bill, both for its policy and for its specific provisions. It is a long step in the way of free trade, a policy that ignores all the obligations of nationality and knows no home and no country, and, without reference to difference of age, population, wealth, habits, education, or institutions, would make one rule applicable alike to the poor and weak, and to the rich and powerful, and subject a people sparse in numbers, and with undeveloped resources, to the unequal contest of competition with the accumulated power of nations who hold a controlling position in the great manufacturing and commercial interests of the world. In this contest, as in all others the weak must go down before the strong. The strong will crush and clear away all attempts at competition and with relentless despotism take possession of the markets of the weak, force upon them the products of their own industry, and remit the whole population to idleness and its inseparable result, moral and pecuniary bankruptcy. This has been the experience of the world. Fearful illustrations are to be found in Turkey and Portugal, who voluntarily burdened themselves with the policy, and Ireland and India, upon whom it was forced by conquest and arbitrary foreign rule. We ourselves have temporarily tried the experiment on several memorable occasions. Under its blight on every occasion we reached the brink of national ruin, and only rescued ourselves by resorting to the protection of a tariff on foreign products to equalize the condition of this country with its competitors. There is a form of invasion, that of overreaching trade inspired by avarice, pressing its conquest with all the power of wealth and diplomacy and craft, to depress and destroy the productive power of the rival nation, that its people may be made tributary to the aggressor. This conquest degrades the labor and subjugates the spirit and genius of a people, and is more hopelessly destructive than any military aggression. The basis of power in every country is its labor. The gifts of soil, minerals, all the bounties of Providence, are worthless, except so far as developed and improved by labor. It is the wealth of the nation. The power of physical and intellectual effort is the only property of a people worth contemplating. The existing physical results or accumulation at any given time, considered of themselves, are so destructible and evanescent that they do not deserve to be accounted wealth, but the capability of production applied to the physical resources of a country sustaining the accumulation of industrial results; this is the wealth of manhood, the most valuable of all wealths, the enduring power that builds up and sustains civilization. But this is only achieved by developing all the faculties of a nation. Nature in her economy has distributed her gifts in infinite variety of form and material in the sea and in the land, and bestowed upon man a corresponding variety and adaptation of faculties, appealing to him for a wide and varied exertion in the appropriation and use of the resources placed beneath his hand. It is forbidden that we should all be engaged in one pursuit.

No people ever were or can be prosperously or happily employed in one pursuit. The talent of a nation cannot be developed by the exercise of the faculties only necessary for one pursuit. The competition of a whole people in one pursuit renders the results of labor worthless. The law of nature is diversification. This gives to each variety of effort its due reward. France and England are illustrations of diversified industry, where every faculty has been developed, where genius and skill have been cherished until they have made these nations magnificent theaters of domestic exchange, and enabled them to cover the seas with a commerce that fills every market and proclaims their triumphs on every shore. There is no more inviting field for diversified industry than our own country. In the amplitude of its territory, in its climate, in the variety of its soil and its products, in its inexhaustible and varied deposits of minerals, and in its vast and wonderful internal water system it challenges and invites the enterprise and skill of mankind. The duty of this Government, as of every other, and peculiarly of this with our natural advantages, is to protect and foster its labor. Its whole energies should be bent to the work of promoting and cherishing every industrial pursuit, and cultivating to its highest efficiency every faculty and endowment of its people; and it should render available to the disciplined brain and skilled hand every natural resource.

Free trade ignores all this, and arrays itself against all governmental interference and care for the labor of the country. It madly makes war upon labor and domestic exchange to give supremacy to foreign commerce, which in the nature of things is but a secondary necessity. The province of foreign commerce is the exchange by one nation of the commodities which it can produce with others for the commodities of the others which it cannot produce. This is strictly foreign commerce. But if one nation depends for its manufactured articles upon purchase and money payments, the money-paying nation must become exhausted; and as the skill and labor bestowed upon most of the manufactured articles of commerce contribute most to their value, adding to the raw material in most cases double and treble and in many a hundred-fold, if they furnish only the raw material, whether it be in breadstuffs or any other material, or partly raw material and the balance in money, and purchase with it their manufactures, they must inevitably and constantly become the debtor, and sooner or later find themselves exhausted. The balance must be against them, for the value of the manufactures consumed in every civilized country exceeds the money of the nation and the value of the export of raw material; and as the mere production of raw material can furnish but partial employment, and that of a rude and cheap order, the larger portion of the people must be unemployed, and the whole population doomed to the burden and oppression of the poverty that results from the idleness of any considerable proportion of a nation's population. Money against manufactures cannot sustain a commerce, for no nation has money enough; nor can raw material, including the results of agriculture, against manufactures sustain a commerce, for they are all too proportionately distributed among the nations to require sufficient exchange.

Great Britain, under the shield and defense of a rigid protective system, developed all her resources, trained 7,000,000 of her people to the highest grades of skilled industry, supplied all the demands of her own people with manufactures, and having conquered India and the isles of the sea, and held on to her possessions in North and South America, and generally played the hard-handed aggressor all around the world, and secured a monopoly of half its markets and resources, with one-third of her population trained to manufactures, and insupportable except by manufactures, she resolved to become the great workshop of the world, and do the world's manufacturing, and force the world to employ her to do it, and pay her for it at her own price; and her protective statutes having given her the complete mastery, and repealed themselves by their success, the more consistently to induce the younger and weaker nations to fall into an unequal competition with her, she formally repealed most of her tariffs, and proclaimed herself the champion of free trade. She has intrenched herself in all our sea-ports in the interest of free trade and importation. She has organized and established her free-trade leagues, filled the country with free-trade emissaries, scattered abroad its publications, subsidized the press, and imported here her Oxford professors and all the brood of the parasites of shopocracy to popularize free trade; and with their stale and flippant misrepresentations of Adam Smith, and their jargon of pedantic nonsense they every where beset our people to convince them that it is cheaper to buy than to produce, and more profitable to employ and pay foreign labor than our own, and here they find ready coadjutors in the importers, who never add a dollar to the common stock, but gamble with the fruits of toil, and clip their fortunes from the muscle and brain of the masses; and in those who only know of labor in its most abject condition and barbarous form, guided by little more than brute instinct, and who have subsisted upon its results at such arm's length that their association with it has taught them to regard it with contempt and aversion in all conditions; and in all those who, tenacious of their own interest, totally ignore that of others who are always eager for Government support and would deny it to all others; who always say my interest, my county, my district, my State, but never say my country; who, because they may need no protection, cannot bear that anybody else should be protected, and would be content to prosper themselves in the midst of general ruin all around them—all these would use the Government for their exclusive benefit, and prevent it from its grand purpose, the care of the whole people and their welfare.

Great Britain and all the other manufacturing nations say to us, "Do not manufacture at all; leave the market for manufactured goods to us; content yourselves with planting and sowing and leave to us the results of science and the mechanic arts. Your people are not constituted for successful manufacture." Upon this country they have fixed their eyes as the great receptacle of the diversified labor of Europe. This people, they say, shall hoe and plant and hew wood and draw water and be content in rudeness and simplicity to produce and furnish breadstuffs and raw material and gold, and leave to Europe the science and skill and its wages. All very well for Europe, so long as it could last. It would be all very well for them if we would leave to them all the high grades of employment for men and machinery at their own price, with a paying employment for their shipping, bringing to us their costly products and lading back with our raw materials and our money. A single man with his pick and shovel may in a day mine the elements worth but a few dollars that constitute when combined a ton of merchant iron; but many hands and much machinery must be employed to reduce them to the form of the merchant iron, worth eight or ten fold as much as the rude elements; and again, a whole well-appointed manufacturing establishment, with its varied machinery and array of skillful artisans, may be profitably employed in converting that ton of merchant iron into polished cutlery or into implements or machinery of a thousand forms, worth a thousand-fold the value of the original elements. So with the fleece of wool, the bale of cotton, the bundle of flax, the cocoon of silk, that clothe the peasant and robe the prince. So with the bag of sand that makes the glittering mirror, and so with the cumbrous rock that to the chisel yields up the column and the arch that support and grace the palace. They all say you may have the ore, the wool, the cotton, the flax, the cocoon, the sand, the rock, and exchange them with us for the cutlery, the machinery, the delicate instruments, the robe, the mirror, and the column; and they all say if you will not surrender the business of manufacturing you must take off your tariff and let us into your markets in free competition with yourselves that we may have employment for our people and capital. And the importers and shippers join in the cry and say, either surrender your manufactures or abolish your tariff, and give us commerce. To us they offer the alternative of either retrograding two centuries in the arts and ultimate bankruptcy or the degradation of our labor to serfdom to compete with their cheap labor and cheap money. This is the choice free trade would give to the labor of this country, and this is the condition upon which it would permit the country to build up its manufacturing and commercial interests.

With these conditions we are but too compliant. Even under the present tariff, called by free-traders a prohibitory tariff, we have imported the following list of articles of foreign manufacture to take the place of our domestic manufactures. There is not one of them whose material we do not produce in abundance and whose manufacture we cannot excel in:

Copper, ore, pigs, bars, ingots, old.
Copper, manufactures of.
Cotton, and manufactures of.
Glass and glassware.
Iron, pig, scrap, cast, and rolled.
Hardware, forged iron and fire-arms.
Machinery.
Cutlery, files, saws, and tools.
Steel rails.
Steel, ingots, bars, sheets, and wire.
Manufactured iron and steel, not specified.
Lead, pigs, bars, and old.
Printing and writing paper.
Provisions, (meats, poultry, lard, butter, &c.)
Salt.
Silk, and manufactures of.
Watches, watch movements, and material.
Wood, boards, deals, planks, joists, and scantling.
Wood, shingles and other lumber, except sawed or hewed.
Wool, and manufactures of.
Wheat and wheat flour.
White lead.
Zinc, blocks, pigs, and sheets.

Yes, to deny our own people employment, and to depress our business and contribute to the distress of the country, we have paid for them to other countries in 1872, $240,294,813; in 1873, $232,423,897, and in 1874, $167,753,194; altogether, $640,471,904 in three years. In fourteen years, from 1861 to 1874, we have paid in settling balances of trade $765,857,166, and in eight years prior to 1875, $431,992,761 for the same purpose, in gold. But for this we should have been relieved of all our financial embarrassments, and long ago our currency would have been at par and redeemed in gold. The balance of trade has been slowly, but steadily, growing less under the operation of the present tariff, until it has nearly or quite disappeared. If this tariff be continued the balance of trade will be in our favor, and by the accumulation of gold in the country in a few years we may be able to resume specie payment upon a sound and enduring basis. Under the free-trade tendencies of this bill, striking as it does at the life of our most important manufactures, we never will resume specie payment, for we will never have the means to do it with.

Instead of reducing this tariff and increasing the free list, we should place a strong tariff on at least two-thirds of the present free list. It should pay at least twenty-five millions additional duties. I am not speaking alone for manufactures. I am speaking for the Government and its financial honor; for the agriculture, the manufactures, the mining, and transportation, and trade; for all the business of the country. They are all affected by this question. We are struggling under a severe depression. In all departments of employment labor is suffering. In my own State, great and strong as she is, the energies of her people are paralyzed. Go into her great coal-fields, whose condition is a reliable index of the business condition of the country—the source of the power that fuses all the ore and propels all the factories and all the transportation of the country on land and water—and see there the millions of capital idle, and a hundred thousand miners, who, in the depth and darkness of the earth, develop the wealth of the country and support themselves and families with more peril and more courage than any other class of men.

See them on half time and half pay waiting and trusting for better times. But England is worse off than we are. Her land is filled with financial distress and the wreck of enterprise, her millions are idle and cry for bread, and her mills and marts are crowded with her manufactured goods without a market. She is looking with longing eyes to see this bill pass. It would bring her relief more than any legislation she can do. Pass this bill, and one brief month will fill our market with her goods at starvation prices and extinguish the last hope of our industry. Shall we do it? Shall we abandon our own, and defy that Scripture that has denounced as worse than an infidel him that will not provide for his own household?

Agriculture and manufactures first, and then commerce. Commerce must spring from domestic production, and before it can be sustained that production must supply all the demand of domestic consumption and furnish a surplus for exportation equal to the importation. This is the only condition upon which a foreign commerce can be profitable to any people. Commerce has carried civilization to the ends of the earth and been a mighty agent in elevating the condition of mankind. Long lines of wharves, stately warehouses, harbors crowded with rich argosies, and the bustle and display of commerce are poetic and imposing, and the subject of justifiable pride when it brings home in profit the riches of other lands; but when it comes like a many-winged monster to carry away the substance of the country, burden it with debt, and destroy its financial independence, it is not the display of prosperity, but the delusive pageant that leads to ruin.

Free trade taunts us with the question, how long do you want protection? How long will your infancy last? To this question we answer, we want protection until our home production of all that we can produce shall be equal to our home consumption. By that time our manufacturing interests will be so diffused throughout the country that the raw material will be converted in its own locality and agriculture will find its market at home, and not waste half its value in wandering across the continent and the ocean to find a purchaser in a foreign land. Then the expense of transportation will be taken off the ponderous and clumsy raw material and provisions and placed upon the compact and costly fabrics whose values will bear it.

Then home competition will furnish cheaper and better fabrics than we get abroad, then our infancy will be ended, and with full growth we will enter into free competition with the manufacturers of the world. We deny that we have always been protected and that protection is a failure. Up to the adoption of the present tariff we never had over twelve years of what could be called protection, and then but four or five years at a time. The first tariff that protected anything was the tariff of 1824, and that was only partial. The tariff of 1828, a very high tariff, lasted five years, and then on the sliding scale of a compromise descended so rapidly that it came to nothing in nine years, and in its descent gave us the panic of 1837, with its shinplasters, idleness, and beggary which lasted till 1842, and on the way, in 1840, turned the democrats and free trade out of power. In 1842 the whigs established a high protective tariff which rapidly restored the country to prosperity, and became so popular for its beneficence that the democrats in the contest of 1844 made it the labor of the campaign to prove their candidate a better protective-tariff man than Henry Clay, and with a campaign banner with a lie for its motto swindled Pennsylvania into voting for "Polk, Dallas, and the tariff of 1842." This put the democracy into power again. In 1846 they repealed the tariff of 1842, and gave us a revenue tariff "with incidental protection," which means the protection that cannot be prevented.

In 1857 the tariff was again reduced, and we had free trade with its most approved agonies: a panic that lasted until 1860. So that up to the rebellion we had about twelve years of more or less protection, and at such intervals and with such agitation that it served only to awaken the hopes of the people for a little while and then leave them to disappointment and despair. Instead of an infancy fostered and raised into strength, we have been occasionally promised and caressed for a little while only to undergo with more suffering Lord Brougham's and Joseph Humes's proposed strangling in the cradle. We rescued ourselves from distress by the tariff of 1824 and 1825, and again by the tariff of 1842, and again by the tariff of 1860.

The necessities of the country have continued the tariff of 1860 with some amendments for sixteen years, the longest period any tariff has been let alone under this Government. It was not established as has been said, for the purposes of the war; it was enacted before and without reference to the war, although with some amendments it has enabled us to pay the interest on the war debt. Though assailed as a prohibitory enormity by free trade, our imports under it in 1874 amounted to about six hundred millions, with a free list of one hundred and eighty millions, of which we might have produced at least two-thirds, so that on four hundred and twenty millions it raised us one hundred and sixty millions of revenue. Under this tariff we raised more than one hundred millions during most of the years of the war, with steadily increasing imports.

Under this tariff, up to the financial panic of 1873, this country was more prosperous than ever before. Manufactures sprang into existence all over the country, agriculture unburdened itself of debt, the people were everywhere employed and liberally rewarded, immigration crowded to our shores with money and skillful hands, new States were populated and organized, and the productive power of the country filled it with abundance. In the ten years from 1860 to 1870, in the nine old or Eastern and Middle manufacturing States, our manufactures increased 120 per cent. and in nine Western States 257 per cent.

The value of the iron and steel product of the country may be safely estimated at from one hundred and twenty-five to one hundred and fifty million dollars, having trebled in ten years; and of this amount from fifty to fifty-five millions was paid for labor.

The coal trade of the United States shows an equal advance, the production going up from twenty-two and a half million tons in 1864 to forty-five and a half millions in 1874, an increase of 100 per cent. Much the larger portion of this coal was consumed by manufactures, at least 8,000,000 tons in the manufacture of iron and steel, besides a large amount of charcoal. About $30,000,000 in wages was paid for labor in mining coal to make iron and steel, besides all used in the infinite variety of iron and steel manufacture. There were about 150,000 miners mining coal, about 60,000 men engaged in making iron and steel, and the wages paid to these two employments amount to from eighty to ninety million dollars, and from thirty-five to forty millions in Pennsylvania alone. In 1874 the iron-ore product of Lake Superior was worth nine millions. In 1873 five western States, Michigan, Wisconsin, Indiana, Illinois, and Missouri, produced 372,000 tons of pig-iron, about one-eighth of the whole product of the country, paying for labor about $8,000,000; and in 1874 the product of pig-iron of the whole country was about two and a half million tons.

In 1860 all the manufactures of the country amounted to about nineteen hundred millions, in 1870 to four thousand two hundred and fifty millions. In 1860 we exported of manufactures about fifty millions, and in 1874 over ninety millions. In nine western States in 1860 the value of manufactures was two hundred and twenty-nine millions, and in 1870 more than eight hundred millions. About 1,200,000 persons are employed in trade and transportation. At least half this employment comes from manufactures. Our iron and steel manufactories and a great variety of cotton and woolen and wood manufactories are of sufficient capacity to supply the country.

The gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. BURCHARD,] who seems to think that the chief blessing of the world is low prices, and that the only object of Government is low prices, and that if western farmers could buy their manufactures for nothing this country would be an Elysium, appeared the other day to fight the battle of free trade, and produced a bewildering array of tabulated figures to annihilate our manufactures, and he seems to have proved to his own satisfaction by these figures that the more manufactures are protected, and the more manufacturing is done in the country, the higher prices become. Figures it is said will not lie. But there is one thing certain, figures, and facts which they represent, may both be made to produce false results by incongruous combinations and false relations to each other. Facts, like anything else, may be misapplied. The gentleman gave us an illustration of this when he set to work to prove that protection as a policy permanently enhances the price of manufactures, by citing instances and illustrations of what we admit is the temporary result of a tariff, that for a certain time succeeding the laying on or increasing of a tariff on a given manufacture its price is increased. While he failed to prove his proposition, he accomplished what is calculated to mislead all those who would content themselves with his say-so without further inquiry.

No such temporary effects truthfully illustrate protection. While for a time a tariff having excluded or limited the importation of a certain fabric will raise the price of the domestic manufacture, yet that very increased price will induce competition to the extent of the capacity for production which will reduce the price ultimately as low as will sustain the manufacture. The same law will govern here as governs the price of foreign manufactures. The temporary results exhibited in his elaborate tables are not the criteria by which to measure the continuous history of a business. In the long run, in either foreign or domestic manufacture or in anything else, the law of supply and demand regulate the price.

For the sake of the argument, suppose the tariff should permanently raise the price of manufactured articles. No branch of business can stand alone and independent of all others. They all depend upon and sympathize with each other, and no one great interest can exclusively appropriate to itself the benefit of excessive reward. High prices for manufactures affect the prices in every department of trade and directly raise the price of labor and raw materials of every discription, including provisions, and thus compensate for any increase in the price of manufactures. But he says that the high prices of manufactures increase the burden of the whole people who purchase them, while they only confer this reciprocal benefit upon the immediate locality where they are produced. This is impossible in the nature of things. The increase in the price of manufactures or of grain or provisions in New York is felt simultaneously in every town and hamlet and on every farm in the land; and so a tariff protecting a manufacturer in Massachusetts or Pennsylvania is felt in its appreciating power upon the whole business of the country. There is not a day's work or bushel of wheat or pound of beef that is not affected by it from Massachusetts to Texas. This can no more be prevented than a wave of the sea can be prevented from seeking its level.

But suppose this is true, what is gained by this raising the price of everything? Has a day's wages or a bushel of wheat more purchasing power than it had when we were without a tariff and without manufactures and prices were low? It has more purchasing power for the reason that the wheat has a market and labor has employment for which they both receive the means of purchasing, and without a market and employment they cannot command the means of purchasing at all. Under free trade, wheat and provisions can go to a foreign market. Yes, to a limited extent, not to exceed one-eighth of the product of the country, with the expenses of transportation, insurance, and all the other charges that attend it on its long journey to reach a competition with the produce of all the world. But what is to become of the other seven-eighths? The home market for one-fourth of it is gone with the abandoned manufactures. And what becomes of your labor that found employment in manufactures? A portion of it, the most valuable, the choicest skill goes to other countries to enrich other lands, and the remainder, from two to three millions of operatives, are driven by necessity into agriculture, adding their production to the already marketless millions. What then will grain and provisions be worth? It would not be worth harvesting. Then with free trade foreign manufactures will have the market to themselves without any competition from us, and we shall be able to buy at their prices, and not ours. Then, with provisions we will pay them so far as they will take them. Yes, out of a surplus product of two or three thousand millions of farm products we will exchange three hundred millions' worth, if they need them, and as we have nothing else to exchange we will pay the balance of three or four hundred million dollars in money, or go into bankruptcy to pay the balance of trade against us. This is no tariff. This is free trade and its low prices.

As I have already said, protection does not permanently enhance the price of manufactures. The home market being assured and confidence in the stability of the protective policy established, capital will seek investment in manufactures, as it has done in the iron business, and the home competition, aided by perfected machinery and skill, with the abundant facilities of the country, will produce all the fabrics required by our people, of as good quality and as cheap as they can be produced anywhere. The question is, who shall do the business and receive the pay, and whether we shall manufacture for ourselves, employ our own people and keep our money at home, or buy our goods abroad, send our money out of the country, and deny our people employment? If anybody doubts that under a protective tariff our markets can be supplied with cheap goods by ourselves, let him look to-day at the prices of all American woolen and cotton goods and American iron and its manufactures, and see every market full of better and cheaper goods than England ever sent here under free trade. Our people are getting to know it. They are getting tired of the free-trade cry, "Buy where you can buy cheapest and sell where you can sell dearest." They have got to understand what Carlyle meant by cheap and nasty. They do not want English cinder iron nor English shoddy. They do not want English prints that lose one-third of their market value the first time they are dipped in the wash-tub. They prefer that she should cheat somebody else with them at free-trade prices even if she has to steal American trade-marks to get them off her hands.

The gentleman says, buy where you can buy cheapest and sell where you can sell dearest. Where it costs two bushels of wheat to sell one to a foreign market it is, to say the least, questionable whether this is not rather costly selling than selling dear. Transportation across a continent and over the sea cannot be done for nothing and will require a great amount of grangering to reduce it to nothing. In his ecstasy over the English market he ignores with contempt the market of our own people for the products of the West, and broadly proclaims Great Britain the only market, and boasts that the West feeds 15,000,000 of Englishmen. I certainly have no objection to his feeding all mankind, but inasmuch as all the breadstuffs and provisions shipped from this country to all the world amount to less than two hundred and fifty millions, and John Bull gets less than two hundred millions, his 15,000,000 of Englishmen fare pretty slim on about $13 per capita per annum, the slimmest feeding any English ever got since they learned to eat beef and drink ale.

The farm products of the country amount to about twenty-six hundred millions. Two hundred and fifty millions go abroad, leaving twenty-three hundred and fifty millions at home. Who consumes it?

The manufacturing interest in producing its five thousand millions, worth of fabrics supports one-fourth, or eleven millions of the people, and consumes and pays for about six hundred millions of farm products, a sum equal to the whole export or import trade of the nation. Truly the gentleman must have looked at his country's enterprise through a pair of British spectacles.

The chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means is also troubled with the low-price fever. By his bill he taxes tea and coffee, articles we cannot produce, and which cannot be considered as luxuries, but which as articles of food have really become necessities to all classes. Also he has taken tin and several other indispensable articles that we cannot produce from the free list and placed them on the dutiable list, and on these would raise a tax of twenty-five millions, so as to enable him to attack and cut down nearly all the domestic manufactures of the country. He reduces the tariff on pig-iron, one of our staples, $2 per ton, and on all descriptions of iron and steel manufactures from one-third to one-half; and so on, and worse, to the end, closing out with an additional free list of about sixty articles which we can produce, including even fire-brick and paving-stone. Under the present tariff nearly one-third of all our imports are free; but this is not enough to meet all the demands of free trade. Under this bill more than a third of the imports will be free, and the balance will be reduced to a scanty revenue tariff that will starve the Treasury and open the gates to a competition from abroad that must completely overwhelm our own manufactures and put them out of all competition, and give the market to foreign manufacturers at their own terms. This has always been the result of a low tariff upon the staples of this country.

But in the fever for low prices the destruction of American interests seems to be a matter of small moment. The great foreign importing interest must be taken care of, even at the price of American labor and prosperity, even if it overwhelms us with a hopeless balance of trade and bankruptcy. Low prices! The chairman is haunted by the price of a few blankets, and the burden of his speech is given to these blankets. They cost 56 cents in London and 110 cents in New York. Well, suppose they are free, does he expect to buy them in New York as cheap as in London? Nobody will bring them to New York for nothing nor sell them in New York without a profit. They are now made by ourselves with our own demand for them. Make them free, or reduce them to a purely revenue tariff, and the English will then transport them here and charge all their own competition will admit of.

The chairman also undertakes to prove that protection does not make a home market. He says the "home market" is a cheat and catch-word of the protectionists; that the overgrowth of grain has outgrown the wondrous growth of population, not only in the country at large, but in Pennsylvania, the chief seat of protection, and proves it by saying we now produce as much to the person as in 1860. That in 1860 Pennsylvania produced 4¼ bushels of wheat and 9.7 bushels of corn, and in 1875 4½ bushels of wheat and 11¼ bushels of corn to the person; and so the pretense of a home market there for the product of the grain fields is a sham and a cheat. And that in 1860 not 10 per cent. of our agricultural products were exported for market, estimating by export of wheat and corn, and that in 1875 22 per cent. of our whole products had to find a foreign market.

Let us examine this a little and see how much there is in this proof. First, Pennsylvania produces a little less wheat to the person than in 1860, and about two bushels of corn more to the person. The wheat crop increased in Pennsylvania about 2,000,000 bushels, and the corn crop about 16,000,000 bushels. Pennsylvania contains at least 4,000,000 of people; one-third, or over 1,300,000 of that people are supported by manufactures, and consume one-third of the whole amount consumed by the whole Commonwealth, which is equal to more than one-third of the amount of exports of breadstuffs and provisions from this country to Great Britain. In fifteen years her population has increased 29¼ per cent. of her present population, while the rest of the country has increased about 28 per cent. The value of her live stock has increased 38 per cent. in the same time, while that of the rest of the country has increased 28 per cent. Her live stock is worth twenty millions, and her whole farm products are worth two hundred millions, and grand as is her agriculture, with the help of her manufacturing and mining interests, she furnishes her own market for it all. He says in 1860 we exported 9.9 per cent. of the wheat and ¼ of 1 per cent. of the corn crop, and in 1875, 33.2 per cent. of wheat and 2½ per cent. of corn, and that the export of wheat and corn in 1860 was 10.2 per cent. of the combined crop, and 22 per cent. in 1875.

But what does this show? Why, that the increase of export has been $11\frac{8}{10}$ per cent. But the increased product of corn and wheat has been $23\frac{2}{10}$ per cent., so that the percentage of increased export has not kept up with the percentage of increased production by $11\frac{4}{10}$ per cent. And the percentage of increased home consumption is just that much greater than the percentage of increased exportation. Truly this looks as though something had increased the home market.

This computation is on his own tables. But it is really still stronger against him. The census shows the wheat crop of 1870 to have reached the enormous amount of 287,745,626 bushels, while for the purpose of his argument he has stated it in 1875 to amount only to 219,333,395 bushels, making the crop 68,412,231 bushels less in 1875 than in 1870; evidently a mistake, and which would make for home consumption that much more at least.

The farm products in the whole country have increased 28 per cent. and the population in the same ratio. One-fourth of the employment of the country is furnished by its manufactures, and 11,000,000 of its people are supported by them, consuming one-fourth of the farm products of the country, being more than double the whole exports of both breadstuffs and provisions.

So much for the great question of a home market. So much on the question of free trade and protection. The only obstacle in the way of harmony upon the question of protection between the agricultural and manufacturing interests is the hope of agriculture in the European market, and this I regard as but temporary; and in concluding I make the prediction that within the next five years these two great interests will be one on the question of protection and all the questions involved in it. This very hour India is taking possession of the English bread market, and within the next five years that vast region of productiveness, where eighty million bushels of wheat in useless surplus rots on the ground, will supply every European market. Our agriculture, unable even with all its labor-saving machinery to compete with the labor of millions who will produce wheat for two or three rupees per month, will be forced into sympathy with the manufacturing interest, and it will be found at home and in Congress with irresistible power in favor of protection and a home market. Then the Government will discharge its duty to its industry, and in return the labor of the country will come up in its majesty and bless the land with prosperity.

[Mr. MILLIKEN next addressed the committee. His remarks will appear in the Appendix.]

RAILROADS AND CHEAP TRANSPORTATION.

Mr. MACKEY, of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, as a member of the committee that reported the bill under consideration, I desire to say a few words in favor of its passage, and am the more anxious that it may be favorably considered by the House from the fact that I earnestly believe that the enterprise proposed by this bill, if legislated into vitality, will contribute largely to the promotion of the productive industry of the country.

Congress, in my opinion, can make no higher contribution to the prosperity of the nation than by aiding so far as may be within its power, without encroaching upon the national Treasury, all enterprises that may be presented for the construction of railroads. Railways give employment to labor, and without them we cannot develop those resources of our country with which it is so bountifully supplied. To me it has been a source of sincere regret that this Congress has been in session for more than five months and so few measures have been perfected for the relief of the prostrate industries and starving labor of the country. Five months gone, and but little done for the people! When I go to my home and hear of the distress and suffering pervading almost all classes and conditions of our people; when I see hundreds of men with willing hands and honest hearts standing upon our streets with their hands in their pockets, and nothing there but their hands, asking not for bread but for work, that by honest toil they may earn bread for themselves, their wives, and their children, and am asked why does not Congress do something to relieve the sufferings of the people, I am at a loss for a satisfactory answer. But I take courage when measures such as that under consideration are presented to the House; for with questions such as these the interests of every laboring man of the country are involved, and I consider them of equal if not paramount importance to those of finance and currency, upon which so much has been said and so little done.

The productions of the country will be increased in proportion to the increase of the means of transportation, and if these means furnish cheap and fixed rates, the productions of labor will prove themselves to be the acknowledged basis of our wealth.

Stimulate and encourage public enterprises; give encouragement to capital to embark in railroad enterprises, in opening our mines of wealth, in establishing manufactories; protect and sustain the manufacturing interests of our country; aid in the development of our resources; utilize in the highest degree the various elements of wealth with which we are so bountifully supplied; decrease our importations by any legislation you can devise, and by similar means stimulate and increase our exports; restore the administration of the Government to that honesty, purity, and simplicity which characterized it in former days; enact such laws as will induce capital to give employment to labor, and thereby avert the impending conflict between capital and labor; restore official faithfulness to the several departments of our Government and secure economy and integrity in its administration; let the inspiration of the people be popular government honestly administered under the Constitution; give faith to energy and life to industry; repeal all laws fixing a definite time for the resumption of specie payments, and industry will revive, labor will receive employment and remuneration, and resumption will come by the natural laws of business and commerce long before it can be enforced by any arbitrary legislation.

Mr. Chairman, no subject can be presented to this House of greater importance in view of its influence on the prosperity of the country than that of cheap transportation, and the interests of the people demand that Congress shall devise that system of transportation for the mineral, agricultural, and manufactured products of the country which shall prove itself to be the cheapest, most perfect, and most enduring. An increase of railway facilities for conveying the products of the country from the section where produced to those of the purchaser and consumer will always increase not only the amount of the productions but also the tonnage furnished to the carrying companies, and thus the reciprocal influence prove beneficial to both.

The object of the bill under consideration is to provide for cheap transportation between the great producing regions of the West and the East, and under its provisions it is proposed to incorporate a company under the name and title of The United States Railway Corporation, authorized and empowered to obtain the necessary franchises and right of way, and title thereto, under the forms and in the manner prescribed by the laws of the States, and consolidate the same so as to create and maintain a perfect organization in and for the interests of commerce between the States, and to build and operate a railway, principally for freight, with a double track and steel rails, and with a grade not exceeding for eastward-bound traffic forty feet to the mile, to be built from some point on New York Bay to Council Bluffs, or to such other convenient point on the Missouri River, in the State of Iowa, as shall offer the best connection with the system of railways west of the Missouri River. The controlling management of the road is placed in the hands, not of stockholders, but of a board of seven commissioners appointed by the governors of the several States through which the road is to be constructed. Under the provisions of this bill no extortionate charges for transportation can be made. The tariff rates and charges are to be fixed and adjusted by commissioners, the representatives of the people who are interested in cheap transportation through the several States within whose limits the road is to be built. State laws cannot fix rates and charges except within the limits of the State in granting franchises, and it can only be done in such a manner as to aid the western producer by Congress, under the powers vested in it by the Constitution to regulate commerce among the States. This question, I believe, has not been positively decided by the highest judicial tribunal of the nation, but it is the generally accepted opinion that Congress has the power to regulate rates and charges on railroads passing through the States, and to regulate interstate commerce. In the case of Gray vs. The Clinton Bridge Company, in the Supreme Court of the United States, Justice Miller used the following language:

> For myself, I have no doubt of the right of Congress to prescribe all needful and proper regulations for the conduct of this immense traffic over any railroad which has voluntarily become a part of one of those lines of interstate communication, or to authorize the creation of such roads when the purposes of interstate transportation of persons and property justify and require it.

If natural highways, such as rivers and lakes, are entitled to aid from the Government, and this is not doubted, who shall say that the Government has not equally the power to aid by appropriate legislation artificial highways of commerce, such as railways and canals?

The certainty which Government control, or rather such control as is contemplated by this bill, by persons selected by the several States through which the road may pass, will give to the rates of transportation, will so largely increase the productions of the West and Northwest that reduced rates, rates as low as any that can be furnished by water communication, will assure to railroads a remunerative income, and more especially so to the road contemplated by this bill, which, with the wise provisions contained in it against fraudulent practices in its construction and management, will not be encumbered by the incubus of an excess of liabilities above its actual cost of construction.

The producer and his labor create the wealth of the country, and yet he generally is poor, while the purchaser and consumer is enabled to enjoy all the advantages afforded by wealth, simply because the fruits of the producer's toil cannot reach a market where they may be disposed of at remunerative prices, on account of the lack of cheap transportation. Of what advantage is all the agricultural and mineral wealth of the great West and Northwest if it can find no market? Statistics have been produced here to show that corn forwarded from the West to an eastern market has netted the producer but eight cents a bushel, while the carrying company's charges were six times as great; and another case in which an Iowa farmer forwarded his corn at a cost of sixty-seven cents a bushel and received for it sixty-eight cents a bushel, thus leaving him a profit of one cent a bushel to compensate him for his labor, the interest on his invested capital, and his current and necessary expenses. In every case, therefore, it is safe to say, the producer, who represents the large majority of our people, is the man who is made to suffer; and the same is true to some extent with the consumer, while the transportation companies grow rich at the expense of both producer and consumer. Monopolies are never beneficial to any except those who enjoy the special privilege of being the monopolists; and this is a class in every community which can well be dispensed with to the great advantage of the public.

It may be claimed that the bill under consideration is a monopoly in itself. This is not the case. It makes no provision to monopolize the traffic in freight, but simply through its board of managers, who will be the representatives of the people and the people's interests, regulates the charges for freight so as not to oppress those for whom the Government has been established, and without whom the Government can neither prosper nor maintain its existence, and adopt such a tariff of rates as will enable the productions of the West to be shipped to the seaboard, and be sold at such prices as will yield a fair profit to the producer and impose no extravagant charges upon the consumer. It is not a monopoly, and does not propose to take any steps toward monopolizing traffic in any manner whatever. Its design is a measure of relief to the suffering citizens of both East and West by furnishing transportation for the great natural productions of the one and the manufactures and merchandise of the other, so that a fair exchange may be effected in such a manner as will prove of advantage to both sections of the country. Certainly there can be no objections to any measure calculated to effect the purpose designed to be accomplished by the provisions of this bill.

I do not believe, sir, that the bill, if passed, will prove detrimental to existing corporations. The evident result must be to stimulate production and thus in turn benefit the transportation companies already existing and operating their several lines of railways and canals. It may modify their freight rates, but I cannot see that it will prove detrimental to their interests, if the ultimate result is to give them an increased traffic. On the other hand I can see that this increased production and increased traffic will not only prove beneficial to the carrying companies themselves, but also create a new and enlarged demand for labor, and thus give employment to thousands now suffering for the necessaries of life.

It is not the design of this bill to do injustice in any sense to either individuals or corporations, but simply that the burdens may be more nearly equalized and the benefits derived from railways and similar corporations be more fairly distributed among the people. The people are entitled to this, and the public interest and the public welfare demand it.

Pass this bill and any others that authorize the construction of railways from the great producing West to the seaboard, and you will enrich the producer, improve the condition of the eastern consumer, give employment to labor, and life, vigor, and energy to the various industries of our country, and contribute more largely than by any other act within the scope of congressional power to ameliorate the condition of the workingmen of the nation.

The question of cheap transportation becomes of greater importance from the fact that while a very large proportion of the heavy products requiring transportation are produced in the West, about the same proportion of the capital to purchase, move, and market them is held in the East, and near the seaboard.

Let this Government emulate the example of almost all other nations, who have ever considered it their highest prerogative to aid in the construction of commercial highways. No subsidy, no land grant, no indorsement of bonds is asked for from the Government in this bill; and while the committee in reporting it express no opinion as to the power or policy of the Government in this respect, they believe it to be the duty of Congress to encourage by all practicable and available means the construction of great national highways by private capital and enterprise, that the interests, prosperity, and happiness of the people may be promoted.

INVENTORS AND THE PATENT OFFICE.

Mr. J. H. BAGLEY. Mr. Chairman, the subject which I propose to consider is one that has not met with much favor in this House, or perhaps it will be better to qualify my words by saying that in some of its phases it has met with opposition. There is an apparent disposition to ignore inventors when applying for extensions of their patents, and in such a manner as to indicate that a sentiment prevails that they have few rights which Congress is bound to respect, although a law exists permitting them to apply for relief, and making it the duty of this body to consider their petitions, and to grant their prayers when made in the proper manner, and when the merits of the case admit and require a favorable report from the Committee on Patents.

As a member of that committee I deem it my privilege, possibly it is my duty, to call the attention of the House and the country to the present condition of our Patent Office and system, and in a humble manner to present to view its advantages. In doing so I may evoke adverse criticism, as I intend in this connection to attempt a defense of inventors. I am well aware that here the subject is an unpopular one, and does not possess the absorbing interest which attaches to the subjects of the currency, the tariff, and other important topics that have from time to time commanded the eloquence of gentlemen on this floor, and which have, by the way, been most ably discussed. Notwithstanding this, the question possesses at least the merit of being new in the domain of discussion, and the Patent Office, being a Bureau of the Government, is a proper topic for consideration.

In view of the fact that many are inclined to antagonize the interests of inventors, particularly our granger friends, who imagine that every patent issued and every extension of a patent granted is in direct opposition to their interests and in furtherance of the interests of monopolies, it will be well for me to remind such that our material progress in the mechanic arts and agricultural pursuits has for its foundations the inventors of the world, who from their ingenious brains have worked out the plans, instruments, and results which have raised man from barbarism to civilization. I may not be justified in attributing to inventions solely this great advancement, and yet it will be difficult to point to any age where the inventor has not contributed largely.

Impelled by the love of fame, as well as the acquisition of wealth, the mind of man has been engaged in the creation of works of art, of utility, and convenience from the earliest ages, slowly at first, until in this nineteenth century the faculty has ripened and developed, and ours bears the palm as the era of great inventions. From the time when in the Garden of Eden our first parents sewed fig leaves together, inventive genius has been displayed in greater or less degree, till in our day it has culminated in the steam-engine and the electric telegraph. The wooden plow of the ancients is abandoned and gives place to the useful and effective implement of the present time. Agricultural tools and conveniences multiply on every side, and the tiller of the soil is made glad and enriched by the introduction of speechless but many-fingered helpers, reducing his labors and causing the earth to bring forth with renewed and manifold increase. With increased populations come increased means for their support. A wise and beneficent Providence implants in man a fertile imagination, and making him the agent to carry out His great designs, directs his thoughts to the invention of useful machines, and thereby contributing to his comfort, advancement, and happiness.

The farmer, the soldier, the mariner, the manufacturer, all classes of industry have derived what appliances they have in their vocations and are still dependent upon the inventor. In the mansion of the rich or the modest home of the poor, on every side wherever is to be seen a comfort or convenience, behold the result of the studious and active mind of the inventor. The practical results of this gift are to be seen in every direction, and in every land and upon every sea are the monuments of the impulse, the energy, and the efforts of these men of thought, imparting to the peoples of the earth a grand sentiment of progress and impelling to new glories and greater and better action the nations.

Mr. Chairman, this may not be the place for pronouncing encomiums upon inventions or for an elaborate eulogy of inventors, neither do I propose it; but a recent visit to the centennial exposition has impressed me, and no doubt it has every member of this House, with the grandeur of the conceptions of inventive genius. Observe the immense engine, which at a simple touch moves with ponderous, yet graceful dignity, inspiring every other part of the grand combination with life, performing the labors of ten thousand hands, and, like a good servant, accomplishing the desire of its master. What perfect unison! what charming harmony of action! A glance at that alone should be sufficient to fill every heart with admiration for the inventive and mechanical skill which produces such grand forms and results, and dispel the feeling of envy or objection existing against the legitimate claims of the inventor.

It is true, there may be an honest difference of opinion as to these claims, one argument being that the inventor is as much entitled to his invention as the house-owner is to his property, and that he and his heirs should remain in perpetual possession, while the other side declare that his ownership should be limited to a short term of years, and then become public property, open to competition in manufacture, and the inventor deprived of personal benefit, except so far as he may take his chances with general competitors; that the term of the patent should be arbitrary, without the right of extension, regardless of the fact of inadequate reward; permitting no sympathy for him on account of poverty, or adverse circumstances, or misfortunes of any kind, leaving nothing for him but the fame he may have acquired, and which, in many instances, is taken from him by the sharp, shrewd speculator in patents, consigning the inventor not only to poverty, but oblivion. Upon this, as upon many other subjects, there are extremists, and I believe I have stated the extremes. A happy mean would be to give to a patent a long life, so that the patentee could, with a proper business tact, realize a sufficient amount to reward him for his time, labor, and ingenuity.

The present law, fixing the term at seventeen years, is generous and should be satisfactory. Under no circumstances should the patent extend beyond the statute term; for the fact that an extension can and may be obtained works a hardship to manufacturers and others who may have invested in particular machines, and whose purchased rights may be invaded by such extension. One advantage of the single term without extension is that the patentee, knowing the necessity, would be incited to proper exertions to realize from his privilege an adequate profit or reward. All exclusive privileges are of necessity monopolies, and should be so guarded and controlled by wise legislation as not to become oppressive or a burden to the people. A patent is of this character, but the invention which it commissions, being the result of individual effort, is entitled to certain consideration and protection. If an extension is permitted, as is the case under the old law, the patentee should be held to a strict compliance with that law.

One great difficulty the Committee on Patents has had to contend with in applications for first extensions is the excuse that the applicant, not understanding the law, has failed in his statements before the Commissioner and hence had his claim rejected; the Commissioner being permitted to extend, after the expiration of the original, upon proper application and evidence. Ignorance of the law should be no excuse. He who has possession of a valuable patent should be sufficiently interested in it to know the law protecting him, and should comply with its requirements or suffer. Ignorance of law is not an effectual plea before the courts, for every man is supposed to know the law and is held accountable. So with an application to Congress for an extension or an enabling act to apply to the Commissioner. Congress is the court, and if the evidence shows that the applicant has failed even in some minor detail in his application because of ignorance, his claim should be rejected by the committee. This plan would relieve the committee of much annoying investigation, and would be a warning to applicants to be wary, lest neglect should prove a bar to success. The present loose system encourages carelessness and may be productive of false representations, ignorance of law being a very safe refuge in the absence of some better excuse.

I would not include in the list to be rejected those who for a good reason, from circumstances beyond control, had failed compliance with the rules of the Patent Office. Many cases of this kind could arise, fair subjects for consideration, which might possess merit not to be disregarded, but would reject emphatically and absolutely the plea of ignorance. I am inclined to think, furthermore, that it would be better to have a general law controlling these cases, and avoid the necessity of special legislation; or even better than that, to leave it entirely with the Commissioner of Patents, without reference to Congress. This branch of the national Legislature is so large that cases of this character rarely receives proper consideration, and it is evident that the House is not always, and in fact seldom, willing to accept the conclusions of its committee. I speak from knowledge when I say that the duties of this committee have been discharged this session with a single eye to the administration of justice, and with favoritism to none.

But to return. The history of inventions is one of the most interesting to study. The Congressional Library contains many books suggestive of the benefits conferred upon the world by this class of active intellects, who have studied out and brought to light the multitude of grand devices and designs once unknown or mysteries, but now so plain and simple. The stories of self-sacrifice, of poverty, anxiety, and toil, the hopes deferred, the efforts unrewarded, the treasure spent, tell at what great cost this present age enjoys its many blessings. While the record of some mighty leader in battle, shedding the blood of nations, acquiring glory and renown and position upon the misery and ruin of his fellow-men, charms the popular eye and ear, he who has conferred a boon and added to the stock of human happiness by some useful invention receives but a passing notice and his name perhaps passes into oblivion. The arts of war are seemingly paramount to the arts of peace.

Our present patent laws, while in the main judicious, yet embody some peculiarities worthy of consideration. Notably is that of a patent taken out in a foreign land (in England) to run a stated time, which, lapsing for the non-payment of certain fees, causes the American patent to die. Issued for fourteen years, it ceases (regardless of the time it has run) with the foreign patent. In making this statement it is proper to say that no legal decision has yet been rendered upon this point; but it is the opinion of lawyers familiar with patent law that the American patent would cease by a lapse of the foreign patent, while others maintain that such consequence would follow only upon the expiration of the full term of the foreign patent. I have in vain sought for an explanation of this dependence of American law upon foreign law. There is no good reason discoverable why there should be any connection between the two, unless it be in the interest of manufacturers, and this position will not stand the test of argument. They are separate and distinct, without any bond of sympathy, and it is felt by inventors and believed by those who understand the subject that the law should be repealed. In Great Britain the law requires the payment of heavy fees at the end of the third and seventh years of the existence of the patent, and if the fees are not paid the patent terminates. Under our laws the original fee is all required, except in case of re-issue, and the patentee enjoys his privileges undisturbed, at least by the Government. Our law seems to be fair, liberal, and just, while the English is the reverse, and most oppressive to the inventor. But this is the land of invention and of progress.

It is quite possible, and no doubt is the fact, that many things are patented which cannot claim novelty to any extent, and are so simple that they hardly merit special privileges. We are made to pay royalty upon articles of the most simple construction, and upon very trivial claims, merely because some shrewd thinker has conceived the idea of asking for a patent, and the Commissioner in such cases is bound, if the article shows originality and is patentable, to grant the petition. Hence we have patents for coffee-pots, inkstands, glove-fastenings, paper boxes, stove-legs, and kindred articles entering into every day's domestic use, and oftentimes separate parts of these trifling but very useful utensils are patented. The consequence is, in many cases, that the public is obliged to pay an excessive percentage of profit for thousands of these every-day conveniences. The Government, however, receives as large a fee for issuing such patents as for the more important ones; but it is a question, and a pertinent one, whether this fee is a fair offset to the tax in the way of royalties imposed upon the people. Nevertheless these laws and rules exist, and it would be a difficult matter to draw the line between inventions that are of sufficient importance to be patented and those which are not. There would be no doubt as to the cotton-gin, the card-stripper, the sewing-machine, the mower, or the electric telegraph; there might be as to the bouquet-holder, the stove-shaker, or a patent tooth-pick.

It is an amusing fact that oftentimes the most ridiculous articles are offered for patent. There ever have been, and always will be probably, men who indulge in the vain and illusive idea of perpetual motion, and I am credibly informed that frequent application is made for patents for this sort of thing. The God of nature, who by His almighty will keeps the universe in motion, has not yet deigned to impart to man the wondrous secret; and although He permits us to view His grand designs, the planets traveling in their orbits, all things coming in their seasons, yet He says to man, "Thus far canst thou go, and no farther."

It seems to be characteristic of inventive genius to indulge in air-castle building, and it often leads to most absurd results. The following, clipped from a newspaper a few days ago, although intended as a burlesque, is a fair caricature of the extravagance of some minds in the way of inventions:

Among the ridiculous patents issued from the Patent Office is one where the inventor wanted a patent for an artificial moon. His idea was to have an immense balloon, which was to be moored in the air above the town or city, and from which would be suspended an electric light or great fire. By means of this invention we were to become entirely independent of the moon and dispense with gas-lamps in the streets altogether.

Still another wanted a patent for placing a large propeller-wheel on the bow of a boat. The vessel was simply to be started by a steam-engine, and then the forward motion of the boat would cause the water to turn the wheel on the bow; and this wheel would in turn impart motion to another wheel at the stern, which is to drive the boat forward. The inventor's great fear in regard to this invention was that it would be impossible to build a boat that would be strong enough to go through the water at the immense speed he expected to attain by means of his invention; and his great object was to invent some method to keep the boat from running more than fifty miles an hour.

Another wanted to obtain a patent upon an embalming compound; and wishing to show how well it would preserve bodies, obtained the body of an infant, embalmed it in his best manner, and sent the body to the Office as a model. His model was instantly returned to him.

Applications for patents for perpetual motion are about as frequent as ever. Many of these inventions show a great deal of ingenuity, but all of them an utter lack of knowledge of the simplest laws of nature.

But there are in all departments of life the impractical and foolish as well as the practical and wise. Fortunately for us, among inventors the practical predominates.

We have the most perfect patent system in the world, and I think I have a right to say that the business of the Patent Office is conducted with more ability and economy than any other Department of the Government. The revenues of the Patent Office are always in excess of its expenditures, and at this time there is to the credit of this Bureau in the United States Treasury nearly $900,000. What other branch of the Government can show such an exhibit as this? And yet there are those who pretend they would abolish the Office and deprive inventors of all protection.

To get an idea of the magnitude of this department, it is necessary to pay a visit to the museum of models in the magnificent building of the Interior Department. This is one of the great sights of the capital city. The visitor in Washington who neglects the opportunity of inspecting this grand museum of the results of inventive genius makes a serious omission and fails to see one of the most important and interesting features of the capital; and by the way, and in connection with this allusion to the museum and building, I wish to say that this splendid marble and granite structure was paid for in part from the revenues of the Office, the contributions of inventors in the form of fees. The act of Congress authorizing the building was approved July 4, 1836, and the amount expended from the patent fund was $319,000.

To conduct this immense business it is necessary to have a large corps of employés, and many of them, particularly the examiners, must be experts. By experts in this connection is not meant good clerks or book-keepers, but gentlemen familiar with mechanics, scientific men, and accustomed to the workings of the Office. To attain proficiency as an examiner requires experience and special training. The Commissioner of Patents, in a letter addressed to the House of Representatives upon a reduction of the force and salaries, uses the following language, which should be conclusive:

I beg leave to suggest that the work of the Office requires special training; that even with the present pay it is not possible long to keep in Government employ many of those best fitted by talent and experience for the duty; that the credit of the Office, and the interest of inventors whose money supports the Office, and of manufacturers, whose capital to many millions is involved in patents, are imperiled by inefficient work; and that the increased number of patents and the general progress of the arts render the proper examination each year more difficult. The erroneous issue of a single patent may easily involve the loss of ten times the amount of the yearly pay of an examiner. These examiners are not only to grant patents, but to see that none are improperly granted. Inventors pay to the Government more than enough to afford the small pay now allowed. To take possession of this fund, and then furnish half-paid (and consequently poor) service, seems like a fraud on inventors.

This note indicates (and there can be no better authority upon the subject than the Commissioner) that cheap men as examiners are not profitable, and that it is not true economy to reduce the pay of this class of employés below a figure commensurate with their services; and experience has proved that it is impossible to retain them, for the same reason that actuates most men, the betterment of their condition. If they can do better, it is natural for them to do so. The argument that they have obtained their knowledge of patents while in Government employ, which knowledge qualifies them to practice as solicitors, and that because of this they should retain their places as a matter of gratitude, falls to the ground. There is no law to prevent resignations; and while the heart may beat with grateful emotions to the Government for its instructions, it becomes necessary to forego sentiment and choose between a starving salary and a fat income. The remedy is, pay according to talent and retain the valuable men.

There has been a gradual and steady increase of the business of the Office from the year 1837, the year on which the Commissioner's comparative statement commences, until the present time, and during the thirty-eight years but eight years show the expenditures in excess of the receipts. In 1837 the cash received was $29,289.08; in 1875, $743,453.36. The number of patents issued in 1837, 435; in 1875, 16,288—an increase so large as to seem almost incredible. A table giving a comparative statement of the business of the Office from 1837 to 1875, inclusive, is here submitted, and tells its own story. It is worthy of examination:

Through the courtesy of a gentleman in the Office, I have obtained the following facts and figures, which prove the wonderful increase of business. He says:

In making this estimate I have calculated the cost to the Office to dispose of an application, whether it went to patent or was rejected, for the reason that, as a rule, rejected applications cost the Office more for examinations, &c., than those which are allowed. There were disposed of in 1856 4,960 applications; in 1865, 10,664; and in 1875, 23,250. The expenses for those years were: 1856, $125,843 for salaries and $31,571 for miscellaneous expenses; 1865, $195,487 for salaries and $73,244 for miscellaneous expenses; 1875, $459,730 for salaries and $63,216 for miscellaneous expenses. Hence the average expenses for application were: 1856, $25.37 in salary and $6 30 miscellaneous, or $31.67 total; 1865, $18.32 in salary and $7 miscellaneous, or $25.32 total; 1875, $19.80 in salary and $2.72 miscellaneous, or $22.50 total

But prior to each of these years there had been granted patents as follows: Previous to 1856, 14,000; 1865, 45,684; 1875, 171,000. That is, in 1865 there were three and one-fourth times as many patents and in 1875 over twelve times as many to be gone over as there were in 1856, and in 1875 three and three-quarters times as many as in 1865. The foreign patents and the technical literature increased in the same proportion. Hence these figures represent about the relative amount of labor involved in the examination of an application in those years. Assuming 1 as the standard for 1856, the proportions would be thus: 1856, 1; 1865, 3.25; 1875, 12. Yet, owing to the efforts of the last few years to thoroughly systematize the Office, the increased attention and diligence on the part of the employés, and increased facilities for examination due to the reproduction of back drawings, &c., the cost in each case was nearly $3 less in 1875 than in 1865. There were over twice the number of cases disposed of in 1875 as in 1865, and seven and one-half times the actual work of 1865 was done in 1875. Had the salary and expense account kept pace with the work, the expense in 1875 would have been over $2,000,000 instead of less than $600,000.

In these estimates the cost of printing reports and Gazette, &c., for each year is not included, for the reason that they are in the nature of public documents intended for the information of Congress and the public, and the expense is not properly chargeable to the Office and was not included in the Office appropriations until a few years ago.

I have copied from the report of the Commissioner for the year 1875 the following tables (which I ask leave to print) for the purpose of showing in detail the items of receipts and expenditures connected with the Office. This is a fair exhibit of the items entering into the account each year, except as to amount, each subsequent year showing a large increase. We have here also a statement of the balance in the Treasury to the credit of the Patent Office fund, a statement of the business of the Office for 1875, and the number of patents issued to the different States and Territories.

Since 1872 the volume known as the Patent Office reports has not been printed; but instead the Official Gazette, a weekly publication, containing the Commissioner's decisions, decisions of the courts, designs patented, trade-marks registered, and various other matter, besides the drawings and claims patented during the week ending on the day of publication. The publication is a success, and a great improvement upon the old reports. The old reports were distributed gratuitously. It will be seen by the table that the amount received for subscriptions to the Official Gazette in 1875 was $6,646.33. The Department is now engaged in the work of photolithographing the drawings of back issues, and when that is completed, which will be, as is estimated, in a year and a half, and possibly sooner, the expenses will be decreased from seventy-five to one hundred thousand dollars yearly.

The following statement showing the receipts of the Patent Office for the quarter ending March 31, 1875, and the quarter ending March 31, 1876, indicates the still increasing business, and, when considered with the proposition of reducing the number of employés, presents the strange anomaly of reducing the help while increasing the work. At the rate shown here we shall have the receipts of 1876 amounting to upward of $900,000, with a large reduction in expenses.

Should the appropriation bill pass the Senate in its present form, reducing the number of employés fifty-seven, it is very questionable as to maintaining the present business. In that event the Department would suffer seriously. The Commissioner says in the letter before referred to:

Should the proposed reduction be made, it will be impossible to keep up the business of the office.

It would be more than folly to permit so valuable a department of the Government to suffer from a false economy, and more especially a department that pays its own way, and is not, and never has been, the first dollar of taxation to the people. Says one who knows:

The income of the Patent Office should not be considered as a revenue to the Government, as it is not a general tax upon the people, but a compensation paid by a special few for service rendered by the Government.

The honorable gentleman, chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, during the discussion pending the passage of the legislative and executive appropriation bill, took a position so entirely contrary to his usual course, that it excited comment, and led to the conclusion that he had not examined the subject with his customary care. For the gentleman's wisdom and statesmanship I have a most profound respect, but that he really meant what he said upon the occasion referred to seems hardly probable. In reply to Mr. SAMPSON he said:

Mr. RANDALL. In reply to the gentleman I wish to direct his attention to the fact we have made no reduction whatever in the higher class of officers in this Bureau. If there is a legitimate source of revenue I know of it is from these patentees. There are some here who would like to break up, or at least to abridge the system of giving enormous fortunes to these patentees. Take for instance the sewing-machines. The whole people of the United States are made to contribute enormous sums of money annually on sewing-machine patents, thereby accumulating vast wealth for the few. So, too, with patents for agricultural machines. The wealth realized in this regard from the body of the people is enormous. Yet they now come here and say the expenses of this Patent Office should not be cut down. I never heard of such a proposition before. The trouble is they ought to be made to contribute toward the support of the Government which gives them a monopoly additional sums of money instead, while taking by indirection out of the pockets of the people enormous wealth.

Mr. SAMPSON. I would like to correct the gentleman. As I understand, he infers that I am in favor of cutting down the fees?

Mr. RANDALL. I do not infer anything. The gentleman stands here and wants these high salaries shall not be reduced, because the fees come out of the pockets of the patentees. He says they ought to be allowed to come in here and have every facility for the granting of patents. I think the policy of this Government should be in a different direction.

Mr. SAMPSON. Then why does not the gentleman abolish the Office altogether?

Mr. RANDALL. I am not quite certain whether I would not.

Mr. SAMPSON. If the gentleman is in favor of breaking down the inventors of the country, then let him say so.

Mr. RANDALL. I do not propose it. The gentleman is speaking in my time. I am not quite certain whether the whole system of patents in this country should not be broken up. As I said before, take your sewing-machines, take your agricultural machines, and what have they done? They have laid contributions upon the body of the people. I have no idea this Bureau shall have any greater facility than they now have. I re-affirm the fact that the compensation in this Bureau is larger than any other under the Government.

The gentleman from Pennsylvania, whose large-hearted generosity is proverbial and whose motives I know are correct, will hardly justify himself upon an examination of his words. I know he would not intentionally hamper any Department of the Government or place any obstacle in the way of a proper administration. The difficulty is that he has not properly considered this Bureau. It is separate and distinct and different from any other Department. The people are not taxed one dollar for its support, but it is sustained by a few, not in the capacity of tax-payers, but as inventors. And why the allusion to sewing-machines and agricultural machines? None can certainly have any objection to them. Living millions and millions yet unborn will venerate and bless the names of Howe, of Wilson, of McCormick, and other worthies, the originators of labor-saving machines. Perhaps they have made fortunes. To fortunes they are entitled. For a few brief years the Government permits them to enjoy a monopoly, and we living contemporaneous with them must pay them for their genius. The benefits stop not with our age, but the future, full of centuries and generations, shall enjoy these blessings when the inventors are gone and their names perhaps forgotten.

Some of us speak of inventors as though we were under no obligations to them, and as if their productions are to be found in every nook or plucked from any tree. Why should not they be entitled to a monopoly and receive enormous sums of money for the products of their brains? Do we object to a man's holding possession of a gold mine, and enriching himself therefrom, if found upon his own land? Can we prevent it? And if an inventor, delving in the regions of thought, discovers something more precious than gold for the toiling millions, coins from his brain something that may bring to thousands of households relief and comfort and happiness, shall we say to him "You shall not be protected; this is but an idea, we will wrest it from you!" If this be justice, then let us have but little of it. Let Lowell and Providence and Manchester and all the manufacturing cities of the earth answer: "From whence came your wealth? On what foundation did you build? Not from the simple hand-machines of old, but from the splendid inventions of the present age." Let the farmer of the West, as he looks over his thousand acres of waving wheat and stately corn, tell you how he will gather and harvest all this wealth. Not with the scythe and sickle, (useful yet, but still relics of the past,) but with the reaper and mower and other magnificent inventions of to-day.

But I have strayed from the Patent Office. If the suggestions of some were adopted, it might be abolished. What then? Something worse or nothing at all. The latter would probably be satisfactory. No patent system; no protection; result, no inventions. Can it be possible that any thinking man believes that inventors puzzle their brains from a simple love of fame? I believe the principal incentive is bread and butter, or, in other words, a living, with a hope of accumulating money. Human nature is everywhere about the same in this respect, and the inventor is actuated by the same impulse as are the lawyer, the farmer, the merchant, and the laborer. Take away protection from these classes, and they must suffer. The same with the inventor, but in a greater degree. His protection is in our admirable patent system, and I think it plain that when we begin to impair its usefulness by cutting off the power of working the Office to its full capacity we do a great wrong. It has been said that we should not go backward with our postal system. That is true We should be progressive. And so I say of the Patent Office. Both are admirable; both should be sustained.

I do not want to be understood as casting any reflections upon the Committee on Appropriations. They have done their work mostly wisely and well. They are the active agents in the work of retrenchment and reform, and there is but little chance for honest adverse criticism of their acts. I am with them heart and hand in their efforts for economy and a proper administration of the different Departments of the Government, and I say nothing against the application of the 10 per cent. principle of reduction to the salaries of some of the employés in the Patent Office. But when the proposition is made to so reduce the force as to cut off a part of the business of the Bureau, and thereby of necessity the revenue, and impairing its efficiency, I respectfully enter my protest, and can but hope that something may interpose to prevent such an unfortunate consummation. The following table will show the proposed reduction of force, and is evidence that there are some sinecures in this department or that the reduction may prove injurious. I am inclined to the latter opinion:

At this point I offer a statement of the receipts and expenditures of the office for the years 1873, 1874, 1875, which shows a steady increase of receipts, but not a corresponding increase of expenditures.

The table also shows the receipts for the months of January and February of 1874, 1875, and 1876, with the same result as to receipts:

The following remarks, copied from the report of the Commissioner of Patents of January 19, 1876, in relation to the representation of the Patent Office at the centennial exposition, and the accompanying statistics, are of interest:

The Patent Office is to be represented at the centennial celebration, and a space of ten thousand square feet has been assigned for the exhibition of models of American inventions, illustrating the more important and useful industries. Models to the number of about five thousand are being selected for this purpose, being about 3 per cent. of the aggregate number in the possession of the Patent Office. These, while illustrating in part the progress of our country in "mechanical and manufacturing industries" and the development of American genius and skill, represent in one way only the results attained. Another mode of presentation of the facts and figures in the case is obtainable from the census report of 1870, and the general subject-matter index of patents granted since the year 1790.

In referring to the census, under the head of "manufactories in operation in 1870, exclusively for agricultural implements," it is found that the—

Number of establishments in operation was	2,076
Number of steam-engines at work	676
Horse-power	15,873
Number of water-wheels at work	426
Horse-power	10,209
Number of hands employed	25,249
Capital invested	$34,834,500
Wages paid	12,151,504
Material used, value	21,473,925

The census shows an increase of $14,578,825 in the value of agricultural implements manufactured over the amount reported in 1860 and of $45,224,174 over the amount reported in 1850, while the total value for the year 1870 of the "mechanical and manufacturing industries" aggregates the sum of $4,232,335,442.

The following are the products of agricultural implements of the manufactories first above referred to, being the articles manufactured and number made:

Cane-mills	108
Clover-hullers	5,206
Corn-planters	21,709
Corn-shellers	12,941
Cotton-planters	2,000
Cultivators	88,740
Fanning-mills	19,772
Grain-cradles	103,646
Grain-drills	32,033
Hand-rakes	207,310
Harrows	9,150
Harvesters	3,566
Hay and straw cutters	30,876
Hay forks	1,298,260
Hoes	135,139
Horse-powers	4,511
Horse-rakes	80,919
Lawn-mowers	2,536
Mowers	38,486
Plows	864,947
Reapers	60,388
Reapers and mowers combined	59,645
Rollers and scrapers	4,803
Seed-sowers	6,900
Scythes	881,244
Scythe-snaths	17,689
Separators	1,131
Shovels	25,756
Sickels	300
Stump-pullers	124
Threshers	22,934
Other products	5,206,789

For the articles above enumerated there have been granted between the years 1790 and 1873, inclusive—that is to say, since the organization of this Office, (1790,) the following patents:

Cane-mills	66
Clover-hullers	100
Corn-planters	647
Corn-shellers	378
Cotton-planters	173
Cultivators	1,617
Fanning-mills	127
Grain-cradles	18
Grain-drills	186
Hand-rakes	9
Harrows	329
Harvesters	2,244
Hay-forks	382
Hoes	201
Horse-powers	415
Horse-rakes	373
Lawn-mowers	38
Mowers	173
Plows	2,451
Reapers	69
Reapers and mowers combined	61
Rollers and scrapers	141
Seed-sowers	579
Scythes	50
Scythe-snaths	26
Separators	334
Shovels	58
Sickles	13
Stump-pullers	191
Threshers	732

I have further selected from the list of patents 1790–1873 the number of patents granted in some other classes or subjects of invention. These indicate the scope and versatility of the inventive genius of our country, and all enter more or less into the "mechanical and manufacturing industries" that have been referred to. They are as follows:

Bee-hives	645
Bending-machines for wood and metal	144
Boots and shoes, manufacture of, and articles used therein	817
Brick-kilns and brick-machines	808
Bridges	425
Brooms and brushes and their attachments	750
Buckles	388
Burglar-alarms	165
Burners, gas, lamp, and vapor	793
Car-brakes	495
Car coupling	961
Car-wheels	314
Carriages and their appendages	1,495
Churns and their appendages	1,391
Clothes driers and wringers	984
Curtain fixtures	364
Fire-arms	1,203
Gas and gas apparatus	1,399
Grain, cutting, binding, and drying	135
Grinding and grist mills	371
Lamps and appurtenances	1,483
Looms and appurtenances	1,210
Paper, manufacture of	269
Pavements	404
Photography	346
Planing machines, wood, and metal	384
Propellers, and apparatus for	570
Printing-presses, apparatus, and material	756
Railways, apparatus, and connections	1,552
Roofs and roofing	506
Rotary engines	170
Saw-mills and machines	1,981
Sewing-machines and their attachments	2,295
Steam-engines and apparatus	1,013
Stoves	2,400
Straw-cutters and machines	401
Sugar-mills and machinery	343
Telegraph and instruments	566
Toys	399
Tobacco-presses and manufactures	197
Valves	1,497
Total number of patents issued since 1836	174,640
Total number of re-issues	6,830
Total number of designs	8,883
Total number of trade-marks	3,287
Total number of labels	464

In the discussion of this subject I have occasionally found gentlemen who take the ground that the interest of the inventor and manufacturer are antagonistic; but the fallacy of this position must be apparent at a glance. They are mutually dependent. As said before, the manufacturing interests have risen to their present importance and the manufactories of the world have become great hives of industry only through and by the superior and wonderful machinery which this age has produced. And on the other hand, without the capital to encourage and the courage to invest, inventive talent must have lain dormant, or if exercised, attracted no remark. This will apply to those inventions connected with manufacturing enterprises, and I do not know but it will to all industries. Had there been no cotton, Whitney might have lived in vain. Without the cotton-gin, but light production of cotton, or if produced, the separation of the seed from the cotton by the old and slow process would result in poor fabrics and fewer manufactories. But the world moves, and all things work for good. That the two are interdependent is apparent. There should be no antagonism, no collision here. Let the inventor enjoy his monopoly for the full term the law allows without disturbance, and the manufacturer, without grudging, acquiesce, paying for the device as the law directs. I cannot think of any class of citizens not interested in preserving our Patent Office and system and protecting and encouraging inventors.

Comparing the fees charged for patents in England with those under our laws, it is evident that our law-makers have kept constantly in view the encouragement and promotion of the arts. While it costs but $35 here for any patent, the cost in Great Britain during the life, in various fees, is £175, or about $850. Before the patent issues £25 required; at the expiration of the third year £50 must be paid, and at the end of the seventh year £100. The patentee thereafter until the expiration of his privilege, which is for fourteen years, enjoys it undisturbed. What chance under such laws for inventors? A large proportion of them are poor men, unable frequently to procure money enough to pay for an American patent. If the fees required by the English laws are not paid in time, the patent is lost beyond redemption. There is but little encouragement under the English law, it being almost restrictive, while we hold out every inducement proper and possible. By the Canadian plan, patents are issued for five, ten, or fifteen years, and a fee of twenty, forty, and sixty dollars charged, according to the length of the term. There is a certain justice and propriety in this system worthy of consideration.

A well grounded cause of complaint exists in the fact that inventors frequently sell their rights to dealers or speculators in patents for a small or inadequate sum, thereby defrauding themselves of the reward the patent laws design they should enjoy. There is no way of preventing this, for a man has a legal right to sell his property. Much of the opposition to inventors arises from this very fact, and if they would be more persistent in introducing their devices into public use themselves, they would obtain much more sympathy, and undoubtedly greater profits. The last ten or fifteen years has been productive of more swindles in agricultural implements than were ever known before, and the thoughtless and swindled victims, injured and angered, seek solace in denouncing honest inventors and the patent system. But the Patent Office lives notwithstanding, and is of itself evidence of its utility and benefits, and the fact that while most every other department of the Government has been under clouds of investigation for frauds and peculations, and that nothing has been presented against an officer of this Bureau in any form, is pretty sure evidence of the honesty and ability with which it is administered. Let it be sustained, and encourage the spirit of invention.

Mr. Chairman, it may be that the future is to give us the same progress in the arts and sciences as has the past, that the coming age is big with great ideas, and is to surprise us, or those who come after us, with its aerial ships, its new motors, its improved machines, just as we have been astonished by the genius of Fulton, of Stephenson, and of Morse. We have no reason to doubt the future. We may indulge in dreams of the advancement of our race with hope and faith that such anticipations are the shadow of a reality to come. Many yet are to be added to the glorious list which contains the names of Newton, of Franklin, of Watts, of Daguerre, and the host of discoverers and inventors who have illuminated the past, and many hearts searching for mysteries will beat with emotions of pleasure at their triumphs. Said Everett, the American orator:

> There are occasions in life in which a great mind lives years of rapt enjoyment in a moment. I can fancy the emotions of Galileo when, first raising the newly-constructed telescope to the heavens, he saw fulfilled the grand prophecy of Copernicus, and beheld the planet Venus crescent like the moon. It was such another moment as that when the immortal printer of Mentz and Strasburg received the first copy of the Bible into their hands, the work of their divine art; like that when Columbus, through the gray dawn of the 12th of October, 1492, beheld the shores of San Salvador; like that when the law of gravitation first revealed itself to the intellect of Newton; like that when Franklin saw, by the stiffening fibers of the hempen cord of his kite, that he held the lightning in his grasp.

It is for us to build up and sustain such institutions and departments of the Government as tend to foster the spirit of invention and discoveries.

Mr. Chairman, I have treated this subject I fear in a rather disconnected manner, and I would gladly have confided it to abler hands. While other Departments of the Government have received attention, there have been none so poor as to do the Patent Office reverence. This is my excuse.

Mr. POPPLETON. I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to; and Mr. CUTLER having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. SPRINGER reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, pursuant to the order of the House, had had under consideration the state of the Union generally, and particularly the bill (H. R. No. 3132) to revise and simplify existing laws imposing duties on imports, and to reduce taxation, and had come to no resolution thereon.

And then, on motion of Mr. MACDOUGALL, (at nine o'clock and twenty minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

PETITIONS, ETC.

The following memorials, petitions, and other papers were presented at the Clerk's desk under the rule, and referred as stated:

By Mr. ATKINS: A letter from the United States Indian agent of the Chippewas of Lake Superior, asking payment of certain claims, to the Committee of Claims.

By Mr. DIBRELL: The petition of Asa Faulkner, of Warren County, Tennessee, for pay for 1,110 pounds of cotton taken by United States authority, to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. HUNTON: The petition of Williams Millsaps, for a pension, to the Committee on Revolutionory Pensions.

IN SENATE.

SATURDAY, June 3, 1876.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. BYRON SUNDERLAND, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. KEY presented the petition of J. H. Johnston, of Roane County, Tennessee, late major of the Eleventh Tennessee Cavalry, praying to be re-imbursed for certain moneys expended by him in recruiting his regiment during the late war; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. CHRISTIANCY presented the petition of E. O. Humphreys and 74 other citizens of Kalamazoo, Michigan, praying for the repeal of the bankrupt law; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. ALLISON. I present the petition of the Right Rev. Bishop Potter, of New York, General John A. Dix, of New York, and others, praying for an amendment to section 2505 of the Revised Statutes, so as to remove discriminations against religious societies. As it relates in some manner to taxation, I move the reference of the petition to the Committee on Finance.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON presented the memorial of citizens of the Creek Nation of Indians, remonstrating against the passage of a law providing for a territorial government for the Indian Territory; which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

He also presented a letter of the Secretary of the Interior, addressed to the chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs, transmitting a copy of a report dated the 8th instant, from the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, upon the subject of the cutting of timber for sale by certain members of the Stockbridge tribe of Indians upon their reservation in the State of Wisconsin; which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. MCCREERY presented a petition of citizens of New Orleans, Louisiana, and a petition of citizens of Louisville, Kentucky, praying for the repeal of the bankrupt law; which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. ALLISON, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, to whom the subject was referred, reported a bill (S. No. 893) to authorize the sale of certain timber cut by the Stockbridge Indians on their reservation; which was read, and passed to the second reading.

Mr. THURMAN, from the Committee on Private Land Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 374) for the adjudication of title to lands claimed by José Apis and Pablo Apis in the State of California, submitted an adverse report thereon; which was ordered to be printed, and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 198) providing for the adjudication and issue of patents in mission-land cases in the State of Oregon and the Territories of Washington, Idaho, and Montana, reported it with amendments, and submitted a report thereon; which was ordered to be printed.

SIOUX RESERVATION.

Mr. ALLISON. If there is no further morning business, I ask the Senate to take up the bill (S. No. 590) providing for an agreement with the Sioux Nation in regard to a portion of their reservation, and for other purposes, which was read and debated at considerable length some weeks ago.

Mr. INGALLS. I feel a very great interest in the subject of the bill, and every Senator who is familiar with the condition of affairs in the Black Hills country from the reports that are continually coming to us of the assaults upon emigrants and travelers must be equally convinced that something should be done; but there appear to be so few Senators present this morning that I am convinced it would be impossible for us to give this bill that consideration which it demands. I suggest that it had better be made a special order, and that we take up unobjected cases on the Calendar.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let us go on with the Calendar in regular order.

Mr. ALLISON. I do not like to antagonize the gentleman, but this is a very important bill; and it is made more so every day from the fact that an expedition is now on foot comprising a considerable number of the Army, which is about moving on this reservation, and the Indians themselves are in a state of great anxiety. It is supposed that very soon a general war will take place in that territory unless some arrangement is made by which a commission can go out there and talk with these Indians and treat with them.

I feel called upon to urge the passage of the bill at the very earliest moment on this account. Of course, if Senators think the Senate is not full enough this morning to consider it, I cannot press the bill.

Mr. THURMAN. I wish to say that I hope the bill will be taken up. If it will be of any advantage at all, it ought to be passed immediately. If it will not be of any advantage, let us find that out as soon as possible. I think when we are really in an Indian war, and threatened with a very extensive one, this bill is of much more consequence than the unobjected cases on the Private Calendar.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Iowa, that the Senate proceed to the present consideration of the bill.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. No. 590) providing for an agreement with the Sioux Nation in regard to a portion of their reservation, and for other purposes, the pending question being on the amendment of the Committee on Indian Affairs to add to section [6] 5 the following:

> And the further sum of $50,000 is hereby appropriated to make suitable provision to aid the said commission in the discharge of the duties required by this act, and said sums shall be expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. PADDOCK. I am reliably informed by citizens of my State, which borders upon this reservation, that these Indians now are in a frame of mind which would warrant the Government in undertaking to make a treaty with them for the surrender of their present reservation and for their removal to the Indian Territory, where it is desirable they should go and to which the Government is making an effort to remove all Indians who are now upon reservations within the States of the Northwest. I do not believe that this bill in its present form can be passed; it is objectionable in many respects. It is objectionable to myself, and to my colleague, and to my State, for several reasons. I do not like the provision requiring them to go to the Missouri River. I am sure that these Indians themselves can never be induced to go there either temporarily or permanently from their present location upon the reservation. I think they could more easily be induced to go to the Indian Territory, to remove absolutely from that whole section, and so relieve us from the entire complication which has grown out of the discovery of gold in that section of the country, rather than go over to the eastern part of the reservation upon the Missouri River. For this reason, among others, I seriously object to the bill; and I desire to offer this simple resolution as a substitute for it:

Resolved, That the President be, and hereby is, authorized to appoint a commission of five persons, two of whom shall be officers of the United States Army, to treat with the Sioux tribe of Indians for the immediate surrender of their present reservation in Dakota Territory and for their removal to the Indian Territory south of the State of Kansas.

Mr. THURMAN. I wish to call the attention of the mover of the bill to the first section. If I understand the first section upon a very hasty reading, it prescribes definitely the terms which we will make with the Indians; and if the commission be appointed the commission will have no power except to propose and accept these terms. It gives them no discretion whatever. It confines them to these precise terms. I submit that possibly that might defeat the whole object of the bill. If I am mistaken, I should be glad to have my mistake pointed out; but as it occurs to me from a somewhat hasty reading—and I am fortified by the second section—the bill lays down an ultimatum on the part of the United States which neither the commissioners to be appointed nor the Indians can in any sense disregard. The second section provides—

That all appropriations hereafter made for the subsistence of the Sioux Nation shall be upon condition that they will agree to the several provisions of the first section of this act.

I do not see how the commission can vary from the provision of the first section of the bill. The language in line 34 and the following lines in the first section is:

And said commission is hereby authorized to make with said tribes an agreement embracing the foregoing provisions, and the further provision that said tribes will thereafter receive all their supplies under such agreement, and under the treaty of 1868, at such points and places on said reservation and in the vicinity of the Missouri River as the Department of the Interior may establish and provide; and also that said tribes will acquiesce in such methods as may be hereafter provided by law or adopted by the President to advance them in civilization and means of self-support.

That seems to me a plain limitation on the power of the commissioners. They are authorized to agree to the provisions in the first section that precede line 34, and then they are authorized to agree to certain other provisions which are herein specified. Everything is bound up in iron. They have absolutely no discretion whatever as it seems to me, and I do not know exactly how they will ever make a treaty if they are so rigidly bound down as this first section binds them. Upon that point I should like to have some light.

Mr. ALLISON. In reply to the question of the Senator from Ohio, I will say that the committee very carefully prepared this first section and intended to lay down a method by which some agreement could be reached. Of course, within certain limits, this section does bind the commissioners, that is, they shall not exceed a certain sum of money and any treaty they make shall include the idea of the removal of these Indians to the Missouri River.

The original treaty of 1868 with these Indians provided that they should go to the Missouri River and receive their supplies at that point; but they absolutely refused to go, and they are now in the State of Nebraska, and not upon their reservation at all. Therefore the committee, when this bill was originally prepared, thought it would be wise to notify these Indians that in this adjustment it was proposed they should, as a part of it, go to the Missouri River and receive their supplies there, at some point on the river, because they can be delivered so much more economically there than they can be at the place where they now are.

But I say now to the Senator from Ohio that I think it is vastly more important that a commission should be sent to these Indians with a view of making some arrangement with them than that we should tie down the commission to any specific arrangement. Therefore I think the committee would concur in any suggestion that would involve the idea of simply treating with these Indians with reference to the Black Hills, with reference to the general subject of peace on that reservation, and if need be with reference to their removal to the Indian Territory.

The Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS] had some proposition which he intended to offer, which I personally have no objection to, and which I think perhaps will accomplish the purpose the committee have now in view.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will state that the substitute proposed by the Senator from Nebraska, [Mr. PADDOCK,] in the form of a resolution, is not in order. The Senator can accomplish his object by moving to strike out all after the enacting clause of the bill and inserting his proposition as a section.

Mr. PADDOCK. I do so move. My resolution was prepared hastily, and it may not be full enough.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Nebraska to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert what he has sent to the Chair.

Mr. EDMUNDS. When this matter was under discussion on the last occasion, I took some interest in it; and the difficulties suggested by the Senator from Ohio, as well as others, struck my mind, and it also to my mind appeared that it was altogether possible that, as proposing a treaty, it looked altogether too coercive, and that we should be less likely to get terms by forcing them than we should be by using mild talk in our laws that nevertheless would confer sufficient authority upon these commissioners to make any sort of representation to these tribes that they think justice and good policy would warrant.

With that view, and not feeling able to vote for the bill as it stands, and at the same time desirous to have a solution of this question, I prepared an amendment at that time which I handed to my distinguished friend, the chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs, for his and his colleagues' consideration. I will read it. It is very short, and it is very much indeed like the proposition of the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. HAMLIN. Where does it come in?

Mr. EDMUNDS. It is to come in as a substitute for the whole bill, striking out all after the enacting clause, and contains a complete proposition on the subject:

That the President be, and he is hereby, authorized, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to appoint a commission, to consist of five persons, to visit as soon as may be the tribes of Sioux Indians with a view to negotiating with them a treaty for the cession to the United States of the rights of said tribes to the country known as the Black Hills or some portion thereof.

Either the whole or part.

Each person so appointed, not being a salaried officer of the United States, shall be entitled to receive $8 a day and his actual and necessary traveling expenses while engaged as such commissioner. That the sum of $50,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, be, and the same is hereby, appropriated, to be expended under the direction of the President, to enable the tribes or their representatives to assemble and confer with said commissioners, and for the expenses of said commission.

Not as was suggested in respect of the appropriation contained in this bill, either justly or unjustly, that it was money to be used for stimulating purposes—not to use any harsh epithets about it—but of course in order to do anything with these people (who are so nomadic, scattered in bands, and so on) with any effect you have got to get a general concurrence; and to do that you must get them assembled together somewhere in as large a representative capacity as possible, all the chiefs, for instance, and all the head-men of these various bands. They may amount to hundreds or to thousands; and in order to do that it is necessary to provide for their sustenance and for their proper treatment, not bribery, but to treat them fairly and enable them to be in peace and comfort while this talk, which may be quite a prolonged one, goes on. To do that, it appeared to me that it was necessary and right that a sum of money sufficient for that purpose should be used, because if these men are going to chase these Indians with the Army in order to try to get them to make a treaty, it will turn out to be a failure, I am afraid. But if you provide for them so that they can see that what we want is a talk, as they call it, and a talk in which these commissioners have full powers, not tied up by any limitations but the general powers of diplomatic consideration with them and that they are all to be got together by representation or otherwise and protected in some convenient place and taken care of calmly, soberly, while the thing goes on, there ought to be considerable hope that some solution might be arrived at. I say this, Mr. President, not forgetting what I said on a former occasion, that it then appeared to me, as it does now, that the acts of our own citizens in invading this territory of theirs are wholly unjustifiable, and it is not strange that these Indians have resorted to the only methods known to them, and indeed to the only methods if the case were reversed known to us, to endeavor to expel by force, and by force according to their methods, for they do not know any other, the people who have gone in there. But at the same time the state of things is such that it is of the highest necessity that every means should be resorted to in order to have a careful conference with these people, so that if possible we may avoid being charged with cruelty or injustice hereafter, and at the same time if possible protect the lives and aid the pursuits of our citizens who are engaged in that sort of operation that leads them to go there.

So it appeared to me—not to make a long speech about it—that if we provided for a simple commission of five men, who, I hope, would be the best in the country for such a purpose, approved by the Senate, and provided the means of getting these Indians together and taking care of them while they were remaining together, some good might come out of it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator propose to amend the amendment of the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. EDMUNDS. Yes, sir; to amend the amendment. I want to modify my proposition for a moment as to the description of this country.

I move to amend the amendment proposed by the Senator from Nebraska by striking out all after the word "that" and inserting what I now send to the Chair. I have only changed it from the way I read it before by inserting after the word "treaty" the words "or agreement," so that there will be no trouble about any technical difficulty as to the name of the thing, and I have described the country "as the country known as the Sioux reservation in Dakota and territory adjacent, or some portion thereof," so as to cover the whole ground.

Mr. INGALLS. Let it be reported as modified.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment to the amendment will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

The President be, and hereby is, authorized, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to appoint a commission, to consist of five persons, to visit as soon as may be the tribes of the Sioux Indians with a view to negotiating with them a treaty or agreement for the cession to the United States of the rights of said tribes to the country known as the Sioux reservation in Dakota and the territory adjacent, or some portion thereof. Each person so appointed, not being a salaried officer of the United States, shall be entitled to receive $8 a day and his actual and necessary traveling expenses while engaged as such commissioner. That the sum, of $50,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, be, and the same is hereby, appropriated to be expended under the direction of the President, to enable the tribes or their representatives to assemble and confer with such commissioners and for the expenses of said commission.

Mr. PADDOCK. I accept the amendment.

Mr. INGALLS. The proposition of the Senator from Vermont is evidently a very great improvement upon the original bill as offered by the Senator from Iowa and reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs; but I still think that the proposition of the Senator from Vermont contains one limitation that ought to be removed. It now proposes that this commission shall treat with the Sioux for the relinquishment of a certain portion of their reservation known as the Black Hills. I am very much in doubt whether the United States want the Black Hills. But there is one thing that we do want, and that is peace with the Sioux Indians; and I am inclined to think that if this commission go there instructed to treat with the Sioux for the relinquishment of that portion of their reservation upon which the gold operations have been recently conducted it may be a failure, and that the commission ought to have unlimited power to treat with the Sioux Indians regardless of any cession of a portion of their reservation.

So far as I can judge from the most reliable reports that have been received from that country, it is entirely valueless as a gold-bearing region. Not one dollar has been produced for one hundred that have been expended, and the soil and the timber are no better than may be found in a very large portion of the territory of the United States west of the Missouri River and now unoccupied. The Sioux are sensitive upon this subject. It may be that they will be entirely unwilling to relinquish any portion of their reservation; and, if they are so unwilling, then this commission ought not to be restricted by the terms of the bill under which they are authorized to act to the cession of a portion of the reservation of these Indians, and I therefore think, and I hope the Senator from Vermont will so modify his amendment as to make this commission absolutely without instructions, and authorize them to proceed to that country for the purpose of making a treaty of peace upon some terms with the Sioux Indians, because, if the present condition of affairs is to continue, there will be hundreds more of lives sacrificed before anything whatever can be done; and, if this is to be insisted upon, it is possible that a satisfactory result may be indefinitely procrastinated. I hope, therefore, that this commission will be authorized to proceed there and treat without any limitation whatever, and prevent the continuation of the difficulty that now exists upon that frontier.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I have no objection to adding, if my friend thinks it necessary, after the description of what they are now authorized to treat for, (which is a relinquishment of the Indian title to the Dakota reservation and their rights adjacent,) the words "or otherwise for the preservation of peace." That will cover the whole subject, I think.

Mr. INGALLS. Anything that will not make it obligatory on this commission to obtain a cession of that portion of the reservation before peace can be obtained will do.

Mr. EDMUNDS. As it stands now, it does not do that. They have full authority to treat for the relinquishment of the whole or any portion of this reservation. It does not say "Black Hills."

Mr. INGALLS. That is what it means.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I think it would be implied in the language now; but I have no objection, if it is agreeable to the Senator, after providing for authority to treat for the relinquishment of some portion of this territory or the whole, to add "or otherwise for the preservation of peace." If that is agreeable to everybody, I will make that modification.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Vermont modifies his amendment.

Mr. HOWE. Mr. President, the Senator from Kansas thinks the proposition now submitted to the Senate is an improvement upon that which emanated from the committee. On that point I am obliged to differ with the Senator from Kansas. The difference between the two propositions, so far as I understand them now, is that the one proposes to legislate and the other proposes to negotiate. Both have in view the same end. The question is, Which is the best mode of attaining that end? The Senator from Vermont objects that the bill of the committee is in terms and upon its face coercive. While his own proposition, it must be admitted, is relieved of that objection, yet I am profoundly impressed with the conviction that the mode proposed by the committee is practicable, while the method proposed by the Senator from Vermont is impracticable.

The Senator says that we want to avoid, if possible, all ground for imputing injustice to us in our dealings with the Indians. That is an object to be aimed at and to be striven for; but I do really believe that if we resort to negotiation instead of legislation, we not only shall not avoid the imputation of injustice, but we shall be sure of doing injustice, and doing it to two parties, to the Indians and to the United States. I think it is just as sure as the recurrence of winter, that if you send a commission out there to negotiate with the Indians under this proposition two things will happen: first, that you will pay four times as much money as you ought to pay; and secondly, that the Indians will not get what you pay. Your proposition is to negotiate with the Indians and to make a bargain with the Indians. I am not very familiar with your Indian negotiations, but I doubt very much if a bargain was ever made with an Indian tribe in the world. If there is such a case, it has only been in exceptional instances and with the most advanced tribes. Your bargains, while they are nominally upon their face with the Indian tribes, have been really made with their guardians ad litem or what not, their next friends, the crowd of hangers-on who always surround a tribe, who are their advisers and counsellors, who really tell them what they had better demand, and finally what they had better take, and who get large pay for doing it, and take good care of themselves in every treaty that is made. You sent a commission out there to these Sioux gentlemen last fall; they did not make a bargain; they found demands made which they dared not accede to, and which, in my judgment, they would have been very unwise if they had acceded to. Probably, strengthened by these instructions, your next commission will agree to whatever they ask, and they will be sure to ask a very large sum.

The Senator from Kansas says that he doubts whether we want the Black Hills. I concur in that doubt. I have never seen the Black Hills, but I think there is a less eager demand for them on the part of the people of the United States to-day than there was six months ago. I do not want myself the Black Hills, but I do want and would be willing to pay considerable money to exclude the Sioux Indians from occupying that portion of Dakota Territory. They have now a reservation large enough for a good smart empire. It is no sort of use to them; they cannot cultivate it and do not intend to do so. They do not even graze it. There is absolutely no game upon it. It is worthless to them. When they want a buffalo, or a deer, or anything else, they have to leave that reservation in order to get it. At the same time they are spread all over it, and you have to send the provisions that you send to them to a great many different points at a great cost of carriage. It would be worth money to the United States to collect that tribe on a small reservation, and on a reservation, if it is to be in that country anywhere, near to some of your natural thoroughfares—a reservation upon the Missouri River.

Now, Mr. President, while I think if you undertake to trade with these people you will cheat them and get cheated both, if you proceed by way of legislation you may avoid the imputation of injustice if you please. If you will pass a fair act, the act will always remain of record and will speak for itself. It will always vindicate itself if it be a fair one. And if you dare trust your own consciences, you know your judgments are better as to what would be a fair trade for the Indians than their judgments can possibly be. You ought to be safer counsellors and better legislators for them, better guides and better friends of them, than those half-breeds, those squaw-men, and the other guardians who have taken possession of the tribes and control them. So I should very much prefer to trust the honor of the United States to an act of Congress than to any negotiation that can be made by this commission.

I shall vote against this substitute. I do not doubt but that the Senate will think the old plan of treating is still the safer one. If they do, they will agree to it. I shall be sorry; and I am very sure the country will regret it a few years hence, if they do not this year.

Mr. ALLISON. I desire to say a word or two in reference to the object of the original bill as presented by the committee. The Senator from Kansas objects to it because it is limited in its provisions.

The difficulty that the committee had in making up a bill for this purpose was that we not only desired to provide for the acquisition of the Black Hills, so called, but we desired to provide for what should be done with them after they were acquired. The moment the United States acquires possession of the Black Hills, if they are of any value whatever, they will be seized upon by the people who are in the hills. Therefore, we provided in this bill that neither the homestead law nor any of the laws in reference to our public lands should apply to these hills, because we did not wish to have a permanent settlement go into these hills, unless some provision should be made at the same time for the absolute relinquishment of this whole Sioux reservation and the removal of these Indians to the Indian Territory. It would be almost impracticable to maintain settlements in the Black Hills if the entire country is to be surrounded by an Indian reservation. Therefore the committee made some specific provision on that subject.

Again, we are to be called upon within a week to appropriate not less than a million and a half dollars to subsist these Sioux for the coming fiscal year. Although we are not bound by law or treaty stipulation to do it, yet we shall have presented to us, when the Indian appropriation bill comes up for consideration, the question of appropriating a million and a half dollars for the subsistence of these Sioux. Why? They cannot subsist themselves where they are. There is no game there. Therefore they must either plunder upon the border settlements or be subsisted by the Government of the United States. That necessity is forced upon us. We provided that in future expenditures for subsistence these sums should be expended on the Missouri River. Why? Because we supposed that it would be cheaper and better for the Indians to go to cheap transportation than for the Government of the United States to transport by land carriage this subsistence two hundred miles and by railway from the Missouri River five hundred miles to Cheyenne, thus involving the Government in large sums for transportation.

Hence these specific provisions were put in this bill with the view to protect the Government of the United States in future appropriations made and necessary to be made for these Indians. But so impressed am I with the necessity of some provision with reference to this subject immediately for the purpose of preserving peace with these Sioux tribes and for the purpose of saving the Government of the United States $10,000,000 or $15,000,000, if not more, which will be expended in a war with these Sioux tribes during the present summer, that I desire that some provision shall be made here and now whereby peace will be maintained and preserved. Therefore if the proposition of the Senator from Vermont is more satisfactory to the Senate, for myself I am willing to accede to it, although I do believe it would be better to pass the bill as it came from the Committee on Indian Affairs.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Nebraska [Mr. PADDOCK] accepts the amendment proposed by the Senator from Vermont, [Mr. EDMUNDS.]

Mr. WINDOM. I do not want to take a moment, as the morning hour has nearly expired, and will only say that I very much prefer the bill as reported by the committee to the amendment, and therefore I shall vote against the amendment. I am not prepared to say that if the amendment shall carry I shall not vote for the bill thus amended, although I have several times pledged myself that I would never again vote for a general Indian treaty. I believe nearly all our Indian troubles have arisen from the treaty system, and wherever there is an opportunity to put an end to it, I mean to avail myself of that opportunity. I am inclined to believe there is an opportunity to do it with this one, the most important of the tribes, and therefore I do not want to see another general treaty such as is contemplated by the amendment. But I will not take up time, as a vote is desired.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I desire simply to say that if the amendment of the Senator from Vermont is adopted, I shall not take the time of the Senate in any remarks upon the subject, because I believe that that amendment may do great good. If it is not adopted, and the question is to come up on the original bill, then I shall take occasion to say something on that subject; and therefore, as the hour of one is near at hand and the chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs expresses his anxiety that some result shall be attained, I give way and trust we shall have a vote on the amendment.

Mr. BOGY. I was disposed to favor the amendment of the Senator from Vermont at first; but on reflection I do not think it will exactly do. I think the statement made by the Senator from Kansas is correct, that when the commissioners go out to the Indian country it will be found out that we do not really want this country known as the Black Hill country between the two Cheyenne Rivers.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I suggest to my friend that, pursuant to the suggestion of the Senator from Kansas, I have modified my proposition so as to embrace the alternative that the commissioners may treat "otherwise for the preservation of peace."

Mr. BOGY. I observed that, and to a certain extent I think it a great improvement, but it may not be sufficient.

I understand the facts about this case to be these: These Indians are in a great state of perturbation at this time because their country is being invaded by a very large number of people who are going into the Black Hills in search of gold. Whether there be gold there or not, they are going there.

Mr. PADDOCK. They are not only going but are there now by the thousand.

Mr. BOGY. They are there, and the Indian country is being traversed in every direction. The consequence is that there is a great state of perturbation and doubt, and it has led of course to aggressions on both sides. Therefore the time has arrived when something should be done intelligently with the question, and I am in favor of sending a commission there. I do not know that the amendment of the Senator from Vermont to authorize the appointment of a commission composed partly of officers of the Army, whether on the retired-list or not, but one or two gentlemen whom I could name, now in the Army and perhaps on the retired-list, ought to be a part of this commission no matter who else may be upon the commission, because I know that they are very competent and faithful, and that they know the wants of the Indians and their rights and at the same time know the wants of the white people perfectly well. The object is not to acquire territory so much, because it is yet a wild country and fit for nothing else but a home for the Indians for the present time, as it is to preserve peace at the present moment and to arrest what I cannot understand, the moving of three columns of the Army of the United States, as we are informed by the papers. I do not know it officially or directly; and yet I believe the information to be correct that that Indian country is now being invaded, not only invaded by the white men who are going there in pursuit of gold, but actually the Army is moving, a column from the Missouri River, a column from the northwest under General Gibbon, and a column from Fort Laramie under General Custer. Three columns are moving there to concentrate at one common point somewhere in the Black Hills country. The result is, as a matter of course, that the Indians are frightened, and they are only doing that which we under the same circumstances would do, as was well said by the Senator from Vermont—there is no question about that; the result is that a great many depredations are committed, a great many persons are killed, and a great deal of harm and injury is being done. Therefore something ought to be done by the Congress of the United States to arrest the thing as speedily as possible. The object is, first, to preserve the peace; second, to remove those Indians from that country, whether specifically the Black Hills country or another portion, but to get the consent of the Indians to remove from that region of country to the Missouri River. Why, it has been the home of the Sioux for many, many generations, and to concentrate those eight, nine, or ten different Sioux tribes together on the Missouri River, so that they would be there on a large reservation. The country is there a country fit for nothing else but for Indians, I think. It is not fit for cultivation, or, at most, is capable of very little cultivation; but you have to feed them there, and you will have to feed them if you send them down to the country west of Arkansas.

Mr. President, I think, then, under all the circumstances, as there appears to be a disposition on the part of the Senate which I think is unanimous to meet the subject intelligently and squarely and fairly, I shall move, with the consent of the Senator from Iowa, that the bill be referred to the Committee on Indians Affairs, hoping that they will be able to report on Monday, considering the proposition made by the Senator from Vermont which has a great deal of merit, and some portions of the bill. I think on reflection that the amendment of the Senator from Vermont is not quite sufficient, although I was disposed at first to favor it. Being anxious for early action on this matter I will move, unless my friend from Iowa shall object—he is chairman of the committee, but I think he will agree to it—that the subject be referred back to the Committee on Indian Affairs with instructions to report on Monday next and then have the matter disposed of. This bill may be worked up so as to make it satisfactory to my friend from Nebraska, [Mr. HITCHCOCK,] who has an objection which I have no doubt is well founded. He is from that region of country and has a right to be heard. So of his colleague. Let the committee get up a bill to meet the object. Something has to be done.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The morning hour has expired.

Mr. THURMAN. I move to extend the morning hour for a quarter of an hour that this bill may be finished.

Mr. PADDOCK. I hope the morning hour may be extended.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I have no objection to this bill going on by general consent for a few minutes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. By unanimous consent the time may be extended for a few minutes subject to a call for the unfinished business.

Mr. THURMAN. I do not wish to take up any time in the discussion of this measure about which other Senators are so much better informed than I am; but I wish to say in reference to some remarks which have been made here that there are two sides to this question between us and the Indians. Some Senators have spoken in language of very strong condemnation of the whites who have intruded themselves into this Black Hills country, and I agree that their conduct was unjustifiable; but because their conduct was unjustifiable, I cannot justify the wholesale massacre of them that has been going on if the reports that have reached us be true. These Sioux have been supported by this Government. Long since they were entitled to support under the treaty between them and us; we have without any treaty obligation requiring us to do so, continued to support them; and we have offered them the most liberal terms for a cession of this Black Hills country, which we are told here is of no value to them. They have rejected all our offers, and insisted upon a price for the Black Hills country ten times more than its real value; and, having thus been supported by us without any treaty obligation on our part to do so, and having rejected the fair and liberal offer on our part which would have prevented any difficulty between us at all, it will not do to say that they were justified in taking the tomahawk and scalping-knife in their hands simply because white men have intruded into this country. That was no way to treat citizens of the United States, citizens of a Government that has extended toward these Sioux as liberal and as charitable treatment as that which I have mentioned.

One word more. General Crook is out there with between twelve and thirteen hundred men. If I know that man—and I think I know him well—those murders must cease, or there will be punishment, and punishment that will be remembered as long as that tribe lasts. It will not do to condemn him or the Army of the United States in advance if they protect the white citizens there, even though they be wrongfully there. If there is blame at all, it is upon the Government for not having prevented the whites from going there; but if you had undertaken to prevent them from going there, it would have required an army larger than you possess to do it. Having gone there wrongfully, as I admit, unjustly, improperly, I once more say that it is no justification for the murders that have been committed, the scalps that have been taken by the Sioux; and once more I say that, in my judgment, it is Crook's duty to prevent those murders and to defend those white people, and I believe he will do it.

Mr. BOGY. The tone of argument inaugurated by my friend from Ohio will transfer the Indian war from that country to the Senate Chamber; that is all. Nobody here vindicates the murder of white men by Indians. The Senator from Vermont has not done so, and I am sure I have not done so.

Mr. THURMAN. I am sure I did not intimate that any one did so.

Mr. BOGY. It is not right to argue a question of this kind in that way, and if you do it, you destroy the whole object. I am not here to vindicate the Indians who may have murdered the white men; yet that tone of argument would imply that those who are in favor of doing something to prevent war are men who vindicate the Indians and justify these murders. I do not wish to occupy any such position.

Mr. THURMAN. I beg my friend not to suppose that I intimated any such thing. I certainly never intended it.

Mr. BOGY. Whether my friend from Ohio intended it, or not, it is so recorded, and it was understood. My friend from Iowa and myself, and other members whom you have placed on the Indian Committee, and upon whom you have imposed the unpleasant duty of attending to Indian affairs, are made here to appear as vindicating the Indians when they commit murders and outrages. I do not choose to occupy any such position. I do not justify the Indians, but I say—and it cannot be denied by any reasonable man here or elsewhere—that if the white man will go to that country in violation of treaty stipulations, without any right to go there, they must expect to be murdered, not that I would justify their murder, not that I would commend it, but it is an inevitable fact. I do not know what right General Crook, or any other general, has to invade the Indian country unless he does so by peremptory orders, and I should like to know who has a right to give such orders, if even the President himself has a right to do it.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Does the honorable Senator assert that General Crook is there in violation of orders?

Mr. BOGY. I say I do not know. There is the trouble. If we intend to discuss that matter in the way inaugurated by the Senator from Ohio, I say we shall transfer the Indian war from the Indian country to the Senate Chamber. I only wish not to be placed in a wrong position in regard to this thing. I wish a commission to go to that country authorized to prevent the things that are being done there to-day; that is, to bring about peace and good understanding with these Indians.

Mr. SARGENT. As if they were in a foreign country?

Mr. BOGY. No; I do not think it is foreign territory, but I think it is Indian country, but to the extent of making a treaty with them it is a foreign country as much as if it were a foreign nation with whom we were making a treaty.

The fact is, Mr. President, the time has come when this subject has to be approached in a very different way, in a kind way. That country is in a state of great confusion and great perturbation. Everything is boiling and seething there; and something must be done to protect the unfortunate white men who have been misled into that country. No man desires them to be protected more than I do. I do not wish one of them to lose his life. They are our own people on the frontier, with whom I am in sympathy.

I will renew the motion I made, unless my friend from Iowa should object to it, and I hope he will not, to refer this matter back to the Indian Committee, so that they may prepare a bill which, I presume, my friend from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK] himself will not object to, because I have no doubt he is right-minded upon this subject. He said he was in favor of the amendment of my friend from Vermont. I have no doubt he would have peace preserved in his own State. If that can be done, it is all I desire to do. I think the Indian Committee could perfect a bill that would meet this object, understanding now somewhat the sentiment of the Senate.

Mr. ALLISON. I hope the Senator from Missouri will not press that motion. I will ask that the amendment of the Senator from Vermont may be printed, and I think the Indian Committee can consider it and the other amendments and make such a proposition as may be advisable by Monday morning, if the bill cannot be finished to-day. But I hope it may be finished to-day, and that no motion will be made to recommit it to the committee.

Mr. PADDOCK. There ought not to be a single day's delay in considering this question. It seems to me that the Senate ought to take up the matter to-day and conclude it. The fact is patent to all that these people are already there in large numbers, and that there is bloodshed, carnage, and destruction of life and property by this savage tribe which contests the advance of civilization thither. Action ought to be and must be had at once, and while I am up I must be permitted to say that it has been a very fashionable thing here to reflect upon the brave and enterprising people on the frontier who have sometimes pushed forward into the so-called Indian country; but it should be remembered by our friends in the East that our friends on the frontier are only following the illustrious examples that have been set long before. They are only doing that which was done by the pilgrim fathers when they landed on Plymouth Rock, and by those who, afterward following their example, went into Pennsylvania, Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, Iowa, and other sections, repeating the history that had been made before. It is utterly impossible to restrain the American people when opportunities are presented to advance their fortunes. The same spirit of enterprise impels all, whether they reside in New England or Nebraska.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Missouri moves the recommittal of the bill to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. ALLISON. I hope the Senator from Missouri will not press that motion.

Mr. BOGY. If my friend objects to it, I will not insist upon it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Missouri withdraws his motion.

Mr. ALLISON. I have nothing further to say.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I merely wish to say a word, not to take up time. The difference between these two propositions is simply this: There is no need of sending the bill back to the committee, because we understand the two points of view. The bill provides, as was stated before, in such a way that however desirous I might be, for one, of getting this matter adjusted, I could not vote for it, because, as stated by the Senator from Ohio, [Mr. THURMAN,] it ties everything up to one rigid and distinct rule and makes a sort of proposition, and requires a species of performance, that leaves no latitude at all for conference or change. That is no way to make an agreement or to start to make one, unless we are going to abandon the whole idea of having an agreement and say "We will pass a positive act that this thing shall be done." For that purpose you need not send out any commissioners at all; and if the Indians will not do that, we can make them do it at the point of the bayonet. But nobody proposes that. Everybody agrees that these tribes have rights. I will not spend the time of the Senate in defining them and explaining them; but they have rights in that region of country, and having rights, they are entitled to be protected in the enjoyment of them until they are deprived of them. We all agree that at present the only just way of depriving them of those rights is to do it by their free consent and on just principles. In order to find out how that can be done, my proposition (or really the proposition of the Senator from Nebraska, [Mr. PADDOCK,] for mine is only an amplification in form of the one he has proposed, and it is his now as he has adopted that change of phraseology) makes a simple provision for meeting with these Indians and getting them together in a peaceable way to talk the present attitude of the subject over and see if it is not possible to come to some agreement for peace between us and them and for future security, with open powers, subject of course in the end to the approval of this Government when they come back. It does seem to me that is the most sensible way of doing. That is all I have to say.

Mr. INGALLS. It appears to me that the amendment proposed by the Senator from Vermont is defective in that it does not provide or say whether this agreement shall be valid until it is ratified by Congress.

Mr. EDMUNDS. It only provides for a negotiation, which necessarily implies a ratification by Congress.

Mr. INGALLS. That would be entirely ineffectual. Of course, unless there is some provision made for conveying assurances to these Indians that when these ministers plenipotentiary and envoys extraordinary to the court of Red Cloud are to have some authority from Congress to carry their treaty into effect, it will be merely nugatory and idle. It will be a powwow, a palaver, a talk that will amount to nothing.

Mr. SHERMAN. It will be a talk of the old folks while the young ones are fighting.

Mr. INGALLS. Therefore the amendment ought certainly to provide, both for the protection of the Government and for the satisfaction of the Indians, that this treaty shall not be valid and binding until ratified by Congress. I believe the Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON] was in this country last summer with the Senator from Wisconsin, [Mr. HOWE,] and perhaps some others, and at that time the Sioux demanded the sum of $70,000,000 for the cession of what is known as the Black Hills country. The terms of the amendment confer plenary power and authority upon these commissioners to make any agreement they see fit with these Indians, and we certainly ought not to place it in their power to bind us to pay an extravagant and extortionate sum for this territory.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Will my friend allow me to explain to him a moment?

Mr. INGALLS. Yes, sir.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The amendment, as I drew it, and as it stands now, except that the word "agreement" is added after "treaty," provides that they are to negotiate with these Indians with a view to a treaty, and as it now reads, with a view to a treaty or agreement—that is a mere question of names—for these objects. That is the very language, I believe, verbatim et literatim, that is used when we authorize the President to make a treaty with a foreign power, or a negotiation or anything else. That is to say, upon the principles of our Constitution and the principles of all public government it is perfectly understood that these agents, plenipotentiaries as my friend calls them, have no power to bind their principal except in the way named. They make a negotiation, which if satisfactory to the principal the principal will carry out. And so with the Indians.

Mr. INGALLS. Under the laws of Congress we cannot make a treaty with them.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Under the laws of Congress I submit that we can make a treaty, because the Constitution gives us that power. Supposing we could not, this being the last law of Congress, if it should become a law, it would cover that. But I am indifferent as to whether it shall be an agreement that is to be ratified by Congress. If you want that, then I agree there ought to be added words, because ordinarily it would be understood that it would be referred to the Senate for ratification; but if Senators prefer that it shall be a ratification of both Houses rather than by two-thirds of the Senate, I certainly have no objection to saying so. I apologize to my friend for interrupting him.

Mr. INGALLS. I should be entirely unwilling to authorize these commissioners to bind the Government by negotiation or treaty or agreement with these Indians to pay an extortionate or entirely superfluous sum for this territory.

Mr. EDMUNDS. So should I, only I think it is plain that on the ordinary principle the treaty must be ratified by the Senate as the provision stands.

Mr. INGALLS. I think, then, the amendment should show it in plain and explicit terms.

Mr. EDMUNDS. It never has been the case before.

Mr. SARGENT. The policy of making treaties with Indian tribes was inaugurated very early in our history. Happily it was broken up a few years ago by act of Congress. I am not entirely sure that it was not necessary originally that these treaties should be made. Perhaps when these tribes were powerful, hovered upon our borders, and hemmed in our people, it was the only way of dealing with the problem; but it was a most expensive system, and toward the last, and just before Congress repudiated it, it loaded upon the shoulders of the United States annually millions of dollars. Some treaties which were made, and some notably with these very Sioux tribes, contained enormous provisions of tribute to be paid by the Government of the United States to these tribes without any obvious equivalent either of benefit to the Indians themselves or of peace to the country. I am very much opposed to reviving that system. I was very much in favor of abolishing it at the time it was done, and I should not like that any equivocal words placed in this legislation should raise the question again whether an agreement made with these Indians could be treated as a treaty and become the supreme law of the land by the mere assent of the Senate. In my view, the present condition of the Indian tribes amounts simply to a number of associations, whatever the number of tribes may be, holding land within the territories of the United States in common, ordinarily, in proprietorship, but subject to all the laws of the United States both for revenue and other purposes, liable to the military arm of the United States to repress disorders and subject to our general laws where applicable to their country.

I think this is the only relation which the Indians now sustain to the United States. They are not foreign nations in any sense of the word. If we see fit, in consideration of their poverty, or of the necessity of giving them the means of civilization, or any humane motive, to advance to them or donate to them, out of the Treasury of the United States money necessary for these purposes, I am willing to vote as liberally as any one this side of prudence for these purposes; but I am opposed to the theory, as the necessity no longer exists for it, that these amounts which we pay are tributes paid by this powerful nation to any other nation whatever, whether a nation of Indians or a nation under any pretense or designation.

I am opposed to any theory which degrades us into the supposition that we purchase peace of Indian tribes. If they are our wards, I am willing to treat them generously as such. I think it is very much better to pursue the policy which was laid down by the House of Representatives some four or five years ago, and assented to by the Senate after repeated committees of conference, that all these matters rest in agreement between ourselves and these scattered bands of Indians, and that Congress itself shall determine whether these agreements shall be ratified, whether money shall be taken out of the Treasury in consequence of them, and as to any territorial changes by which the lands of the Indians shall be increased or diminished. It is a much safer system, brings much better scrutiny to the expenditures which are made under this head, and prevents our being entrapped upon the point of honor, as we were in the old time, and frequently bled severely because there was some punctilio, some question of obligation as between nations binding us thereto.

I am opposed, therefore, to the amendment of the Senator from Vermont in its present form. I think the original bill of the committee, which proposes that this shall be an agreement and shall be subsequently ratified by Congress, is much more in consonance with the policy that we have pursued for several years past, and will be very much better for our people.

Mr. BOGY. With an amendment offered to the amendment of the Senator from Vermont, I should have no objection to it; but it would carry out my view, which is simply to authorize a commission to go to that country to take such steps as may be deemed necessary to bring about peace. That is the whole thing after all, and the latter clause of the amendment covers that point:

> They shall have the right to negotiate for the cession, in whole or in part, of that territory known as the Black Hills country, or otherwise for the preservation of peace.

With this amendment I should be perfectly willing to accept the amendment of the Senator from Vermont, and I think it covers the whole ground.

Mr. INGALLS. I shall propose to amend by adding the following words:

> Said commissioners shall make full report to the President at as early a day as practicable, which report, together with any agreement made with said Indian nation, shall be submitted to Congress for its approval; and any agreement when so approved, and not before, shall be binding upon the United States and the Sioux Nation.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President, I will observe in regard to this matter that I hope the Senate will not attempt to go back on the law as it now stands. The law expressly provides that all negotiations and agreements or treaties with Indian tribes shall be submitted to Congress.

Mr. INGALLS. That is what I proposed.

Mr. SHERMAN. I know.

Mr. BOGY. Although that may be the law, can we not change the law? Is it never to be changed?

Mr. SHERMAN. Congress will have to change it.

Mr. BOGY. Congress will change it by this bill. The bill must pass Congress.

Mr. SHERMAN. I know that, but I am opposed to it. I shall oppose any further negotiations or treaties with Indian tribes. I supposed that system had been abandoned long ago. If the Committee on Indian Affairs will now state, with all the light they have before them, with the reports of Army officers, the reports of Indian agents and superintendents, and of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, what they want of the Sioux Indians, what they think is right before God and their consciences, how much they are willing to give to support the Sioux Indians, what they demand of the Sioux Indians to submit to, what terms they will impose on them as peace-loving and good men—if they will make such a proposition to us, I will vote it as a law and enforce it as a law, and I will compel the Sioux to submit to it just as I would compel our own people to submit to the law.

Mr. ALLISON. That is precisely what the committee have done in the bill before the Senate.

Mr. SHERMAN. Therefore I say stand by the bill; I desire to vote for the bill. If this bill embodies the ideas of the Interior Department, the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, the agents, Army officers, and the committee appointed by the Senate to investigate this matter, as to what the Indians ought to do and what we ought to do, let us vote it as a law. The law to which I have referred was passed in 1871, after great debate, by Congress, and I will never vote to recede from it and go back to the old sham of Indian treaties. My friend from California points me out the law as it now stands, and I will read it:

> No Indian nation or tribe within the territory of the United States shall be acknowledged or recognized as an independent nation, tribe, or power, with whom the United States may contract by treaty; but no obligation of any treaty lawfully made and ratified with any such Indian nation or tribe prior to March 3, 1871, shall be hereby invalidated or impaired.

The only objection I have to the proposition made by the Senator from Vermont, supported by the Senator from Nebraska, is that it violates the law; it goes back upon what is now the established policy of this Government, which is to make laws for the Indians. You may, if you choose, send a commission to talk with them; but what good will it do? The Senator from Iowa himself was on a commission last summer, and I imagine was very glad to get out of it as soon as possible—a commission not authorized by law exactly, but still it was an honest effort to bring about peace. I have no objection to it. But what is the use of sending men there who cannot understand their language, to go and talk with the old men of the tribes on the reservation while the bucks, as I believe they call them, are off fighting with General Crook or robbing and plundering our white people who have unlawfully gone into the hills? It is utterly useless, money thrown away; but, if you pass a law, they will have to support it, and the Army and our agents will enforce it.

Mr. PADDOCK. The bill itself provides for the appointment of a commission just such as is contemplated by the amendment.

Mr. SHERMAN. Only to get information; not to make a treaty or agreement.

Mr. PADDOCK. Yes, to make an agreement.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Precisely the same thing.

Mr. INGALLS. Is the bill open to amendment?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is.

Mr. INGALLS. I offer the following as an amendment to the bill——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. To the bill or the substitute?

Mr. INGALLS. To the substitute offered by the Senator from Vermont.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will hear it read, but it is not in order unless it be by way of addition.

Mr. INGALLS. It is by addition.

The CHIEF CLERK. The amendment is to insert at the end of the proposed substitute the following:

> And said commissioners shall make full report to the President at as early a day as practicable, which report, together with any agreement made with said Indian nation, shall be submitted to Congress for its approval; and any agreement when so approved, and not before, shall be binding upon the United States and the Sioux Nation.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Nebraska accept the amendment?

Mr. PADDOCK. I do not.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair should state that the question is on the amendment to the last section of the original bill reported by the Committee on Indian Affairs, which will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. The committee propose to amend section [6] 5 by adding—

And the further sum of $50,000 is hereby appropriated to make suitable provision to aid the said commission in the discharge of the duties required by this act, and said sums shall be expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I suggest to the Senator from Iowa to allow us to take the question on the amendment by way of substitute for the whole bill before he puts the question on perfecting the original bill by the amendments of his committee.

Mr. ALLISON. I accept that suggestion, and tried to make it myself some time ago.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair rules that that course is not in order without common consent.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I ask common consent.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to taking a vote on the substitute before voting on the amendment of the committee to the original bill? The Chair hears no objection——

Mr. HOWE. No, I object. I think we had better perfect the bill first.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment just read to the bill.

Mr. PADDOCK. I should like to say, in explanation of my objection to the amendment of the Senator from Kansas, [Mr. INGALLS,] that, while ordinarily I would not object to such a provision, in this case the utmost expedition is necessary, as I conceive; and I have that confidence in the President of the United States to believe that he will appoint a commission under this bill that would perform its duties faithfully—a commission that would not go out there and arrogate to itself unwarranted powers.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment reported by the committee to the last section of the bill.

Mr. INGALLS. That amendment is exactly the same as the amendment offered by the Senator from Vermont to his substitute, as I understand, and after it is adopted it will then be in order to move the adoption of the substitute offered by the Senator from Vermont. This is merely perfecting the bill as it stands.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The objection to it is, as it was pointed out before, that there can be fairly implied from it that this money is to be used for what are sometimes called diplomatic purposes; while the amendment which I had the honor to suggest in relation to the proposition of the Senator from Nebraska stated in terms that this money was to be used for assembling the Indians and taking care of them, while the matter could be done; and while I am willing to do that, as I suggested, and for that purpose, I am not willing—and a good many others I think are not—to make this a perfectly open fund for all sorts of uses. That is the difference.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the committee to the last section of the bill.

The question being put, there were on a division—ayes 15, noes 16.

Mr. ALLISON. The Senator from Vermont seems to think there is a difference between the language proposed by the committee and the language proposed by himself. I am quite willing to adopt the language of the Senator from Vermont in order to satisfy him.

Mr. BOGY. There is no difference in fact.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I thought I stood up to be counted. What is the state of business at this moment?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. On agreeing to the amendment the ayes were 15, the noes 16—no quorum voting.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I wish the Chair would count the Senate.

Mr. THURMAN. Let the yeas and nays be called; that will disclose whether there is a quorum or not.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. HOWE. I suggest to the Senator from Iowa that he change his amendment and adopt the phraseology preferred by the Senator from Vermont, and let us see what it is about which the Senate is disputing.

Mr. ALLISON. I am quite willing to do so. I can conceive no possible difference.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to changing the phraseology of this amendment to conform to the proposition of the Senator from Vermont? The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. BOGY. I think it is an improvement in language anyhow.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment as modified.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I thought there was unanimous consent some few minutes ago that the question should be taken on the substitute offered by the Senator from Vermont.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair thought so too until the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. HOWE] objected.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. The proposition of the Senator from Vermont can be adopted at the present time without objection as far as I have been able to learn. It is satisfactory both to the Committee on Indian Affairs and to the Senate, unless it be the Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. WINDOM. I want to add that there will be a second objection to it.

Mr. ALLISON. Mr. President——

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. If this debate is to continue I must call for the regular order.

Mr. ALLISON. I do not propose to debate. I only rise to say that I agree to accept the proposition of the Senator from Vermont in reference to the $50,000 to be added to the last section.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair has so stated.

Mr. ALLISON. I understand that there is no objection on the part of the Senate to that amendment, and therefore the yeas and nays are not necessary.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Therefore I do not make any objection for the time being to the adoption of the amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to dispensing with the call of the yeas and nays? The Chair hears none.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question recurs on the amendment of the Senator from Kansas [Mr. INGALLS] to the substitute of the Senator from Vermont, [Mr. EDMUNDS.]

Mr. EDMUNDS. I move to amend that by striking out the word "Congress" and inserting "the Senate." I believe that two-thirds of the Senate is better for a trade of this kind than a majority of the two Houses.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will report the amendment of the Senator from Vermont to the amendment of the Senator from Kansas.

The CHIEF CLERK. The amendment of the Senator from Kansas is:

And said commissioners shall make full report to the President at as early a day as practicable, which report, together with any agreement made with said Indian nation, shall be submitted to Congress for its approval; and any agreement, when so approved, and not before, shall be binding upon the United States and the Sioux Nation.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Vermont proposes to strike out "Congress" and insert "the Senate," as the Chair understands.

Mr. SARGENT. It necessarily defeats the bill and destroys the legislation.

Mr. EDMUNDS. What does the Senator mean by that?

Mr. SARGENT. I will explain, if the Senator will allow me.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Yes, sir.

Mr. SARGENT. I mean that in 1871, after a prolonged conference over the question and full debate in both Houses, this provision was incorporated in the statutes:

No Indian nation or tribe within the territory of the United States shall be acknowledged or recognized as an independent nation, tribe, or power, with whom the United States may contract by treaty; but no obligation of any treaty lawfully made and ratified with any such Indian nation or tribe prior to March 3, 1871, shall be hereby invalidated or impaired.

Mr. BOGY. Is that Constitution or law?

Mr. SARGENT. That is a law; and I mean to say that it was adopted after full consideration by both branches. I have no right, I suppose, to discuss what took place in the other House, though I may, as matter of history, refer to what took place three or four Congresses ago, and say that it was the decided opinion of the Congress then existing that this was an essential, necessary reform; that the system of treating as independent nations little handfuls of individuals occupying American soil had outlived its usefulness a great many years; that it had entailed upon the Indian service extravagances of every name; and the question arose upon certain treaties which were at that time presented, where there were millions billeted upon the Treasury of the United States annually for thirty years to come. In that discussion it was shown that the provisions incorporated in these so-called treaties, running back a long time, were of the most ridiculous and frivolous character; that articles were required to be furnished to the Indians under these treaties which were as little adapted to their necessities or real wants or to advance them in civilization as it would have been to send the most ridiculous or extravagant articles which the imagination could devise. It would be like sending warming-pans to the West Indies. The whole thing fell down, so many absurdities had been incorporated upon it and so awful was the expense. And in the debate in the Senate on the proposition it was said by a prominent Senator familiar with the proceedings in secret session that many of these treaties, which entailed hundreds of thousands of dollars annually of expense on the United States, and which by their terms were perpetual, were passed here with a presence of five or six Senators. It was looked upon, in the light of confessions like these coming from prominent Senators and from the fact that the system was extravagant, from the fact that it was un-American for us to confess that we were paying tribute to independent nations, that this was a necessary reform, and Congress passed the law which now is on the statute-book. And when I say that I believe this defeats the legislation, I simply say that you incorporate it on your bill unnecessarily here, because it may be brought forward as an independent proposition; and it is a clause which must necessarily arouse the attention of the other House, and in my judgment would lead to unnecessary opposition to a solution of this matter, which is too pressing to be delayed by abstract questions. That is what I meant; and I now say in reply to the Senator from Vermont that this would impede and probably destroy legislation on the subject.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The Senator from California, I am sorry to say, has ended with doing the very thing that, when he began, he said he would not do; and that is, bring forward what may be the temper of another branch of this Government to operate upon the minds of Senators and influence our action here, which is contrary to the proprieties of this body or any other, I believe; but I did not call him to order for it.

Mr. SARGENT. The Senator will find that I kept strictly within the rule. I did not allude to anything that the other House had done to influence the Senate, but spoke of the probabilities of legislation.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I know that the Senator did not allude to what had been done elsewhere; but when he ended he said he had made the objection to this amendment at last, finally, as one of his reasons, because, knowing the temper of the other House—I do not use his very words, but the substance; I cannot remember the very words—he knew that it was going to impede legislation and prevent this thing being accomplished. However sugared the phrase may be, that is swinging a flag over our heads here to act, not upon our own judgment as to what the intrinsic merit of this proposition may or may not be, but as to what view another branch of the legislative department may take of it. I always deprecate that thing being brought into either House. The Senator says that that is not within the rule. I respectfully submit that it is; but it is done, and there is no help for it now. It would be a very extraordinary thing for a Senator or a member of the other House to say in that branch, "I am opposed to this provision of this bill, however good it may be of itself, because I am well satisfied that the President of the United States will veto it." It would be a high breach of privilege to say that sort of thing. These three bodies that enter into legislation, the Senate and the House and the President, were intended to be absolutely independent of each other, and are bound to act upon their own judgment, uninfluenced by any hope or fear as to what the other branch may do. However, I am wasting time, Mr. President, in discussing a point that has gone by, although in a general sense I believe if we thought of these things oftener we should get on better.

Now, I make this proposition to amend this amendment simply because I believe it to be right. I do not want to go into any discussion of what took place when we passed that general law, or what any prominent Senator said who may or may not have known better than anybody else how much corruption there had been in treaties that had been made. We shall not avoid corruption by forms. We shall avoid corruption in quite different ways. Passing that, then the simple question is, whether in respect of facility, in respect of prompt action at last, in respect of careful consideration where there is free debate, we are more likely to have a deliberate and speedy solution of this question by a vote of this body of a proper proportion or by a vote of both bodies by simple majorities. I think this is the best way, and for these reasons. If Senators do not think so, they can vote it down. I shall not take up time about it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Vermont has moved to strike out "Congress" and insert "the Senate." The question is on that amendment to the amendment.

The question being put, a division was called for; and the ayes were 16.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That is not a majority of a quorum; I give it up and withdraw the amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question recurs on the amendment of the Senator from Kansas to the substitute of the Senator from Vermont.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question now is on the substitute as amended.

Mr. HOWE. A motion to amend the original bill is in order now.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is.

Mr. HOWE. I propose to amend the bill by striking out the description of the country which is to be surrendered and to insert another description; to strike out all from the word "lying" in the twenty-sixth line down to "number" in the thirty-fourth line, and insert in lieu thereof:

West of the one hundred and first meridian of longitude, north of the forty-fifth parallel of latitude, and south of the northern boundary of Nebraska.

Mr. ALLISON. Do you want them to relinquish all west of the one hundred and first meridian and north of the forty-fifth parallel?

Mr. HOWE. Yes, sir.

Mr. ALLISON. I am afraid that is taking too much country.

Mr. HOWE. It will still leave them country large enough for a State.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I appeal to my friend from Wisconsin to withdraw his proposition until we test the sense of the Senate on the other proposition. If that is agreed to, his proposition is not necessary, because it leaves it open. If it is not agreed to, we then can go on with the bill, and the Senator's amendment can be considered.

Mr. HOWE. An expression of the opinion of the Senate is more important, as it seems to me, in the case suggested by the Senator from Vermont than it is in the case now before the Senate. Whether you are to send a commission out there under the bill or under the amendment proposed by the Senator from Vermont, I think they ought to have an intimation from the Legislature as to how much of this territory shall be surrendered by the Indians. The bill proposes a surrender of a little piece of territory within the heart of the reservation, leaving the Sioux reservation to inclose it as with a ring, so that you cannot get to it or come from it without crossing an Indian reservation.

Mr. INGALLS. It could be approached from the west side.

Mr. HOWE. But even there you have to cross the territory which the Indians have hunting rights on, on which they are permitted to hunt. This amendment of mine proposes that they shall relinquish everything west of the one hundred and first meridian. That leaves them all the reservation they want or can possibly occupy, the best part of the reservation and that adjacent to the Missouri River.

Now, will the Senate conclude that that is advisable? You may make a treaty with them for the abandonment of what you call the Black Hills and pay them for it and it will not be five years, the ink will be scarcely dry, before the pushing and crowding settlements there will demand another concession and another treaty and another sum of money to be paid. What they do not want is this land. I do not think we want it, but a necessity of yours is to take care of the Indians, and when you agree, as you must agree in any treaty you make, to take care of them, to support them, had you not better ask them at once to give up what they do not want and what you know you will want or will have to get within a very few years?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. ALLISON. As I understand the amendment of the Senator from Wisconsin, it proposes to take that region of country north of the forty-fifth parallel.

Mr. HOWE. That is their present northern boundary.

Mr. ALLISON. But that will not include the Black Hills at all, as I understand.

Mr. HOWE. The Black Hills are all west of the one hundred and first meridian.

Mr. INGALLS. Their northern boundary is the forty-sixth parallel.

Mr. HOWE. True.

Mr. ALLISON. But the amendment includes all west of the one hundred and first meridian and north of the forty-fifth parallel. That does not include the Black Hills country, as I understand that is south of the forty-fifth parallel but west of the one hundred and first meridian.

Mr. HOWE. A part of that country is south of the forty-fifth parallel, but it is all west of the one hundred and first meridian.

Mr. INGALLS. This excludes the Black Hills country entirely. The forty-fifth parallel runs north of the North Fork of the Cheyenne and excludes the Black Hills.

Mr. HOWE. Mr. President, I have drawn several contracts in my time; I think I have acquired more information this morning in a very short time how to draw them——

Mr. INGALLS. Let me show the Senator the map; here it is.

[Submitting to Mr. HOWE a map.]

Mr. HOWE. The amendment proposes to them to relinquish all west of the one hundred and first meridian.

Mr. INGALLS. And north of the forty-fifth parallel.

Mr. HOWE. All west of that and all north of that and all south of that. [Illustrating by the map.] So that their reservation will be bounded by that meridian of longitude, by that parallel of latitude, and by that boundary line. [Illustrating.]

Mr. INGALLS. Their reservation will then include the Black Hills.

Mr. HOWE. The Black Hills being east of the one hundred and first meridian?

Mr. ALLISON. The Senator may have included the proper boundaries, but it does not strike me so.

Mr. HOWE. There is some experienced draughtsman here who certainly can frame language that will describe the Sioux reservation by the one hundred and first meridian of longitude, by the forty-fifth parallel of latitude, and by the northern boundary of Nebraska. That can be done. I know there is ingenuity enough in the Senate to accomplish that if you want to do it.

Several Senators made suggestions in an undertone.

Mr. HOWE. It is not the law that bothers me so much as the wit of the Senate. I think I can get along with either alone, but the two together are rather confusing. [Laughter.] The simple question is whether you want to confine this tribe within a reservation so small as that which I have suggested, which I think is a great deal larger than they have any use for. We need not dispute about the terms of this amendment if you do not want to include them within that reservation; but if you do want to, I do not wish you to vote the amendment down on the mere assertions that it does not do what I propose.

Mr. INGALLS. Within what limits does the Senator desire to include the reservation; all east of the one hundred and first meridian?

Mr. HOWE. All east of the one hundred and first meridian, all south of the forty-fifth parallel, and all north of Nebraska.

Mr. INGALLS. That includes the Black Hills.

Mr. HOWE. I have understood that the Black Hills were west of the one hundred and first meridian.

Mr. INGALLS. You said "east."

Mr. HOWE. I said "east," I believe.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I have been waiting for the Senator from Wisconsin to take his seat to call for the regular order. I do not like to take him off his feet.

Mr. EDMUNDS. We can vote now.

Mr. PADDOCK. I think we can promise the Senator from Maine there will be no further debate.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I see no end to it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Wisconsin has the floor.

Mr. HOWE. I shall sit down the moment any Senator tells me to, and I shall sit down at the request of the Senator from Maine as soon as of anybody else.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. Mine is nothing but a hint, and I withdraw it with pleasure.

Mr. HOWE. I should like to have the question settled as to the propriety of this amendment; that is to say, whether the amendment does what I propose it shall do, and I will venture to ask to have it reported once more.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will read the amendment.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

West of the one hundred and first meridian of longitude, north of the forty-fifth parallel of latitude, and south of the northern boundary of Nebraska.

Mr. ALLISON. Now read it in connection.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

And the sums thus to be provided shall be in consideration for the absolute relinquishment by said tribes of all their title to and interest in the following district of country: that is, the tract of country west of the one hundred and first meridian of longitude, north of the forty-fifth parallel of latitude, and south of the northern boundary of Nebraska.

Mr. HOWE. Now, does the Senator from Iowa think that includes the reservation within the limits that I have suggested?

Mr. ALLISON. As I understand the amendment, it proposes that they shall relinquish all west of the one hundred and first meridian and all north of the forty-fifth parallel. I think if the Senator would reverse that and say "all north of the north line of Nebraska and all south of the forty-fifth parallel," then he would have made a boundary which would include the Black Hills. It may be that I may be entirely confused on this question, but I think not. The Black Hills are west of the one hundred and first meridian; they are south of the forty-fifth parallel, and they are north of the northern line of Nebraska.

Mr. HOWE. I do not wish to struggle for this amendment against the disposition of the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. ALLISON. I do not want the Senator from Wisconsin to misunderstand me. I would agree to his amendment if it embraced what he means to embrace within it. So far as I am concerned, I think it is a more definite description than the one I proposed.

Mr. HOWE. If the Senator thinks it ought to be agreed to, will he change the form of it so as to meet the purpose?

Mr. ALLISON. I do not like to do that, for fear I may be mistaken.

Mr. HOWE. Evidently the Senator does not incline to the amendment, and I withdraw it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment of the Senator from Wisconsin is withdrawn. The question is on the substitute to the original bill as amended.

The substitute was agreed to.

Mr. WINDOM. When on my feet a few moments ago, I expressed doubts whether I could vote for the bill with the amendment just adopted. Upon further reflection I am unable to do so. The bill now is a re-instatement substantially of the old treaty system, out of which so many of our Indian troubles have grown. It is said that there is great necessity for haste in the passage of this bill. I do not feel any great haste about it, unless it can be made right. I would rather the bill should not pass at all than to again give the assent of the Senate to the old treaty system. I do not believe that any great good can come of it, so far as saving the white men in that Territory is concerned.

Why, sir, it is urged here that it should be passed at once because large numbers of white men who have gone into that Territory are threatened by these hostile savages, and if we do not pass this bill and send a commission out upon the plains to talk over the matter with the Indians, these white men will be massacred. Why, sir, it is not probable that such a commission could report until after the adjournment of Congress, and the treaty could not be ratified until December. If no more prompt measure than this can be devised, there is but little hope of saving the men who have gone to the Black Hills.

Now, we have a commission on the way there headed by General Crook, in which I have infinitely more confidence than in any commission that can be sent out under this bill. I believe that at least the right policy is adopted so far as the Sioux Indians are concerned.

Mr. ALLISON. Does my friend from Minnesota know that General Crook is not within four hundred miles of the Black Hills country; that his cavalry is passing by Forts Fetterman, Reno, and so on, to the Powder River, and that the farther he travels the farther he will be from the Black Hills?

Mr. WINDOM. I am aware, Mr. President that General Crook is not in the immediate vicinity of the Black Hills, and I am aware also that he is marching toward the main body of these Indians. I believe that nothing can be done so effectively to bring about peace with them as a good sound whipping, such as General Crook and his army will administer to them.

I have heard a great deal said about our violations of the Sioux treaty and of the wrongful acts of our people in going there, but I venture to say that there are two sides to that question. I am not going into it now, but I insist we are under no obligations to them, because both parties have regarded the treaty as having no binding effect. We have paid the Sioux nearly $4,000,000 within the last three years in order to prevent an open outbreak on their part. They were bound by the so-called treaty to keep the peace without these payments, but it being considered cheaper to feed than fight them, we have annually appropriated this money. They have now commenced that war so long threatened. These paupers, supported by the lavish generosity of the Government, too idle and lazy to work, have commenced their work of butchery, and I say let the question now be settled in the only way the Indians will respect.

Why, sir, to send this commission there to make a treaty with them while they are on the war-path is simply to encourage them and every other tribe in the country to make war whenever they are dissatisfied, and to assure them that the Government will forthwith make haste to treat with them and pay them a bounty for misconduct.

I am a little doubtful about expressing my sentiments toward these savages; and hence I have spoken so very guardedly on this subject. Some time ago, when this question was before the Senate, in answer to some remarks made by the honorable Senator from Massachusetts, [Mr. BOUTWELL,] which, at the time, aroused my feelings a little, with reference to a massacre that had been committeed in Minnesota several years ago, I took occasion to remark that I had but little confidence in Indian stories; for, if greater liars than the Indians existed on the face of the earth, they had not yet been discovered. For this I was taken to task by numerous gushing philanthropists all over the country. Newspapers in various quarters called me to an account. While I am on the floor, I desire to say that I think my remark was a little too sweeping. When I said they were "the greatest liars on the face of the earth," I think I should have made an exception in favor of a certain writer for the Popular Science Monthly of the city of New York, who has clearly demonstrated by a somewhat labored article that I was mistaken, and I take pleasure in making this exception today.

But, Mr. President, I do not desire to delay the Senate. I only insist that the Senate and the country will be just as sick of the treaty proposed to be made by this bill a few years hence as we are of existing treaties. I claim to be the friend of the Indian. I do not claim to be especially friendly to the Sioux Indians, but generally to the Indian race I am; and I am friendly enough to the Sioux to want to chastise them into good behavior, so that they will be better Indians hereafter. What we ought to do is, just as fast as an Indian treaty expires by its limitation or has been violated by the Indian tribes, to put an end to it. Instead of renewing the Indian treaty system, as you propose to do in the very broadest terms by this amendment, I would say to General Crook or to the executive department, chastise those Indians who have made war upon us, and then if they have anything to say we will talk with them. I would then extend our laws over the Indian tribes, and afford protection to life and property.

You talk about civilizing and Christianizing Indians, and yet you provide for them no protection of law either for life or for property. White men would degenerate into barbarism under such circumstances. It is true, as every one acquainted with Indian affairs will tell you, that in a large majority of these tribes, in all of them except the more civilized, in the Indian territories, if an Indian is disposed to be industrious, to accumulate a little food and make preparation for the winter, it is not safe in his hands, because the idle, vicious vagabonds of his tribe, finding that he has a few potatoes and a little corn laid aside for winter's use, will come down upon him and board with him until his food is exhausted.

There are no rights of property recognized among them. I think the Senator from Missouri [Mr. BOGY] will bear me out in this statement. He is much better acquainted with Indian affairs than I am. The law of retaliation is the only law that exists among them. If one Indian kills another, it is the duty of the next of kin of the man killed to kill the murderer, and of the next of kin of the man on the other side to kill him, and so there is no end to it. You cannot civilize and Christianize Indians until you extend the law of the country over them. Every treaty you make, such as is proposed to be made by this bill to-day, is a barrier thrown in the way of the future extension of the laws of the country over the Indian tribes.

This is the position of the best Indian men of the country, of such men as Bishop Whipple, of my own State, who I know is highly honored for all he has done for the Indians. I believe that no man in the country is better acquainted with their wants, and no man knows better what the true policy should be in dealing with them. It is one of the cardinal principles which Bishop Whipple lays down that you must extend your laws over them and give them the protection to life and property that white men have if you hope to civilize them and improve them. Withdraw the protection of life and property in a white community; let the vicious and the idle prey upon the industrious, and how much industry would there be in that community? Let those who would commit murder be restrained only by the law of retaliation, and how much peace would there be in the community? Until you choose to extend your laws over them and give them the protection to life and property, it is idle to talk about their civilization.

Hence I am opposed to this amendment, which proposes again to make a treaty, for aught we know for all time, which shall stand in the way forever of the extension of our laws over them for their protection and well-being.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I must call for the regular order, unless a vote can be taken at once.

Mr. ALLISON. I desire to propose one further amendment, to which I suppose there will be no objection.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. If the vote can be taken without further debate, I shall waive the call for the regular order.

Mr. ALLISON. I move to insert at the end of the bill as it now stands—

That the Secretary of War be required to furnish transportation, subsistence, and protection to the said commissioners during the discharge of their duties.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, and read the third time.

Mr. SHERMAN. Let the bill be read at length as it now stands.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the President be, and is hereby, authorized, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to appoint a commission, to consist of five persons, to visit, as soon as may be, the tribes of Sioux Indians, with a view to negotiating with them a treaty or agreement for the cession to the United States of the rights of said tribe to the country known as the Sioux reservation, Dakota, and territory adjacent, or otherwise for the preservation of peace. Each person so appointed, not being a salaried officer of the United States, shall be entitled to receive $8 a day and his actual and necessary traveling expenses while engaged as such commissioner. That the sum of $50,000, or so much thereof as shall be necessary, be, and the same is hereby, appropriated, to be expended under the direction of the President, to enable the tribes or their representatives to assemble and confer with said commissioners, and for the expenses of said commission. And said commissioners shall make full report to the President at as early a day as practicable, which report, together with any agreement made with said Indian nation, shall be submitted to Congress for its approval; and any agreement, when so approved, and not before, shall be binding upon the United States and the Sioux Nation.

SEC. 2. That the Secretary of War be required to furnish transportation, subsistence, and protection to the said commissioners during the discharge of their duties.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is, Shall the bill pass?

The question being put, a division was called for, which resulted—ayes 21, noes 7; no quorum voting.

Mr. ALLISON. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and being taken, resulted—yeas 30, nays 8; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Allison, Anthony, Bayard, Bogy, Booth, Boutwell, Bruce, Christiancy, Clayton, Cooper, Cragin, Edmunds, Ferry, Frelinghuysen, Hamlin, Hitchcock, Howe, Ingalls, Johnston, Kelly, Key, Logan, Morrill of Maine, Norwood, Paddock, Patterson, Robertson, Spencer, Stevenson, and Withers—30.

NAYS—Messrs. Cockrell, Eaton, Goldthwaite, Hamilton, McCreery, Maxey, Sherman, and Windom—8.

ABSENT—Messrs. Alcorn, Barnum, Burnside, Cameron of Pennsylvania, Cameron of Wisconsin, Caperton, Conkling, Conover, Davis, Dawes, Dennis, Dorsey, Gordon, Harvey, Jones of Florida, Jones of Nevada, Kernan, McDonald, McMillan, Merrimon, Mitchell, Morrill of Vermont, Morton, Oglesby, Randolph, Ransom, Sargent, Saulsbury, Sharon, Thurman, Wadleigh, Wallace, West, Whyte, and Wright—35.

So the bill was passed.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATION.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting, for the information of the Committee on Military Affairs, the petition of Captain J. M. Hamilton, of the Fifth United States Cavalry, praying that the date of his commission as captain be changed from June 6, 1867, to July 28, 1866; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

REPORT OF A COMMITTEE.

Mr. CLAYTON, from the Committee on Civil Service and Retrenchment, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 885) relating to civil appointments in the Executive Departments of the Government, reported it as an amendment to the bill (H. R. No. 2571) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1877, and for other purposes; and it was ordered to be printed.

REVISION OF UNITED STATES STATUTES.

Mr. BOUTWELL. With the consent of the honorable chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, I report from the Committee on the Revision of the Laws the bill (H. R. No. 3156) to perfect the revision of the Statutes of the United States, and I desire to make a statement to the Senate for the purpose of ascertaining whether the Senate is willing to pass the bill upon the recommendation of the Committee on the Revision of the Laws in view of the history which the bill has.

The committee of the Senate prepared a bill to perfect the revision of the statutes. The committee of the House of Representatives, acting independently, also prepared a bill for the revision of the statutes. Those bills were printed. There was then an examination made and a comparison instituted by which it was ascertained that in a large number of particular amendments there was an agreement of the committees. We assumed that in those particulars the committees acting independently had arrived at proper conclusions. There were also differences to the extent of more than fifty. In regard to those differences there has been a conference of a subcommittee of the two committees, a careful examination of each proposed amendment, and an agreement in all particulars so far as the contents of this bill are concerned. There is nothing in the bill which has not been examined first independently by the respective committees and the differences examined by subcommittees of the two committees acting together, and with as much care, I think I may say, as the gentlemen composing the committees could exercise. About half of these amendments are verbal or for the purpose of correcting typographical errors in the print. There is nothing in the bill I believe which affects public policy in any large sense. There is nothing in the bill, so far as is believed by the committees, except old legislation which the revisers of the statutes had failed to incorporate into the Revised Statutes.

The bill was passed in the House of Representatives upon a statement similar to that which I have made. If the Senate under the circumstances is prepared to accept the work of the committee as it stands, I ask the Senate to pass the bill; but, if it is to be read and examined, of course it must be postponed to some future time. I ask for the consideration of the bill; but, if there is objection, of course it will take its place on the Calendar.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. If its consideration is to take no time, I shall not object.

Mr. BOUTWELL. It is upon that condition that I ask for its consideration. If there is any objection to the bill, it will be placed upon the Calendar.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. Must the bill be read?

Mr. BOUTWELL. I do not ask for its reading. It is voluminous, and of course if its reading is insisted upon it must go on the Calendar.

Mr. SHERMAN. If what is now asked involves the passage of a bill without reading, I must object. I never knew such a thing to occur except in regard to the post-route bill, and then the chairman of the Post-Office Committee was fairly put under oath that it was all right.

Mr. BOUTWELL. Then I merely report the bill from the committee, and ask that it be placed on the Calendar.

Mr. SHERMAN. I would take the statement of the Senator from Massachusetts as far as I would take anybody's statement, but I think it would be a bad precedent.

Mr. BOUTWELL. Very well.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. ALLISON in the chair.) The bill will be placed upon the Calendar.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. HITCHCOCK asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 894) to provide for the sale of the Fort Kearney military reservation, in the State of Nebraska; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. SARGENT asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 895) for the relief of C. N. Felton, late assistant treasurer of the United States at San Francisco; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Claims, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. BAYARD asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 896) to extend the time during which settlements between the United States and certain railroads may be made under the provisions of the act of Congress approved February 27, 1875; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed.

LEGISLATIVE, ETC., APPROPRIATION BILL.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 2571) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1877, and for other purposes, the pending question being on the amendment of the Committee on Appropriations, which was, in line 418, after the word "dollars," to strike out the words:

Per annum, $33,611.11; and from said day to the 30th of June, 1877, both days inclusive, at the rate of $25,000 per annum, $8,135; in all $41,746.11; and on and after the 4th day of March, 1877, the salary of the President of the United States shall be $25,000 per annum.

So as to read:

For compensation of the President of the United States, $50,000.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. ALLISON.) Upon the pending amendment the yeas and nays have been ordered, and the Secretary will call the roll.

Mr. COCKRELL. On account of his serious indisposition yesterday the Senator from Iowa [Mr. WRIGHT] and I paired upon this bill upon all amendments, excepting this particular provision. If the Senator from Iowa were present, he would vote against this amendment proposed by the Senate committee and in favor of the bill as it came from the House of Representatives, and I should vote the same way. Upon all the other amendments proposed by the Committee on Appropriations he would vote "yea," and I should vote "nay."

The question being taken by yeas and nays, resulted—yeas 31, nays 11; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Allison, Anthony, Bayard, Booth, Boutwell, Christiancy, Clayton, Cooper, Cragin, Davis, Edmunds, Frelinghuysen, Hamlin, Howe, Johnston, Logan, McMillan, Mitchell, Morrill of Maine, Morrill of Vermont, Morton, Norwood, Paddock, Patterson, Ransom, Robertson, Sargent, Sherman, Spencer, Windom, and Withers—31.

NAYS—Messrs. Bogy, Cockrell, Eaton, Goldthwaite, Hitchcock, Kelly, Key, McCreery, Maxey, Stevenson, and Thurman—11.

ABSENT—Messrs. Alcorn, Barnum, Bruce, Burnside, Cameron of Pennsylvania, Cameron of Wisconsin, Caperton, Conkling, Conover, Dawes, Dennis, Dorsey, Ferry, Gordon, Hamilton, Harvey, Ingalls, Jones of Florida, Jones of Nevada, Kernan, McDonald, Merrimon, Oglesby, Randolph, Saulsbury, Sharon, Wadleigh, Wallace, West, Whyte, and Wright—31.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The Chief Clerk resumed the reading of the bill.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was in line 433, in the appropriations for the office of the President of the United States, to increase the appropriation for salary of private secretary from $3,150 to $3,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 434, to increase the appropriation for salary of assistant secretary from $2,250 to $2,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 438, to increase the total appropriation for private secretary, assistants, &c., in the office of the President of the United States from $12,000 to $13,800.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 440, to increase the appropriation "for contingent expenses of the executive office, including stationery therefor," from $2,000 to $4,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 444, in the appropriations for the Department of State, before the word "assistant," to strike out "two" and insert "three;" and in line 445, after "thousand," to strike out "one hundred and fifty" and insert "five hundred;" so as to read:

Three Assistant Secretaries of State, at $3,500 each.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 446, to increase the appropriation for salary of chief clerk in the Department of State from $2,250 to $2,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 447, before the word "clerks," to strike out the word "ten" and insert "twelve;" so as to read:

Twelve clerks of class four.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 447, before the word "clerks," to strike out the word "four" and insert "six;" so as to read:

Six clerks of class three.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 448, before the word "clerks," to strike out the word "eight" and insert "eleven;" so as to read:

Eleven clerks of class one.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 449, before the word "clerks," to strike out the word "ten" and insert "thirteen;" so as to read:

And thirteen clerks, at $900 each.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 451, after the word "dollars," to insert:

One assistant superintendent of the watch, at $900.

The amendment was agreed to.

Seventeen laborers.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 454, before the word "assistant," to strike out the word "one" and insert "two;" in line 455, to strike out "engineer" and insert "engineers;" before the word "one" to insert "at;" and after the word "dollars" insert "each;" so as to read:

Two assistant engineers, at $1,000 each.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 455, before the word "firemen," to strike out the word "four" and insert "six;" so as to read:

Six firemen, at $720 each.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 459, to increase the total appropriations for the force in the office of the Secretary of State from $78,630 to $109,320.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 461, before the word "chiefs," to strike out the word "three" and insert "six;" in line 462, before the word "hundred," to strike out "one" and insert "four;" after the word "each" to strike out "eight thousand four" and insert "sixteen thousand eight;" so as to read:

For six chiefs of Bureaus and one translator, at $2,400 each, $16,800.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 464, after the word "proof-reading," to strike out the word "two" and insert the words "and packing the laws and documents for the various legations and consulates, including boxes and transportation of the same;" so as to read:

For proof-reading and packing the laws and documents for the various legations and consulates, including boxes and transportation of the same, $3,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 467, to increase the appropriation for stationery, furniture, fixtures, and repairs from $3,000 to $5,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 468, to increase the appropriation for books and maps from $2,000 to $2,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to insert after the word "dollars," in line 469, the words "for extra clerk hire and copying, $6,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 470, to increase the total appropriation for salary of chiefs of bureaus, stationery, furniture, books and maps, copying, &c., for the Department of State, from $7,000 to $16,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 474, to strike out "one horse" and insert "horses;" in line 475, to strike out "one wagon" and insert "wagons," and before the word "thousand," to strike out "one" and insert "two;" so as to read:

For care and subsistence of horses and repairs of wagons and harness, $2,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 477, in the paragraph for contingent expenses, to increase the appropriation "for miscellaneous items not included in the foregoing" from $1,250 to $6,250.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 478, to increase the total appropriation for contingent expenses of the Department of State from $17,250 to $23,250.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 481, to increase the appropriation "for rent of stable and wagon-shed for the new State Department building" from $500 to $1,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was after line 486, to insert:

For expense of editing, printing, binding, and distributing the laws enacted by the second session of the Forty-fourth Congress, $10,000.

For expense of editing, printing, binding, and distributing the Statutes at Large of the Forty-fourth Congress, $20,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was after the word "dollars" in line 494, to strike out the following proviso:

Provided, That all letters, books, papers, and public documents sent by the Department of State to diplomatic and consular officers of the United States residing in countries with which this Government has entered into the postal treaty which took effect July 1, 1875, shall, so far as compatible with the public interests, be transmitted through the regular mails, and be prepaid with official stamps.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in lines 505 and 506, to increase the appropriation for salary of two assistant secretaries of the Treasury from $4,000 to $4,500 each.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 507, to increase the appropriation for salary of chief clerk and ex officio superintendent of the Treasury building from $2,500 to $3,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 508, after the word "one," to strike out "principal clerk" and insert "chief of divison;" and in lines 509 and 510, to strike out "2,500" and insert "3,000;" so as to read:

One chief of division of warrants, estimates, and appropriations, $3,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 510, after the word "six," to strike out "principal clerks" and insert "chiefs of division;" and in line 511, after "thousand," to strike out "five" and insert "eight;" so as to read:

Six chiefs of division, at $2,800 each.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 512, to strike out the words "four assistant clerks" and insert "seven assistant chiefs of division;" and in line 513, to strike out "one thousand eight" and insert "two thousand four;" so as to read:

Seven assistant chiefs of division, at $2,400 each.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 514, after the word "twenty," to insert the word "three;" so as to read:

Twenty-three clerks of class four.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 515, to increase the appropriation for salary of two disbursing clerks from $2,500 each to $2,800 each.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 516, to increase the appropriation for salary of stenographer to the Secretary of the Treasury from $1,800 to $2,400.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 517, before the word "clerks," to strike out "19" and insert "23;" so as to read:

Twenty-three clerks of class three.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 518, before the word "clerks," to strike out "14" and insert "18;" so as to read:

Eighteen clerks of class two.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 519, before the word "clerks," to strike out "14" and insert "16;" so as to read:

Sixteen clerks of class one.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 520, before the word "messengers," to strike out "eight" and insert "ten;" so as to read:

Ten messengers.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 520, before the word "laborers," to strike out "six" and insert "ten;" so as to read:

And ten laborers.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in lines 521 and 522, to strike out the words:

One clerk of class one to assist the chief clerk in superintending the building.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 523, to increase the appropriation for salary of one captain of the watch from $1,000 to $1,400.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 524, to increase the appropriation for salary of one engineer from $1,200 to $1,600.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 526, after the word "dollars," to insert the words:

One store-keeper, $1,400.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 527, before the word "watchmen," to strike out "40" and insert "60;" and in line 529, before the word "hundred," to strike out "1" and insert "2;" so as to read:

Sixty watchmen at $720 each, and additional to two of said watchmen acting as lieutenants of watchmen, $280 each.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 531, before the word "firemen," to strike out "six" and insert "seven;" so as to read:

Seven firemen at $720 each.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 532, before the word "char-women," to strike out "ninety" and insert "seventy-five;" so as to read:

Seventy-five char-women at $180 each.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in lines 533 and 534, to increase the total appropriation for the force in the office of the Secretary of the Treasury from $247,720 to $308,600.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 541, to increase the appropriation for salary of one chief of the consolidated division of loans and currency from $2,500 to $2,800; in line 542, to increase the appropriation for compensation of two assistant chiefs of the division from $2,100 each to $2,400 each; in line 543, to provide for twelve instead of seven "clerks of class four" in that division; in line 543, after the word "four," to insert "and additional pay to three fourth-class clerks, namely, receiving clerk of bonds and two book-keepers, $300 each;" in line 545, to provide for seven instead of five "clerks of class three;" in line 546, for five instead of three "clerks of class two;" in line 548, for seven instead of four messengers; in line 549, for eight instead of five laborers at $720 each; in line 550, for eight instead of six laborers at $2.25 per day each; and in lines 551 and 552, to increase the total appropriation for the division from $81,035.50 to $106,374.

Mr. EATON. Mr. President, I do not propose to make any serious objection to this particular item; but I desire to express my disapprobation generally to what the action of the Senate has been as well as to what I suppose it will be upon this bill. There seems to be a determination not to change in the slightest particular the former action of Congress upon the subject of the expenses of Government except in reference to a few clerks. There is to be no change in salaries, no change in the various offices, many of which, in my judgment, are entirely unnecessary, under the idea, as I understand it, that we must do this because the law says so; that there must be no change here, because the law fixes this entire amount. I attach no importance to this consideration at all; not the slightest. The people of this country demand that the expenses of the Government should be reduced. From all the examination that I can make, in my judgment there will be a deficit of from eighteen to twenty million dollars this year. I know my honorable friend, the chairman of the Finance Committee, the Senator from Ohio, [Mr. SHERMAN,] stated yesterday that it would be about $14,000,000. He errs, in my judgment.

Again, I desire to call the attention of the Senate to the fact—and the Secretary of the Treasury in his letters upholds what I am about to say—that the receipts of this Government will fall off next year still more. There is a deficit now of $18,000,000 this year. There will be a deficit next year of between thirty and forty million dollars, and nothing is to be done by the Congress of the United States to meet that deficiency. We are simply told, when one branch of the Federal Legislature proposes to cut down the expenses of the Federal Government from twenty to thirty million dollars, "You cannot do it; there is no law for it." The law itself is a protection against doing what you might do toward assisting an overtaxed people.

We must wait, says the honorable Senator from Maine, [Mr. MORRILL,] until a bill can pass that will go into the House of Representatives and there receive the action of that House, and then be sent to the other end of the Avenue to receive the action of the Executive of the United States before you can save the people a million dollars. I protest against any such doctrine as that. This very service about which so much was said was ingrafted and became a law upon the deficiency bill a year or two ago. The whole arrangement was then made. I think a Representative in Congress from my own State was at the head of the committee in the other House that made all the various changes with regard to the organization of the Treasury Department, making chiefs of bureaus, and chiefs of divisions, and new clerks, all ingrafted on a deficiency bill. We are now told that nothing can be done here when it is confessed that, to use an ordinary phrase, good strong Anglo-Saxon, we shall "run behind" $14,000,000 this year.

I do not like to do anything by which it might be said that I was playing the demagogue. I dislike it; but I desire to cut down the expenses of the Government. I know it can be done. I said yesterday that there were three or four thousand employés here, admitting then that I understated the number. There are over five thousand employés in the various Departments here, and they are not needed.

Mr. ROBERTSON. Not needed!

Mr. EATON. Not five thousand of them, I tell my honorable friend from South Carolina. Let us have no quibbling with words. I spent three weeks looking through these Departments last spring, and I undertake to say that less than four thousand clerks can do the business of this Government in the city of Washington. This honorable committee have consented to cut the number down three hundred and eighteen. I want to say here, that in my judgment, based upon information from men who have spent years—let the Senate understand me—who have spent years in the service of the Government, in the Treasury Department, it can be run with one-half the force that is employed there to-day. There would be more work and less newspaper reading, more work and less cigar-smoking, more attention to the various duties of their offices. I base my opinion on this subject upon what respectable gentlemen tell me who have been engaged for years in the service of the Government in the very Department about which I am talking. I say it is our duty to cut down the expenses in these Departments here, and to begin to-day. As my honorable friend from Ohio [Mr. THURMAN] has made a certain expression classical let me use it; "it won't do" to tell me that we have not the power, and ought not to exercise it, to reduce the expenses of the Government without going through the work of writing a bill, sending it to a committee, letting it come back and be reported upon, discussed, sent into the House and go through with all the tread-mill of legislation. I say that it is our duty, so far as it is possible, to begin now to relieve the people.

But one gentleman asks, "Will you cut down your own salary? Will you cut down the salary of the President of the United States?" Certainly; cut everything down. Whatever you do, I say to the Senate do it with a full knowledge that the deficiency in the receipts of the Government will be $30,000,000. Very intelligent gentlemen say it will be $40,000,000, but I say $30,000,000, for I desire to put a moderate estimate upon it.

I say this much because it is my duty to say it. I do not propose to object and to take up the time of the Senate upon every one of the various items wherein our committee differ from what was fixed by the House. Therefore I shall content myself with voting against the entire action of the Senate committee. To call for the yeas and nays upon every one of these various items would take a month. I do not propose to neglect other business that will come before the Senate in order to make a record in that way. I may have occasion to say a word or two in regard to the tables which have been prepared at the instance of my honorable friend from Maine. If it were some other member than the honorable Senator from Maine, I might say he was getting up a campaign document. Why might I say it? I was amused this morning when I looked at the manner in which he arranged his tables in order to show that it cost more fifteen years ago to settle an account in the Treasury Department than it does to-day; that it cost more to do a certain item of business fifteen years ago than it does to-day. I was astonished because, as a business man—as I know the honorable Senator from Maine to be—he knows as well as I that a mercantile house selling one hundred thousand dollars' worth of goods must employ a book-keeper and clerks, and if one million dollars' worth is sold a book-keeper and clerks must be employed. In other words, the cost of carrying on a business of $1,000,000 a year is not ten times as great as that of a business of $100,000 a year—not five times as great, not four times as great. There must be in the machinery of government such and such offices, and such and such assistants. Therefore there will be always a larger expense relatively attending the carrying on of a business where there are but four or ten or twenty millions of people, than where there are forty millions of people and all their ramified interests to look after.

Therefore, I say in the best of feeling to my honorable friend from Maine that if it had been some other honorable Senator I might have said he was getting up a campaign document.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. If my honorable friend will allow me, if it does not interfere with him——

Mr. EATON. Certainly.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. He attributes a supposition to the effect of the figures which did not occur to me. Certainly it was not the object of the presentation of these tables to prove what the Senator fancies might have been the object. I agree entirely with the reasoning of the Senator that an increased service, as an increased business, under certain circumstances, perhaps under ordinary circumstances, might be done to better advantage than a smaller service. The Senator will remember that I made the remark that there was an impression that the service was not only plethoric and extravagant numerically, but that the increase was unnecessarily large. It was to meet that proposition and to show that the service was really very much larger in its extent proportionately than in the comparative year, 1860, that I produced the tables. In order to show that our expenses were not immoderate compared with the work being done, an estimate was made of the work, and also a comparison with former years.

I submit to my honorable friend that if he will examine the tables he will find that the reduced percentage upon the larger service is about what he would expect, and I submit whether I had not a right, therefore, to infer that we are acting after all, although the force is a large one, strictly within the rules of a prudent economy. The comparison shows that the work performed is at a much lower rate than that of the year which it has been compared with, the year 1860.

Mr. EATON. I am not prepared to say, because I have not made such an examination as to enable me to say, that the Senator from Maine is entirely right, nor am I prepared to say he is wrong. There is, however, great force in the suggestion which has fallen from the honorable Senator.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. All I mean to claim is, that it has that tendency. I do not mean to say that it is absolutely conclusive; but the tables were introduced for that purpose, and I suggest that they have that tendency very strongly.

Mr. EATON. I have no doubt the tables were introduced for that purpose, and for a very good purpose; but what I said in regard to a campaign document, as my friend from Maine knows, I did not say for the purpose of either injuring his feelings or irritating him in the slighest degree. I simply did say that it might be made to have that look.

There is another thing which my friend has curiously placed much differently from what I would have placed it, but perhaps in a better way. He says, in his tables, the expenditures have been so much in so many years, 85 per cent. of which have been since a particular period of time. I should have put the horse before the cart, and not the cart before the horse. I think I should have made those figures entirely distinct; and I may hereafter, before we get through the discussion of this bill or bills appertaining to it, offer a table myself, whereby the exact results will be arrived at which my honorable friend from Maine has arrived at, but by a different method, and the look will be somewhat different to the reading community. But I do not mean to be drawn into a discussion of that point.

I am very willing to say this, however: I know this country has passed through a terrible civil convulsion from 1861 down to—when? I do not know when. We have not yet gotten through with it; but we will take the four years of absolute conflict. There was an immense amount of expenditure of money, and my friend from Maine suggested yesterday that we would not demand strict account of the expenditure of money or blood during a war in which were demanded the last man and the last dollar. I am not quite prepared to agree with my honorable friend in that particular. However, it is unnecessary to argue that point. I do not propose to talk about it at all. It is what has occurred since the war with which we have to deal. We must grapple with the difficulties which now beset us, and it is unnecessary to go back ten years or eleven years. Let us look at things as they are to-day. I am quite willing to say now what I was about to observe a little while ago, that I am not one of those who believe that everything that is opposed to me in politics must of necessity be wrong and that every man who writes "republican" at the end of his name must of necessity be corrupt or be a villain. I believe no such doctrine; but I propose to hold the republican party to a strict accountability for its use of power now and for what it has done within the last four years. I do not care to go back to the time of the war.

I say to my friend from Maine that I do not regard his excuse as a good one. I do not regard it as a valid one. He does. I do not. I say he ought to join with me to cut down the expenses of this Government now without waiting for the entire machinery of bills to be passed, which would take years to pass, in order to effect the object. He ought to remember, and he does remember, that very much of this very machinery of the civil service was placed there a year or two ago by the very disregard of law of which he now complains. Let us change it to-day. There are fifty-one hundred and odd employés in the various Departments of the Government in this city when thirty-five hundred can do the work, and they need work but seven hours a day to do it; while my friend in his professional business works ten and while the farmer of Maine and of Connecticut works twelve. Seven hours a day with thirty-five hundred clerks and employés—and I am liberal in my estimate—would do the entire business of the Departments here. Let gentlemen before they laugh examine this question. Let them go into the Departments and see the various men who are doing nothing but reading newspapers and smoking cigars. Let us talk about this thing as it is. There are very able men, very industrious men, men of very high character connected with the various Departments here. I know it. I have seen them at their labors; men who work not seven hours a day only, but eight, and nine, and ten, and eleven, and twelve, if it be necessary. There are such public officials. I honor them. All honor to them; but it is so to-day in the various Departments in this city, as it will be six years hence or eight years hence. No matter what party is in power, there will be men holding offices here who will not devote their time to the service of the Government, and the exception will be those gentlemen who do work. When I assert this I assert what every Senator on this floor knows has been the case in the public service for the last seventy years, here or anywhere else, under this Government or under any other government. Such is the tendency always.

What I desire is to do my duty. It is my duty to assist in cutting down the expenses of this Government. It is my duty to do it because I know it can be done and the service not be injured. It is my duty to do it because our people are taxed as no civilized people on earth have ever been taxed before. It is my duty to do it because I know that the receipts of the Government will be from fifteen to twenty million dollars less this year than they have been estimated. It is my duty to do it because I know that the receipts to the Government for the next year will be $30,000,000 less than the expenditures are this year. Therefore I say the time to do it is now. The occasion has arrived. I do not wait; as one Senator I shall not consent to wait to go through with the slow machinery of public bills in this body and in the body at the other end of the Capitol.

I suppose the Senate has determined upon its course, and therefore I can only say that I regret it. If the House of Representatives in any instance has gone further than it ought, if the committee of this body that has the bill in charge had shown a desire to meet the House, I might have been saved making the remarks that I have made this afternoon; but there is no such desire. On the other hand, I understand from my honorable friend, the chairman of the committee, that in no instance where there was a law for the expenditure of money, except with regard to three hundred and eighteen clerks when it ought to have been thirteen hundred and eighteen, does the committee propose to do anything toward reducing the expenses of the Government with regard to the various Departments in this city. Therefore it is that there is no middle ground that the committee propose to stand upon with any other member on the floor of the Senate. Hence I expect not to offer any factious opposition to the passage of the amendments, but simply to express my conviction as to what my duty is and then satisfy myself by a general vote against them all.

Mr. MORTON. Mr. President, I agree with my friend from Connecticut, that, wherever the public expenses of this Government can be reduced without material injury to the public service, it ought to be done; and, if the House of Representatives can find any such reduction, it is our duty to follow them. If such reduction can be pointed out by our friends on this side of the Chamber, it is our duty to follow them. Spasmodic reform, loudly professed reform, is generally not entitled to very much credit. Reform ought to be always steady. It is the business of every party in power to be constantly reforming the Government, for the simple reason that abuses are always growing up. I agree with my friend, therefore, that the business of reform is a work in which we should engage, not now and then, not just before a campaign, not under the pressure of high excitement; but reform is a work in which we should engage at all times; and so the reduction of expenses, wherever such reduction is possible and can be pointed out, ought to be attained.

But, Mr. President, it has been found by long experience in this and every other legislative body that the public interest is best attended to by confiding to particular committees the investigation and report upon particular subjects, making that their duty. Thereby they become better informed than any one man or one committee can in regard to the whole business of the Government.

Now, whether there can be a general reduction of salaries without injury to the public service is a question so large that no single committee of this body or of the other House will have the time during one session of Congress to make the necessary examination and make an intelligent and full report unless they can crowd one hundred hours into twenty-four. Unless they have multiplied ability for this investigation, it is impossible for any one committee to undertake it.

It is just as much as the Committee on Appropriations can do, with the time that they have and with the devotion they must give to the ordinary business of Congress, to become acquainted with the appropriations that the law requires them to make—for them to discharge their duties faithfully and successfully within the sphere of that committee. For them to undertake to examine, reform, and cut down or change the whole civil service of the Government, we all know is not within the limit of their ability, and any report that they may hastily make upon this subject or upon that in that direction is entitled to very little credit.

Now, there is one way in which these reforms can be made according to law, and my friends need not wait until the appropriation bills come. They might have begun at the very beginning of this session. If, for instance, a particular class of clerks or number of clerks could be dispensed with, that was a thing they might have gone about by a proper bill months ago. If the salaries of officers are too high, that was a thing that could have been provided for by a proper bill, referred, for example, if the officer is an embassador or a consul, to the Committee on Foreign Relations, and compel them to make an examination; if the officer is a judicial officer, refer it to the Committeee on the Judiciary, and so on; and thus we could have the whole Senate, and not a single committee, examining these reductions.

Mr. EATON. Will my friend permit me to interrupt him a moment? The result would have been precisely what it has been with other matters. They would have gone into the committees and been buried there.

Mr. MORTON. Although I have great confidence in my friend's judgment and in his knowledge of what has not taken place, yet I must say he states what he does not and cannot know. That any committee of this body or that any committee of the other body, whatever may be the political complexion of the majority, would refuse to entertain a bill where good cause is shown for reduction either in the number of employés or in the salaries, I am not prepared to credit. But I say to my friends that is the way to begin, and they need not wait until the session is far advanced. They could have begun on the first Monday in December; and every day from that time to this was properly open to that kind of business. If our friends know of any such offices or if they know of any such reductions, they know just as well as I do or anybody else how to get at them and how to make the reductions. My friend from Connecticut knows just as well as any other member of this body that the function of an appropriation bill is not to make laws for this country, but it is to appropriate money according to law already in existence.

My friend says that there are fifty-one hundred clerks in the employ of the Government, and that thirty-five hundred will do all the business and work only seven hours a day. If my friend is right about that, he ought to have made this Chamber ring with that important fact from the first day of the session until the present. I have no doubt that my friend believes it; but how he knows it I cannot possibly imagine. I do not know it, and I do not know how my friend knows it. He says, go into those Departments and you will see clerks reading newspapers and smoking cigars. They are outrageous offenses, which are entirely foreign to members of this body; we never do such things here, and never tolerate them! But men might occasionally smoke a cigar or read a newspaper, and yet do a good day's work. Occasionally going into a room you may find a clerk thus engaged, but that will hardly justify the statement that the whole number can be reduced from fifty-one hundred down to thirty-five hundred. That would be a very great reduction and a great saving if it could be made; but my friend ought to have brought the matter before in the Senate in the form of a bill or bills when we had time to discuss it, and not bring it up on an appropriation bill.

I will go with my friend as far as I ought to go. I will go with anybody for a reduction of the expenses of this Government; but I want to be pretty sure that I am right. I do not believe that cheap government is always the best. We want just enough men employed to do the work of the Government—no more and no less. Cheap men are sometimes the dearest and cheap parties are sometimes the costliest of all parties. What we want is just enough to do the work of the Government and carry it on successfully and easily. When we have that number, we do not want any more; and, if we have more, we ought to reduce it; but the question of reduction is a question open every day for discussion, and there are proper methods of showing it to this Chamber.

Mr. WINDOM. Mr. President, if almost any other Senator than the honorable Senator from Connecticut had made the speech he has made I might pay him the same good-natured compliment which he paid my honored colleague on the committee with reference to his speech yesterday on the figures that he submitted, namely, that it must have been submitted as a campaign document. But knowing that my honorable friend from Connecticut never indulges in partisan feeling, knowing that he is the last man who would think of getting up a campaign document or making a speech for campaign purposes, of course I do not assume that he had any such intention. Otherwise, though, the particular amendment that he has selected for the purpose of hanging his speech upon would have induced me to suppose that he really was intending to circulate a speech among his constituents.

He starts out with the assumption that the Committee on Appropriations have utterly refused or neglected to make any reductions, and that they have planted themselves, as I understand him, squarely upon the law; and whenever any of these economical gentlemen who are so anxious for a reduction of expenses make a proposition of that kind, they are met by the committee with the assertion that the law provides for the item, and therefore we cannot make any changes as between the expenses of this year and the last. I think that was the substance of my honorable friend's remarks. I want to show, Mr. President, how unfortunate he was in the paragraph of the bill upon which he hangs this speech, which from any other man would be a campaign document.

The paragraph last read by the Clerk makes a reduction in the expenditures as between this year and last year of $33,217 in this single division of a Department. It consolidates two Bureaus and reduces the expenditures below what they were last year 25 per cent. in money. The number of employés last year in the division to which he has referred was one hundred and twenty-seven; the Committee on Appropriations report ninety-four, a reduction of thirty-three clerks in this single paragraph, or a reduction of more than twenty-five of the clerical force of last year reported by the Committee on Appropriations that utterly refuses to attempt to meet the House of Representatives in its desire for economy, that utterly refuses, planting itself upon the law, to economize in any manner whatever! Yes, Mr. President, I think he was very unfortunate in selecting this particular paragraph, although I will say for his excuse that he could scarcely select any paragraph in this bill in which he would not be unfortunate in attempting to hang such a speech upon, as he has in this case.

The honorable Senator tells us that he has made a careful examination, and I assume that he would not make the statements he has made and send them forth broadcast to the country with the assurance which he has shown unless he had thoroughly and carefully examined these Departments and all of them, because the honorable Senator has asserted here that there are fifty-one hundred clerks and that a reduction can be made to thirty-five hundred, and that these men, working seven hours a day, can discharge all the duties that will be required of them.

In the first place, I wish to say that he has overshot his economical friends in the other House very largely in this matter. They, after what was supposed to be a most searching and most rigid economy, and as I think in a good many cases an economy that was somewhat of the Procrustean style, somewhat upon the horizontal rule rather than upon a full investigation of the needs of the service, only attempted to cut down to about forty-one hundred; but our honorable friend tells us they ought to have cut down six hundred more clerks than they did, and with that reduction of six hundred below what the House makes they would be required to work only seven hours a day to do their full duty and attend to all the business of the Government.

I want to say to my honorable friend, assuming that he is right or at least that he is confident that he is right, it is not his duty to permit this bill to go through in the way he suggests. I do not wish to challenge his opposition to it; but having so much confidence in his judgment as to this reduction, I think he ought to be able to show this committee, he ought to be able to show the Senate that he can make a reduction that will cut the clerks and employés down to thirty-five hundred. He certainly is not doing his full duty to the country if he believes honestly, as I have no doubt he does, what he tells us, that they may be cut down from fifty-one hundred to thirty-five hundred, when he proposes, without pointing out to us, without showing to us at what particular points the reduction can be made, to let the bill go through with this general challenge that from anybody else would look like a campaign document.

Now, Mr. President, the Committee on Appropriations, I know, have most carefully, industriously, and rigidly endeavored to cut down the expenses in this bill wherever it could be done without injury to the public service. They have called upon the heads of all the Departments and required them to make out upon their honor a statement of the very lowest number that could possibly discharge the duties in the several Departments; and, not satisfied with that, the committee, wherever they have had doubt on the subject, wherever they have had reason to believe that further reductions could be made, have gone personally to the Departments and to the heads of Bureaus and made their examination, and this bill is the result of that sort of inquiry. It is not a reduction made by the committee on the horizontal rule; it is not a broad statement that thirty-five hundred men will do whereas we have fifty-three hundred now; but it is a careful and thorough and conscientious examination of the Departments and Bureaus and divisions of this Government, as careful as if we were re-organizing the Government itself, for the purpose of ascertaining what is the lowest possible force that can fully and economically discharge the duties of the Government.

Then I say to my friend if he has this information that the force can be cut down to thirty-five hundred, I for one shall be exceedingly obliged to him to know in what particular instance it can be done, not that we should cut off one-third or one-fourth, but that in each particular case the reason should be given why we have the number too large. I think the committee is prepared to submit in nearly every case good reason why we cannot go below the number here fixed. I want to say that we have reduced this bill below last year's appropriations over $2,000,000. We reduced it last year very largely from the year before, and for the last five or six years the Committee on Appropriations of the Senate and of the House have studied to bring down each of these bills to the lowest possible point without interfering with the public service.

I think if my honorable friend will look at the bill as reported, if he will examine all its provisions carefully, he will see that we have conscientiously endeavored to reduce and have not planted ourselves upon any rigid rule of law that will prevent our economizing, or made the law an excuse for not economizing; and if the honorable Senator himself had been in the Committee on Appropriations and given it his personal attention, which the committee gave, I have not a particle of doubt that he would have indorsed every recommendation which the committee has made, so far as the force is concerned.

Mr. EATON. I am not the judge of the gentleman's conscience. I have nothing to do with his conscience. He will discharge his duty toward his country as he understands it. I am not his judge. I find no fault with him in regard to his discharge of duty. I find a little fault with him in regard to the absolutely unfair manner in which he has addressed the Chair on this occasion, not intentionally of course.

He said that I was unfortunate in the clause which I selected to make my remarks upon. As I confess I did not read it before I rose, if he will read it now I shall be obliged to him.

Mr. WINDOM. I merely referred to the clause on which the honorable Senator hung his speech.

Mr. EATON. I did not look at it; I do not care about it particularly. Will he be kind enough to read it?

Mr. WINDOM. I will ask the Clerk to read it.

Mr. EATON. I beg pardon. The Senator had it in his hand.

Mr. WINDOM. I will state results. Perhaps that is what the Senator wishes.

Mr. EATON. Yes, sir; that will do.

Mr. WINDOM. We have reduced the number of employés in that clause from one hundred and twenty-seven last year to ninety-four, thus making a reduction of thirty-three, or over 25 per cent., and a reduction of over 33 per cent. of the actual expenditure.

Mr. EATON. Now, Mr. President, the honorable Senator forgets, when he makes a criticism of that character upon me, that I admitted the very reduction of clerks made by his committee, three hundred and eighteen; and the reduction of clerks in that very clause on which he has built his argument is all the reduction there is in that clause. Therefore a moment's reflection will show my honorable friend how (unintentionally, of course) unfair is the argument which he makes.

Mr. WINDOM. The Senator will allow me to say that I certainly did not desire to interfere, but I was simply retorting on him in a playful way an insinuation he made against my colleague on the committee; and as he chose this particular part of the bill to make his speech upon, I said that if it had been any other Senator the speech would be regarded as a campaign document.

Mr. EATON. All that is pleasantry, and I care nothing about it; but what I object to is the suggestion that I stated what was not true, that the Senate committee had made no reductions. I stated that the honorable Senator from Maine had informed me that a reduction was made in the number of clerks, and it turns out that it is partly in the very clause upon which I hung my objection; so that I am entirely right in my criticism.

Another word. I asked my honorable friend from Maine yesterday if any reduction was made in the expenditures where the law authorized a certain expenditure, and my honorable friend, as I understood him, informed me "no," but that where they had discretion—I use his own language—they used discretion. Therefore I was entirely right when I said that the action of the committee, as I understood it, was based entirely upon what they regard as positive statute commandment—the law.

Mr. WINDOM. So far as regards salaries.

Mr. EATON. But wherever there was a chance to exercise discretion, that discretion was exercised. I do not mean to accuse the committee of doing any unfair act. I supposed that I stated accurately, as accurately as I could from the remarks which fell from the honorable Senator from Maine, that they had adhered strictly to those appropriations which the law demanded. Not once, but again and again did the ringing voice of my honorable friend ring out the word "law."

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. Will my honorable friend excuse me?

Mr. EATON. Certainly.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. He recognizes that I made a distinction. The point to which he now refers was entirely on the question of salaries; but I did take occasion to say that as to the question of the reduction of the force itself, we had considered that an open question, as we had always heretofore, and had met the House of Representatives on the question of reducing it to the lowest point consistent with our judgment.

Mr. EATON. And you said that you did not quite agree with the House of Representatives; but you exercised that discretion to the tune of three hundred and eighteen clerks.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. We hold the principle flexible as to that, as we ever have, because the service itself is variable. Salaries are not so necessarily.

Mr. EATON. I say again, sir, and it seems to excite, I will not say the risibilities of the honorable Senator from Minnesota, but he seems to think the idea is absurd that the public service of the Government in these various Departments can be carried on with thirty-five hundred clerks. When I said thirty-five hundred, I did not mean that thirty-four hundred and ninety-nine could not do it, or that it would not require thirty-five hundred and ninety-nine. I meant that there were a thousand or fifteen hundred more employés here than the Government service required. I believe it. I believe it from what I have seen in the Departments and from what I am told by intelligent and honorable men who have served years in the Departments. I have no doubt about it; and having no doubt about it, I say it, campaign or no campaign. The playful remark that I made I submit with great pleasure to have retorted upon myself. Whether it be a campaign speech or no campaign speech, let it go to the country that in the opinion not of a Senator on this floor alone but of intelligent men who have been engaged for years in the Government Departments here, the services of twelve or fifteen hundred clerks can be dispensed with, and then let the Senate say that they will not permit the two or three million dollars involved to be saved to an overtaxed people, if they choose to save it, and then fall back on the law for an excuse if an excuse is needed.

Now a word in justice to myself. I did not look at this clause of the bill. If I had done so I should have made my remarks upon the President's salary of $50,000. What I intended was to say a word or two generally with regard to this matter somewhere in the course of the examination of the bill, and then let it go, and not make any factious opposition to the action of the Committee on Appropriations, but to say what I had to say in as few words as possible without regard to what clause in the bill was pending when I made my remarks. I am therefore very frank to admit that I did not examine this clause of the bill; but if I had I would have made the remarks as soon there as anywhere, because the reduction which the Senator from Minnesota alludes to is simply a reduction which I have admitted, and that is in clerical force only.

Mr. WINDOM. I will say to the honorable Senator that I do not think he made any blunder in that, because he could have scarcely selected any paragraph in the bill, except the one in regard to the President's salary, which his speech would not have fitted as well, for there is reduction all through.

Mr. EATON. Scarcely a paragraph where there is not an employé.

Mr. WINDOM. And hence scarcely one where there is not a reduction.

Mr. EATON. And hence the Senator from Connecticut admitted in the outset that there had been a reduction of three hundred and eighteen clerks.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. I desire to present an amendment, by direction of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, to the bill under consideration, and ask to have it referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. BOGY in the chair.) The amendment will be referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

The Chief Clerk resumed the reading of the bill.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was in lines 555 and 556, to increase the appropriation for salary of Supervising Architect of the Treasury from $4,050 to $4,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in lines 556 and 557, to increase the appropriation for salary of chief clerk to the Supervising Architect from $2,250 to $2,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 558, to increase the appropriation for salary of photographer to the Supervising Architect from $2,250 to $2,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 559, to increase the appropriation for salary of one principal clerk from $2,000 to $2,400.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WINDOM. On line 560 an error was made in printing. The words should be "two clerks, at $2,000 each" instead of "$1,800" each, as the bill is printed. The amendment was omitted by mistake.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That amendment will be included, if there be no objection. The Chair hears none.

The Chief Clerk resumed the reading of the bill.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was in line 561, before the word "clerks," to strike out "three" and insert "two;" so as to read:

Three clerks of class three.

The amendment was agreed to.

Ten clerks of class two.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 573, before the work "clerks," to strike out "four" and insert "five;" so as to read:

Five clerks of class one.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 574, before the word "laborers," to strike out "two" and insert "three;" so as to read:

And three laborers.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 575, to increase the total appropriation for the force in the Office of the First Comptroller of the Treasury from $55,480 to $75,800.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. RANSOM. I see that it is late for Saturday evening; the Senate is very thin; and, if it will not interfere with the chairman of the committee, I will move an adjournment.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. As long as there are no questions about which there is any dispute to be raised, I hope we shall be allowed to go on, say for half an hour longer, at any rate.

Mr. RANSOM. I will not make the motion.

The Chief Clerk resumed the reading of the bill.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was in lines 578 and 579, in the appropriations for the Office of the Second Comptroller of the Treasury, to increase the appropriation for salary of the Second Comptroller from $4,500 to $5,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 580, to increase the appropriation for salary of the Deputy Comptroller from $2,600 to $2,800.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 580, after the word "dollars," to strike out "four principal clerks, at one thousand eight" and insert "six chiefs of division, at two thousand four;" so as to read:

Six chiefs of division, at $2,400 each.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in lines 631 and 632, to increase the total appropriation for the force in the office of the Third Auditor of the Treasury from $141,100 to $214,500.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. In line 632 "fourteen" should be stricken out and "six" inserted, so as to amend the footing. It should be $206,500 instead of $214,500.

Mr. WITHERS. That is to correct an error in addition?

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. That is it. I move the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment, as amended, was agreed to.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was in lines 634 and 635, in the appropriations for the office of the Fourth Auditor of the Treasury, to increase the appropriation for salary of the Fourth Auditor from $3,600 to $4,000.

And sections 3159 and 3160 of the Revised Statutes, and all laws and parts of laws in conflict with the provisions of the foregoing paragraphs relating to the internal-revenue service, are hereby repealed.

Mr. SHERMAN. I am directed by the Committee on Finance to oppose that amendment of the Committee on Appropriations. I have a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury and the Commissioner of Internal Revenue on the subject.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. Do you wish it passed over?

Mr. SHERMAN. Why not just take the question now?

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. It may lead to a division of the Senate.

Mr. SHERMAN. I only want the amendment of the Committee on Appropriations voted down pro forma. I have here a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury concurring entirely in the view of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue. The Commissioner's letter was read the other day.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Ohio propose an amendment?

Mr. SHERMAN. If the amendment is disagreed to, that will leave the whole text open to amendment hereafter. I ask that the question be put on the amendment from line 800 to 804 and the amendment negatived.

The Chief Clerk read the amendment proposed by the committee, which was to strike out, beginning in line 800, the following words:

And sections 3159 and 3160 of the Revised Statutes, and all laws and parts of laws in conflict with the provisions of the foregoing paragraphs relating to the internal-revenue service are hereby repealed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Committee on Appropriations to strike out these words:

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. The amendment may be rejected pro forma at any rate.
